PREFACE

In the period since the Fourth Edition of Black's Law Dictionary, most all areas of the law have undergone substantial change and development. The vocabulary of the law has shown corresponding change and growth, particularly in the areas of commercial and constitutional law, civil and criminal procedure, taxes, finance, uniform laws, and federal legislation. In addition, many common law doctrines and concepts have been replaced or modified with new statutory rights and remedies. These major developments have occasioned the need to not only greatly expand the legal words and terms included in Black's Law Dictionary, but also to reexamine all existing entries for currentness of legal usage. This thorough review has resulted in the inclusion of over 10,000 new or revised entries, as well as numerous new usage examples, in this Fifth Edition. It should also be mentioned however, that, while this new edition reflects the very latest changes and developments in law and practice, old English, European and feudal law words and terms have been retained in that such continue to form the foundation for much of our modern jurisprudence.

A considerable effort has been made in this Fifth Edition to provide more than basic definitions of legal words and terms. In those instances where traditional legal concepts and doctrines have over the years been either superseded, modified or supplemented by court decisions or legislation, such developments and changes are fully reflected. Additionally, because so many areas of law and practice are now governed by uniform or model acts and rules, such major sources of law as the Uniform Commercial Code, Restatements of the Law, and Federal Rules (Civil, Criminal, Appellate, and Evidence) are fully reflected. Similarly, the growth and importance of federal legislation and agencies, with their impact on matters that were traditionally state or local in nature, is evidenced with a considerable number of new entries covering federal acts, agencies, departments and officials. Likewise, the ever expanding importance of financial terminology has necessitated the inclusion of numerous new tax and accounting terms.

Because of the inter-relationship of so many legal words and terms, the number of internal cross-references has been greatly increased. The number of abbreviation entries has also been substantially expanded, as has the Table of Abbreviations. The following new Appendices have also been added: Constitution of the United States; Listing of Justices and Terms of U.S. Supreme Court; and U.S. Government Organizational Chart.

A major new feature in this Fifth Edition is the inclusion of pronunciation guides after all entries which pose pronunciation difficulties. A comprehensive explanation of these guides is set forth on pages VII-XIV with a shorter pronunciation Key appearing on the inside front cover.
PREFACE

New and revised words and terms for this Fifth Edition were contributed by Joseph R. Nolan, Associate Justice, Massachusetts Superior Court. The pronunciation transcription system and guides were prepared by M. J. Connolly, Associate Professor of Linguistics and Eastern Languages, Boston College.

THE PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

A majority of the Latin terms in this revised edition of Black’s Law Dictionary and also occasional English and foreign terms have been provided with pronunciation entries. The pronunciations follow a descriptive scheme and are based on actual usage rather than on any attempt to prescribe a uniform pronunciation. Where alternate pronunciations exist the philologically more ‘appropriate’ pronunciation generally receives first listing, however. The entries provide an acceptable pronunciation in a transcription system compatible with the major varieties of North American English and extendable to other pronunciations.

Despite its continuing decline as a working language of scholarship and jurisprudence, Latin still supplies a formidable stock of legal terms and phrases. The ability to use a Latin phrase correctly and pronounce it with authority and consistency belongs to the equipment of a well-rounded jurist. Those who actually study Latin today, however, will in all probability learn a pronunciation (either the reformed philological or the Italianate) at variance with the Anglo-Latin system which prevails in legal and medical spheres. Injection of the ‘newer’ school pronunciations actually serves to increase confusion and uncertainty: Where masculine plural alumni and feminine plural alumnae were once differentiated in speech as /alâmnay/ and /alâmniiy/ respectively, one widespread variant of the philological pronunciation actually reverses the opposition with masculine /alâmniiy/ and feminine /alâmnay/. The status of amicus curiae, traditionally pronounced /amîykas kyûriiyiy/, now has variants /amîykas küriyayy/ (adapted philological), /amîyks küriyêy/ (Italianate), and numerous hybrids. A parliamentarian of the old school, perhaps even well versed in Latin, adjourns a meeting sine die /sâyniy dáiyiy/ only to have a junior colleague suggest that the ‘correct’ pronunciation is /sîyney diyey/.

Strictly speaking, of course, any attempt at ‘correct’ pronunciations of foreign terms can at best be only weak approximations. The linguistic contortions of a purist attempting to weave foreign sounds and intonations into the texture of an English sentence usually strike us as pedantic or affected. Although Julius Caesar may have pronounced his name something like /jûwlîyus kýysar/ and later Romans may have called him /chêyzar/, few speakers of English have place for anything other than the Anglo-Latin /jûwl(i)yas siyzar/.

Three major systems of Latin pronunciation, outlined below, coexist in the English-speaking world. Each has its proper cultural and scholarly context. The reformed (or new, or philological, or Roman) pronunciation represents a modification to English speech habits of the reconstructed sounds of Latin as it must have been in the classical period. Philologists, classical historians, and most teachers of Latin employ this pronunciation in their professional activity. Anglo-Latin (or English) pronunciation, the form most commonly encountered in law, medicine, the natural sciences, and in general usage, reflects the centuries of sound change that English has undergone. Although it may not possess the authenticity of linguistic reconstruction, the Anglo-Latin system enjoys the authority of a persevering and distinct cultural tradition. The Italianate pronunciation is derived from the pronunciation of Later Latin and is viewed as the standard in Roman Catholicism (including canon law), in music, in art history, and in medieval studies. Thus, a school master may leave the classroom, where he has just taught his pupils Latin imperatives including venite 'come' /weniye/, go to chapel to rehearse with the choir the Venite /vənəydɪ/ (Psalm 95 in Anglican morning prayer), and then sing the text in a Latin setting as /veyniye̯tɛ̱̯e ɛksultɛ́ymus/. Each pronunciation is correct in its own context.

Attested forms in Anglo-Latin pronunciation sometimes fail to correspond in qualitative or accentual details with the forms we might expect on an etymological or systematic basis. Thus,

* bona fide* appears as /bówna fáydiy/ instead of */bóna fidiy/industry appears as /indástriy/ instead of */indástriy/

minor appears as /máynár/ instead of */mínár/, etc.

 Numerous developments in the sound system of English have tended to override the expected forms. Analogies with sibling or quasi-sibling forms often keep doublets flourishing side by side:

licet 'it is permitted' as /láysat/ (cf. license) or /lísat/ (cf. licit) debit 'one must' as /dýbat/ or /débat/ (cf. debit and credit)

capias 'thou shouldst seize' as /kéypiyás/ (cf. cape) or /képiyás/ (cf. capture)

Language traditions usually resolve such conflicts in good time, favoring 'usage' over 'correctness', and then promptly create new conflicts.
TRANSCRIPTION

The transcription system employed for these listings is derived from one of the traditional phonemic analyses of American English (Trager-Smith). The values of the symbols vary with context, i.e., their specific pronunciations depend on the nature of the surrounding sounds. The pronunciation habits of a normal speaker of English will, however, in practically all cases supply the accustomed variants for that speaker's usage if the elements presented in the key are substituted in accordance with the sample indications. This system enables the speakers of a range of dialects to use one and the same transcription and yet produce a pronunciation natural to their speech. For this reason, in addition to the considerations given above concerning the treatment of foreign terms in English, sounds foreign to English have been represented by the customary English substitutes. Thus, for example, the voiceless velar fricative of German Bach would be rendered with a simple stop /k/ and French front rounded eu with /yuω/. Readers who wish to affect the foreign sounds will find guidance in their own linguistic experience or in the appropriate grammars and dictionaries. Similarly, readers who prefer pronunciations closer to the spelling than those presented here should feel free to substitute their preferences, e.g., /t/ for intervocalic, post-tonic t, various changes for unaccented /a/, even to restoring the t in often. Finally, readers who already feel secure (or even superior) in their own renderings of words and phrases should retain these. The editors will always appreciate information on local variants and will welcome suggestions for improving the transcriptions.

The rubrics (sets of examples) under any given major symbol should always be applied in order. The earlier, more specific contexts take preference over the later, 'elsewhere' variant.

The special symbols

The reader will, of course, be aware that the transcription symbols do not necessarily have the same alphabetic values as in English. Rather, the symbols must be viewed as arbitrary signs, although in many cases their forms will aid the user in remembering and associating the key sounds and symbols.

BLACK'S DICTIONARY OF LAW
FIFTH EDITION

A

A. The first letter in the English and most other alphabets derived from the Roman or Latin alphabet, which was one of several ancient Italian alphabets derived from the Greek, which was an adaptation of the Phoenician. The first letter in the Phoenician alphabet was called aleph, meaning "ox", which is also the meaning of the first letter in the Greek alphabet, alpha. Alpha and the second letter of the Greek alphabet, beta, were combined to form "alphabet," which is largely the same in different languages.

A in Latin and law Latin. Anglo-American law abounds in Latin and French words and phrases, and the use of A in these languages is important to the English-speaking lawyer. In Latin "A" was used both as an abbreviation and as a symbol. For example "A" was an abbreviation for "Aulus," a praenomen, or the first of the usual three names of a person by which he was distinguished from others of the same family; also for "ante" in "a.d." ante diem (before the day), and for "anno" (year) in a.u.c., anno urbis conditae (the year of the building of the city) and in anno ab urbe condita (from the year of the building of the city). As a preposition, the form was either A, AB or ABS. A was used before consonants; ab was usually used before vowels, but sometimes before consonants, whereas abs was used before "c" or "t." The meaning was "from," "away from," "on the side of," "at," "after," "since," "by," "by means of," "out of," "with reference to," "in regard of," "near by," and "along." For example, A fronte in front; ab tergo, from behind; a puertitia, from youth; ab sole orbe, from or at sunrise; ab intestato, without a will, intestate. In law Latin, "a" means "by," "with," "from," "in," "of," and "on," and AB means "by," "from," and "in."
husband and wife was insufficient. State v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 139 S.W.2d 638, 640.

AAA. Agricultural Adjustment Act; American Accounting Association; American Arbitration Association.

A.A.C. Anno ante Christum, the year before Christ.

A.A.C.N. Anno ante Christum natum, the year before the birth of Christ.

AALS. Association of American Law Schools.

A aver et tener /éy évvar et ténar/. L. Fr. (L. Lat. habendum et tenendum.) To have and to hold. A aver et tener a luy et a ses heires, a tous jours,—to have and to hold to him and his heirs forever.

Ab. The eleventh month of the Jewish civil year, and the fifth of the sacred year. It answers to the moon that begins in July, and consists of thirty days. On the 24th is observed a feast in memory of the abolishment of the Sadducean law, which required sons and daughters to be equal heirs and heiresses of their parents' estates.

Ab, at the beginning of English-Saxon names of places, is generally a contraction of abbot or abbey; whereas it is inferred that those places once had an abbey there, or belonged to one elsewhere, as Abingdon in Berkshire.

A.B. Able-bodied seaman. In English law a seaman is entitled to be rated A. B. when he has served at sea three years before the mast. In the United States the term “Able Seaman” is used. For the requirements of able seaman, see 46 U.S.C.A. § 672. Also artium bacalaueres, bachelor of arts. In England, generally written B. A.

A.B.A. American Bar Association.

Ab; Abr. Abridgment.

Ab abusu ad usum non valet consequentia /éb abyúwz(y)uwy aed yúwwzam non välist konsékwensh(y)ya/. A conclusion as to the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid.

Abast /abásta/. A caster of accounts, an arithmetician.

Abaction /abákshon/. A carrying away by violence.

Ab actis /éb aktis/. Lat. An officer having charge of acta, public records, registers, journals, or minutes. An officer who entered on record the acta or proceedings of a court; a clerk of court; a notary or actuary. See “Acta.” This, and the similarly formed epithets à cancellis, à secretis, à libellis, were also anctently the titles of a chancellor (cancellarius) in the early history of that office.

Abactor /abékštar/. A stealer and driver away of cattle or beasts by herds or in great numbers at once, as distinguished from a person who steals a single animal or beast. Also called abigeus, q.v.

Ab agenda /éb eyéjéndow/. Disabled from acting; unable to act; incapacitated for business or transactions of any kind.

Abalienate /abéyliyanyet/. To transfer interest or title.

Abalienatio /abéyliyanyésh(y)ow/. In Roman law, the perfect conveyance or transfer of property from one Roman citizen to another. This term gave place to the simple alienatio, which is used in the Digest and Institutes, as well as in the feudal law, and from which the English “alienation” has been formed.

Abalienation /abéyliyanyéshyan/. In the civil law, a making over of realty, or chattels to another by due course of law.

Abamita /abémáda/. In the civil law, a great-great-grandfather’s sister (abavi soror). Called amita maxima.

Abandon. To desert, surrender, forsake, or cede. To relinquish or give up with intent of never again resuming one’s right or interest. To give up or to cease to use. To give up absolutely; to forsake entirely; to renounce utterly; to relinquish all connection with or concern in; to desert. It includes the intention, and also the external act by which it is carried into effect.

Abandonee. A party to whom a right or property is abandoned or relinquished by another. Applied to the insurers of vessels and cargoes.

Abandonment. The surrender, relinquishment, disclaimer, or cession of property or of rights. Voluntary relinquishment of all right, title, claim and possession, with the intention of not reclaiming it. State v. Bailey, 97 N.J.Sup. 396, 235 A.2d 214, 216. The giving up of a thing absolutely, without reference to any particular person or purpose, as vacating property with the intention of not returning, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer or finder. Intention to forsake or relinquish the thing is an essential element, to be proved by visible acts. The voluntary relinquishment of possession of thing by owner with intention of terminating his ownership, but without vesting it in any other person. Dober v. Ukase Inv. Co., 139 Or. 626, 10 P.2d 356, 357. The relinquishing of all title, possession, or claim, or a virtual, intentional throwing away of property.

“Abandonment” includes both the intention to abandon and the external act by which the intention is carried into effect. In determining whether one has abandoned his property or rights, the intention is the first and paramount object of inquiry, for there can be no abandonment without the intention to abandon. Roebuck v. Mecosta County Road Commission, 59 Mich.App. 128, 229 N.W.2d 343, 345. Generally, “abandonment” can arise from a single act or from a series of acts. Holly Hill Lumber Co. v. Grooms, 198 S.C. 118, 16 S.E.2d 816, 821.

Time is not an essential element of “abandonment”, although the lapse of time may be evidence of an intention to abandon, and where it is accompanied by acts manifesting such an intention, it may be considered in determining whether there has been an abandonment. Ullman ex rel. Eramo v. Payne, 127 Conn. 239, 16 A.2d 286, 287.

“Abandonment” differs from surrender in that surrender requires an agreement, and from forfeiture, in that forfeiture may be against the intention of the party alleged to have forfeited.

See also Deserion; Discharge; Release; Waiver.
Actions, in general. Failure to prosecute or bring action within statutorily prescribed period (see Statute of limitations); failure to object to or submit jury instructions (Fed.R. Civ. P. 51); failure to demand jury trial (Fed.R. Civ. P. 38).

Adverse possession. To destroy continuity of adverse claimant's possession, there must be an intent to relinquish claim of ownership as well as an act of relinquishment of possession and mere temporary absence is not sufficient. Bruch v. Benedict, 62 Wyo. 213, 165 P.2d 561.

Children. Desertion or willful forsaking. Foregoing parental duties. Wright v. Fitzgibbons, 198 Miss. 471, 21 So.2d 708, 710. See also Desertion.

Contracts. To constitute "abandonment" by conduct, action relied on must be positive, unequivocal, and inconsistent with the existence of the contract. Abandonment is a matter of intent. Lohn v. Fletcher Oil Co., 38 Cal.App.2d 26, 100 P.2d 505, 507, and implies not only nonperformance, but an intent not to perform which may be inferred from acts which necessarily point to actual abandonment.

Copyright. "Abandonment" of a copyright turns on state of mind of copyright proprietor and occurs whenever he engages in some overt action which manifests his purpose to surrender his rights in the work and to allow the public to enjoy it. Rexnord, Inc. v. Modern Handling Systems, Inc., D.C.Del., 379 F.Supp. 1190, 1199.

Easements. To establish "abandonment" of an easement created by deed, there must be some conduct on part of owner of servient estate adverse to and inconsistent with existence of easement and continuing for statutory period, or nonuser must be accompanied by unequivocal and decisive acts clearly indicating an intent on part of owner of easement to abandon use of it. Permanent cessation of use or enjoyment with no intention to resume or reclaim. Intention and completed act are both essential. A mere temporary or occasional obstruction or use of an easement by the servient owner is not an "abandonment". Gerber v. Appel, Mo.App., 164 S.W.2d 225, 226.

Ground for divorce. Abandonment as cause for divorce must be willful and intentional without intention of returning, and without consent of spouse abandoned. This ground is commonly termed "desertion" in state divorce statutes. See also Desertion.

Inventions. The giving up of rights by inventor, as where he surrenders his idea or discovery or relinquishes the intention of perfecting his invention, and so throws it open to the public, or where he negligently postpones the assertion of his claims or fails to apply for a patent, and allows the public to use his invention. Electric Storage Battery Co. v. Shimadzu, Pa., 307 U.S. 5, 613, 616, 59 S.Ct. 675, 681, 83 L.Ed. 1071.

Leases in general. To constitute an "abandonment" of leased premises, there must be an absolute relinquishment of premises by tenant consisting of act and intention.

Mineral leases. "Abandonment" consists of an actual act of relinquishment, accompanied with the intent and purpose permanently to give up a claim and right of property. A distinction exists between "abandonment" and "surrender" which is the relinquishment of a thing or a property right thereto to another, which is not an essential element of abandonment. Distinction also exists between elements of "abandonment" and those of stoppage. Neither formal surrender of oil and gas lease nor release is necessary to effectuate "abandonment"; for example, failing to start work under the lease for more than 40 years, Chapman v. Continental Oil Co., 149 Kan. 822, 89 P.2d 833, 834; breach of implied obligation to proceed with search and development of land with reasonable diligence, Wood v. Arkansas Fuel Oil Co., D.C.Ark., 40 F.Supp. 42, 45; no drilling on leased land for more than two years, and failure to pay rentals, Rehart v. Klossner, 48 Cal.App.2d 40, 119 P.2d 145, 147; drawing of casing from well with no intention of replacing it, have all been held to constitute "abandonment". But there must be an intention by lessee to relinquish leased premises, Carter Oil Co. v. Mitchell, C.C.A.Okl., 100 F.2d 945, 950, 951; or an intention not to drill, Carter Oil Co. v. Mitchell, C.C.A.Okl., 100 F.2d 945, 950, 951. And ceasing of operations is not alone sufficient. Fisher v. Dixon, 188 Okl. 7, 105 P.2d 776, 777.

Office. Abandonment of a public office is a species of resignation, but differs from resignation in that resignation is a formal relinquishment, while abandonment is a voluntary relinquishment through nonuser. It is not wholly a matter of intention, but may result from the complete abandonment of duties of such a continuance that the law will infer a relinquishment. It must be total, and under such circumstances as clearly to indicate an absolute relinquishment; and whether an officer has abandoned an office depends on his overt acts rather than his declared intention. It implies nonuser, but nonuser does not, of itself constitute abandonment. The failure to perform the duties pertaining to the office must be with actual or imputed intention on the part of the officer to abandon and relinquish the office. The intention may be inferred from the acts and conduct of the party, and is a question of fact. Abandonment may result from an acquiescence by the officer in his wrongful removal or discharge, but, as in other cases of abandonment, the question of intention is involved. McCall v. Cull, 51 Ariz. 237, 75 P.2d 696, 698.

Patents. There may be an abandonment of a patent, where the inventor dedicates it to the public use; and this may be shown by his failure to sue infringers, sell licenses, or otherwise make efforts to realize a personal advantage from his patent. Sandlin v. Johnson, C.C.A.Mo., 141 F.2d 660.

Property. "Abandoned property" in a legal sense is that to which owner has relinquished all right, title, claim, and possession, with intention of not reclaiming it or resuming its ownership, possession or enjoyment. Jackson v. Steinberg, 186 Or. 129, 200 P.2d 376, 377, 378. There must be concurrence of act and intent, that is, the act of leaving the premises or property vacant, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer, and the intention of not returning. Relinquishment of all title, possession, or claim; a virtual intentional throwing away of property. Ex parte Szczyygiel, Sup., 51 N.Y.S.2d 699, 702.

Rights in general. The relinquishment of a right. It implies some act of relinquishment done by the owner without regard to any future possession by himself, or by any other person, but with an intention to abandon. See Waver.

Trade-marks and trade names. There must be not only nonuser, but also an intent to abandon and to give up use of trade-marks permanently. Neva-Wet Corporation of America v. Never Wet Processing Corporation, 277 N.Y. 163, 13 N.E.2d 755, 761.

Water rights. "Abandonment," as applied to water rights may be defined as an intentional relinquishment of a known right. It is not based on a time element, and mere nonuser will not establish "abandonment" for any less time, at least, than statutory period, controlling element in "abandonment" being matter of intent. Hammond v. Johnson, 94 Utah 20, 66 P.2d 894, 899. To desert or forsake right. The intent and an actual relinquishment must concur. Concurrence of relinquishment of possession, and intent not to resume it for beneficial use. Neither alone is sufficient. Osnes Livestock Co. v. Warren, 103 Mont. 284, 62 P.2d 206, 211.

Abandum, abandum, or abandonum /abändum(um)/. Anything sequestered, proscribed, or abandoned. Abandon, i.e., in bannum res missa, a thing banned or denounced as forfeited or lost, whence to abandon, desert, or forsake, as lost and gone.

Ab ante /əb ˈæntli/. Lat. Before; in advance. Thus, a legislature cannot agree ab ante to any modification or amendment to a law which a third person may make.

Ab antecedente /əb ˈæntsidənti/. Lat. Beforehand; in advance.

Ab antiquo /əb ˈæntʃkwɔ/. From old times; from ancient time; of old; of an ancient date. 3 Bl.Comm. 95.

Abarnare /əˈbɑrneri/. Lat. To discover and disclose to a magistrate a secret crime.

Ab assuetus non fit injuria /əb əswiˈdəs nɔn fɪt inˈdʒɪrɪə/. From things to which one is accustomed (or in which there has been long acquiescence) no legal injury or wrong arises. If a person neglects to insist on his right, he is deemed to have abandoned it.

Abatable nuisance. A nuisance which is practically susceptible of being suppressed, or extinguished, or rendered harmless, and whose continued existence is not authorized under the law. Fort Worth & Denver City Ry. Co. v. Muncy, Tex.Civ.App., 31 S.W.2d 491, 494.

Abatamentum /əbˈɛdəməntəm/. L. Lat. In old English law, an abatement of freehold; an entry upon lands by way of interposition between the death of the ancestor and the entry of the heir.

Abstare /əˈbɛtəri/. To abate.

Abate. To throw down, to beat down, destroy, quash. To do away with or nullify or lessen or diminish. In re Stevens’ Estate, Cal.App., 150 P.2d 530, 534. To bring entirely down or demolish, to put an end to, to do away with, to nullify, to make void, Sparks Milling Co. v. Powell, 283 Ky. 669, 143 S.W.2d 75, 77. See also Abatement; Abatement of action.

Abatement. A reduction, a decrease, or a diminution. The suspension or cessation, in whole or in part, of a continuing charge, such as rent.

Legacies. A proportional diminution or reduction of the pecuniary legacies, when the funds or assets out of which such legacies are payable are not sufficient to pay them in full. Model Probate Code, § 184. See Ademption, infra, as to specific legacies and devises.

Nuisance. See Nuisance.

Plea in abatement. See Plea.

Taxes. Diminution or decrease in the amount of tax imposed. Abatement of taxes relieves property of its share of the burdens of taxation after the assessment has been made and the tax levied. Sheppard v. Hidalgo County, 126 Tex. 550, 83 S.W.2d 649, 657.

Abatement of action. Abatement is an entire overthrow or destruction of the suit so that it is quashed and ended. Carver v. State, 217 Tenn. 482, 398 S.W.2d 719. By local court rule in certain U.S. district courts a civil action may be abated (dismissed) if service of process is not made within a specified period after filing of the complaint.

Pleas in abatement have been abolished by Fed.R. Civil P. 7(c); such being replaced by a motion to dismiss under Rule 41. In certain states however this plea still exists to attack jurisdiction, or service of process, or to allege that a prior action between the same parties concerning the same subject matter is pending.

Abator /əˈbɛyədər/. In real property law, a stranger who, having no right of entry, contrives to get possession of an estate of freehold, to the prejudice of the heir or devisee, before the latter can enter, after the ancestor’s death. In the law of torts, one who abates, prostrates, or destroys a nuisance.

Abatuda /əˈbɑtjuːdə/. Anything diminished. Moneta abatuda is money clipped or diminished in value.

Abavia /əˈbɛviə/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandmother.

Abavita /əˈbɛmədə/. A great-great-grandfather’s sister. This is a misspelling for abamita (q.v.).

Abavunculus /əˌbɛvəŋˈkyləsə/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandmother’s brother (avavioe frater). Called avunculus maximus.

Abavus /əˈbævəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandfather.

Abbacinare /əˌbɛbəˈniːri/. To blind by placing a burning basin or red-hot irons before the eyes. A form of punishment in the Middle Ages. Also spelled “abacnare.” The modern Italian is spelled with two b’s, and means to blind. Abbacination. Blinding by placing burning basin or red-hot irons before the eyes.
Abbay /əˈbɔsɪ/ · The government of a religious house, and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot, as a bishopric is to a bishop. The rights and privileges of an abbot.

Abbey · A monastery or nunnery for the use of an association of religious persons, having an abbot or abbess to preside over them.

Abbot · A prelate in the 13th century who had had an immemorial right to sit in the national assembly.

Abbot, abbat · The spiritual superior or governor of an abbey. Feminine, Abbess.

Abbreviatio plactorum /əˈbriːvɪəˈtiːəˈplækˈtɒrəm/ · An abstract of ancient judicial records, prior to the Year Books.

Abbreviators /əˈbriːvɪəˈtiːəˈdɑːrə/ · In ecclesiastical law, officers whose duty it is to assist in drawing up the Pope’s briefs, and reducing petitions into proper form to be converted into papal bulls.

Abbroachment, or abbroachment /əˈbɾɔmətʃmɑːnt/ · The act of forestalling a market, by buying up at wholesale the merchandise intended to be sold there, for the purpose of selling it at retail. See Forestalling the market.

Abuttals · See Abuttals.

ABC test · Unemployment compensation law exclusion tests providing that employer is not covered if individually he employs are free from his control, the services are performed outside employer’s places of business, and employees are customarily engaged in independently established trades or professions are known as the “ABC tests.” Employment Sec. Commission v. Wilson, Alaska, 461 P.2d 425, 427.

ABC transaction · In mining and oil drilling operations, a transfer by which A, the operator, conveys the working interest to B for cash consideration, reserving a production payment usually larger than the cash consideration paid by B. Later, A sells the reserved production payment to C for cash. The tax advantages of this type of transaction were eliminated by the Tax Reform Act of 1969.

Abdication /əˈbədəkəˈʃən/ · Renunciation of the privileges and prerogatives of an office. The act of a sovereign in renouncing and relinquishing his government or throne, so that either the throne is left entirely vacant, or is filled by a successor appointed or elected beforehand. Also, where a magistrate or person in office voluntarily renounces or gives it up before the time of service has expired. It differs from resignation, in that resignation is made by one who has received his office from another and restores it into his hands, as an inferior into the hands of a superior; abdication is the relinquishment of an office which has devolved by act of law. It is said to be a renunciation, quitting, and relinquishing, so as to have nothing further to do with a thing, or the doing of such actions as are inconsistent with the holding of it.

Abditorium /əˈbədətɔːriˈəm/ · An abditory or hiding place, to hide and preserve goods, plate or money.

Abduction · The offense of taking away a wife, child, or ward, by fraud and persuasion, or open violence. Model Penal Code, § 212.4.

To take away surreptitiously by force in kidnapping. The unlawful taking or detention of any female for purposes of marriage, concubinage, or prostitution. In many states this offense is created by statute and in most cases applies to females under a given age. By statute in some states, abduction includes the withdrawal of a husband from his wife, as where another woman alienates his affection and entices him away and causes him to abandon his wife.

See also Allentation of affections; Kidnapping.

Abearance /əˈbɛərəns/ · Behavior; as a recognition to be of good abearance signifies to be of good behavior.

Ab epistolis /əb iˈpɪstələs/ · Lat. An officer having charge of the correspondence (epistolæ) of his superior or sovereign; a secretary.

Aberemuder /əˈbɛrəmədər/ · (From Sax. abere, apparent, notorious; and mord, murder.) Plain or downright murder, as distinguished from the less heinous crime of manslaughter, or chance medley.

Abesse /əˈbɛsɪ/ · Lat. In the civil law, to be absent; to be away from a place. Said of a person who was extra continentia urbis, (beyond the suburbs of the city.)

Abet · To encourage, incite, or set another on to commit a crime. This word is usually applied to aiding the commission of a crime. To abet another to commit a murder is to command, procure, counsel, encourage, induce, or assist. Short v. Commonwealth, 240 Ky. 477, 42 S.W.2d 696, 697; Wyatt v. U. S., 388 F.2d 395, 400 (10 Cir.). To facilitate the commission of a crime, promote its accomplishment, or help in advancing or bringing it about. State v. Lord, 42 N.M. 638, 84 P.2d 80, 86. It includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator and counsel and encouragement in the crime. People v. Terman, 4 Cal.App.2d 345, 40 P.2d 915, 916.

A French word combined of two words “a” and “beter”—to bait or excite an animal.

See also Abettor; Accomplice; Aid and abet.

Abetment · Act of encouraging, inciting or aiding another.

Abettor /əˈbɛtər/ · L. Lat. In old English law, an abettor. See Abettor.

Abettor /əˈbɛdər/ · An instigator, or setter on; one who promotes or procures a crime to be committed. Handy v. State, 326 A.2d 189. One who commands, advises, instigates, or encourages another to commit a crime. A person who, being present in the neighborhood, incites another to commit a crime, and thus becomes a principal. To be an “abettor” accused must have instigated or advised commission of crime or been present for purpose of assisting in its commission; he must share criminal intent with which crime was committed. People v. Francis, 71 C.2d 66, 75 Cal.Rptr. 199, 203, 450 P.2d 591.

Ab extra /əb ˈɛkstrə/ · Lat. Extra, beyond, without. From without.
Abeyance /əˈbɪeɪəns/ - Lapse in succession during which there is no person in whom title is vested. In the law of estates, the condition of a freehold when there is no person in being in whom it is vested. In such cases the freehold has been said to be in nubibus (in the clouds), in pendenti (in suspension); and in granum legis (in the bosom of the law). Where there is a tenant of the freehold, the remainder or reversion in fee may exist for a time without any particular owner, in which case it is said to be in abeyance. A condition of being undetermined or in state of suspension or inactivity. Sales to third parties, of property acquired by county at tax sale, being held in "abeyance," means that certain rights or conditions are in expectancy. Willard v. Ward County, 72 N.D. 291, 6 N.W.2d 566, 568.

Abioticus, or avlaticus /aˌvɪliˈɛdəks/. L. Lat. In feudal law, a son's son; a grandson in the male line.

Abide. To accept the consequences of; to rest satisfied with; to wait for. With reference to an order, judgment, or decree of a court, to perform, to execute.

Abide by. To adhere to, to obey, to accept the consequences of. Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Ohio, 36 F.2d 682, 683.

Abigeatres /əˌbiːdʒəˈtrɪz/. See Abigieus.

Abigeatus /əˌbiːdʒəˈjʊəs/. Lat. In the civil law, the offense of stealing or driving away cattle. See Abigeus.

Abigel /əˌbiːdʒəl/. See Abigeus.

Abiger /əˌbiːdʒər/. Lat. In the civil law, to drive away. Applied to those who drove away animals with the intention of stealing them. Applied, also, formerly to the similar offense of cattle stealing on the borders between England and Scotland. See Abigeus.

To drive out; to expel by force; to produce abortion.

Abigeus /əˌbiːdʒəəs/. Lat. (Pl., abigei, or more rarely abigeatores.) In the civil law, a stealer of cattle; one who drove or drew away (subtraxit) cattle from their pastures, as horses or oxen from the herds, and made booty of them, and who followed this as a business or trade. The term was applied also to those who drove away the smaller animals, as swine, sheep, and goats. In the latter case, it depended on the number taken, whether the offender was fur (a common thief) or abigeus. But the taking of a single horse or ox seems to have constituted the crime of abigeatus. And those who frequently did this were clearly abigel, though they took but an animal or two at a time. 4 Bl.Comm. 239.

Ability. Capacity to perform an act or service; e.g. to support spouse and family. Financial ability is usually construed as referring to pecuniary ability. See also Capacity; Incapacity.

Ab inconvenient /əˌbɪnˈkveɪnənt/. From hardship, or inconvenience. An argument founded upon the hardship of the case, and the inconvenience or disastrous consequences to which a different course of reasoning would lead.

Ab initio /əˌbɪnˈʃɪoʊ/ow/. Lat. From the beginning; from the first act; from the inception. A party may be said to be a trespasser, an estate said to be good, an agreement or deed said to be void, or a marriage or act said to be unlawful, ab initio. Contrasted in this sense with ex post facto, or with postea.

Ab initio mundi /əˌbɪnˈʃɪoʊˌmʊndi ˈmʌndi ˈmʌndi/ow māndai/. Lat. From the beginning of the world. Ab initio mundi usque ad hodiernum diem, from the beginning of the world to this day.

Ab intestat. Intestate.

Ab intestato /əˌbɪnˈɛstətəʊ/ow/. In the civil law, from an intestate; from the intestate; in case of intestacy. Hereditas ab intestato, an inheritance derived from an intestate. Successio ab intestato, succession to an intestate, or in case of intestacy. This answers to the descent or inheritance of real estate at common law. 2 Bl.Comm. 490, 516. "Heir ab intestato." The phrase "ab intestato" is generally used as the opposite or alternative of ex testamento, (from, by, or under a will.) Vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato [hereditatis] pertinent,—inheritances are derived either from a will or from an intestate (one who dies without a will).

Ab invito /əˌbɪvɪˈdɔʊ/ow/. Unwillingly. Against one's will. By or from an unwilling party. A transfer ab invito is a compulsory transfer. See In invito; Invito.

Ab itato /əˌbɪrˈɛtəʊ/ow/. Lat. By one who is angry. A devise or gift made by a man adversely to the interest of his heirs, on account of anger or hatred against them, is said to be made ab itato. A suit to set aside such a will is called an action ab itato.

Abishering, or abinersing /əˌbɪʃər(ɪ)ŋ/. Quit of amercements. It originally signified a forfeiture or amercement, and is more properly called mishering, mishersing, or miskering, according to certain writers. It has since been termed a liberty of freedom, because, wherever this word is used in a grant, the persons to whom the grant is made have the forfeitures and amercements of all others, and are themselves free from the control of any within their fee.

Abjudicatio /əˌbɪdʒuˈdɪkətʃoʊ/iyow/. In old English law, the depriving of a thing by the judgment of a court; a putting out of court; the same as forisjudicatio, for judgment, forjudger. A removal from court. Used to indicate an adverse decision in a writ of right: Thus, the land is said to be abjudged from one of the parties and his heirs.

Abjuration /əˌbɪˈdʒʊərəʃən/. A renunciation or abandonment by or upon oath. The renunciation under oath of one's citizenship or some other right or privilege. See also Abjure.

Abjuration of the realm /əˌbɪˈdʒʊərəʃən əv ə ˈreɪl/ow/. In ancient English law, a renunciation of one's country, a species of self-imposed banishment, under an oath never to return to the kingdom unless by permission.
Abjure. To renounce, or abandon, by or upon oath. See Abjuration.

Able. See Ability.

Able-bodied. As used in a statute relating to service in the militia, this term does not imply an absolute freedom from all physical ailments. It imports an absence of those palpable and visible defects which evidently incapacitate the person from performing the ordinary duties of a soldier.

Ablegati /əˈblɛɡədɛɪ/ . Papal ambassadors of the second rank, who are sent to a country where there is not a nuncio, with a less extensive commission than that of a nuncio. This title is equivalent to envoy.

Able to earn. The phrase in Workers' Compensation Act in reference to wages does not mean the maximum sum earned in any one pay period, but a fair average of the weekly or monthly wages which an employee is able to earn covering a sufficient period of time to determine his earning capacity. Amount one is capable of earning if employed. Ferrara v. Clifton Wright Hat Co., 125 Conn. 140, 3 A.2d 842, 843.

Ability to obtain and hold employment means that the person referred to is either able or unable to perform the usual duties of whatever employment may be under consideration, in the manner that such duties are customarily performed by the average person engaged in such employment. Kinyon v. Kinyon, 230 Mo.App. 623, 71 S.W.2d 78, 82.

Able to purchase. "Ability" in sales contracts, dependent on ability to purchase, usually means financial ability. Anderson v. Craig, 111 Mont. 182, 108 P.2d 205, 206; House v. Hornburg, Sup., 39 N.Y.S.2d 20, 22. Purchaser must have financial ability and legal capacity to acquire land. Campbell v. Hood, Tex. Com.App., 35 S.W.2d 93, 95. Purchaser is able to purchase, as respects broker's right to commission, if he is financially able to command the necessary funds to close the deal within the time required. Hersh v. Garau, 218 Cal. 460, 23 P.2d 1022. See Financially able.

Ablocatio /əˈblɔːkətʃiəˈʃiəʊ/ . A letting out to hire, or leasing for money. Sometimes used in the English form "ablocation."

Abmatertera /əˈmætrɛtəˈrɛə/ . Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-grandmother's sister (abavice soror). Called materterta maxima.

Abnepos /əˈbɛnɛpɔs/ . Lat. A great-great-grandson. The grandson of a grandson or granddaughter.

Abnephis /əˈbɛnɛptʃɪs/ . Lat. A great-great-granddaughter. The granddaughter of a grandson or granddaughter.

Ab olim /əˈbɒlɪm/ . Of old.

Abolish. To do away with wholly; to annul; to repeal; to rescind; to abrogate; to dispense with. Put an end to. Stretch v. Murphy, 166 Or. 439, 112 P.2d 1018, 1021. Imports absolute destruction having its root in the Latin word "abolerere," meaning to destroy utterly. Applies particularly to things of a permanent nature, such as institutions, usages, customs, as the abolition of slavery.

Abolition. The destruction, annihilation, abrogation, or extinguishment of anything. See Abolish.

In the Civil, French and German law, abolition is used nearly synonymously with pardon, remission, grace.

A bon droit /eɪˈbɒn droyt/ . With good reason; justly; rightfully.

Abortee /əˈbɔːrɪti/ . The woman upon whom an abortion is performed.

 Abortifacient /əˈbɔːrɪfəˈʃiənt/ . Drug or medicine capable of, or used for, producing abortion.

Abortion. The knowing destruction of the life of an unborn child or the intentional expulsion or removal of an unborn child from the womb other than for the principal purpose of producing a live birth or removing a dead fetus. However, prior to approximately the end of the first trimester of pregnancy the attending physician in consultation with his patient is free to determine, without regulation by state, that in his medical judgment the patient's pregnancy should be terminated, and if that decision is reached such judgment may be effectuated by an abortion without interference by the state. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147. See also Viability; Viable child.

Abortionist. One who criminally produces abortions, or one who follows business or practices of crime of producing abortions.

Abortus /əˈbɔːrˈt̪ʊs/ . Lat. The fruit of an abortion; the child born before its time, incapable of life.

About. Near in time, quantity, number, quality, or degree. Substantially, approximately, almost, or nearly. Odom v. Langston, 351 Mo. 609, 173 S.W.2d 826, 829.

When used with reference to time, the term is of flexible significance, varying with the circumstances and the connection in which it is employed. But its use does not necessarily render time immaterial, nor make a contract one terminable at will. In a charter party, "about to sail" means just ready to sail. With relation to quantity, the term suggests only an estimate of probable amount. Its import is that the actual quantity is a near approximation to that mentioned, and it has the effect of providing against accidental variations. Norrington v. Wright, 115 U.S. 188, 6 S.Ct. 12, 29 L.Ed. 366. It may be given practically the same effect as the phrase more or less. Synonymous with "on" or "upon," as in offense of carrying concealed weapons. Near by, close at hand, convenient of access. Brown v. U.S., 30 F.2d 474, 475, 58 App.D.C. 311. As to number, it merely implies an estimate of a particular lot or class and not a warranty. In connection with distance or locality, the term is of relative significance, varying with the circumstances.

Aboutisement /əbəw'tɪsəm/ Fr. An abuttal or abutment.

Above. Higher; superior. As, court above; plaintiff or defendant above. Above all incumbrances means in excess thereof. Principal, as distinguished from what is auxiliary or instrumental.

Abpatrius /əb'pətrəwəs/ Lat. A great-great-uncle; or a great-great-grandfather's brother (ābavi frater). It sometimes means uncle, and sometimes great-uncle.

Abridge. To reduce or contract; usually spoken of written language. See Abridgment.

Copyright law. To epitomize; to reduce; to contract. It implies preserving the substance, the essence, of a work, in language suited to such a purpose. In making extracts there is no condensation of the author's language, and hence no abridgment. To abridge requires the exercise of the mind; it is not copying. Between a compilation and an abridgment there is a clear distinction. A compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of one author.

Abridgment. Condensation; contraction. An epitome or compendium of another and larger work, wherein the principal ideas of the larger work are summarily contained. Abridgments of the law are brief digests of the law, arranged alphabetically. In this context, the term "digest" (q.v.) has generally supplanted that of "abridgment." See also Abstract; Headnote; Syllabus.

Abridgment of damages. The right of the court to reduce the damages in certain cases. See Remittitur.

Abroad. In English chancery law, beyond the seas.

Abrogate /əbrəgeyt/. To annul, cancel, repeal, or destroy. To annul or repeal an order or rule issued by a subordinate authority; to repeal a former law by legislative act, or by usage.

Abrogation /əbrəgə'ʃən/. The destruction orannulling of a former law, by an act of the legislative power, by constitutional authority, or by usage. It stands opposed to rotation; and is distinguished from derogation, which implies the taking away only some part of a law; from subrogation, which denotes the substitution of a clause; from dispensation, which only sets it aside in a particular instance; and from antiquation, which is the refusing to pass a law. Implied abrogation takes place when the new law contains provisions which are positively contrary to former laws, without expressly abrogating such laws; and also when the order of things for which the law has been made no longer exists. Ex parte Lum Poy, D.C.Wash., 23 F.2d 690.

For "Express abrogation," see that title. See also Annul; Repeal.

Abscond /əbsˈkɒnd/. To go in a clandestine manner out of the jurisdiction of the courts, or to lie concealed, in order to avoid their process. To hide, conceal, or absent oneself clandestinely, with the intent to avoid legal process. Postponing limitations. Keck v. Pickens, 207 Ark. 757, 182 S.W.2d 873, 875. Fleeing from arresting or prosecuting officers of the state. See Fugitive.

Absconding debtor. One who absconds from his creditors. An absconding debtor is one who lives without the state, or who has intentionally concealed himself from his creditors, or withdrawn himself from the reach of their suits, with intent to frustrate their just demands. Such act was formerly an "Act of bankruptcy" (q.v.). Thus, if a person departs from his usual residence, or remains absent therefrom, or conceals himself in his house, so that he cannot be served with process, with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his creditors, he is an absconding debtor; but if he departs from the state or from his usual abode, with the intention of again returning, and without any fraudulent design, he has not absconded, nor absconded himself, within the intentment of the law. Doughnut Corporation of America v. Tsakrides, 121 N.J.L. 136, 1 A.2d 467, 469.

Absence. The state of being absent, removed, or away from one's domicile, or usual place of residence. Not present at particular time; opposite of appearance at a specified time.

Absent. Being away from; at a distance from; not in company with.

Absentee /əbˈsentɪ/. Lat. Being absent; often used in the old reports of one of the judges not present at the hearing of a cause.

Absentee reo /əbˈsentɪ reɪˈoʊ/. The defendant being absent.

Absentee. One who is absent from his usual place of residence or domicile.

Absentee landlord. Lessor of real property (normally the owner) who does not live on the premises.

Absentee voting. Participation (usually by mail) in elections by qualified voters who, because of serious illness, military service, or absence from home for business or other reasons, are unable to appear at the polls in person on election day.

Absentem accipere debemus eum qui non est eo loci in quo petitur /əbˈsentəm aksɪˈpɪrɪ琥 dəˈbɪməs ɪˈmæn kwɔːn ən ɪˈlɔw lowˈswæ in kwɔːˈwɛdɛr/. We ought to consider him absent who is not in the place where he is demanded (or sought).
Absentia ejus qui replebice causa abest, neque ei neque alli damnosa esse debet /ābsēnsh(y)ā yīyā kwāy rīyāyāpbāy lökā abēst, niykwiw iyay niykwiw əliyay demnōwās ēśī dīyāt/. The absence of him who is away in behalf of the republic (on business of the state) ought not to be prejudicial either to him or to another.

Absolve, assoll, assolle. To pardon; to deliver from excommunication.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget /ābsal(y)ūwda santēnsh(y)yə ekspozatōrī non īndajet/. An absolute sentence or proposition (one that is plain without any scruple, or absolute without any saving) needs not an expositor.

Absolute. Complete; perfect; that is, if a condition or incumbrance, as an absolute bond (simplex obligatio) in distinction from a conditional bond. Unconditional; complete and perfect in itself; without relation to or dependence on other things or persons.

As to absolute Conveyance; Covenant; Delivery; Divorce; Estate; Gift; Guaranty; Interest; Legacy; Nuisance; Nullity; Obligation; Property; Rights; Rule; Sale; Title, see those titles.

Absolute deed. A document of conveyance without restriction or defeasance; generally used in contradistinction to mortgage deed.

Absolute law. The true and proper law of nature, immutable in the abstract or in principle, in theory, but not in application; for very often the object, the reason, situation, and other circumstances, may vary its exercise and obligation. See also Natural law.

Absolutely. Completely, wholly, without qualification; without reference or relation to, or dependence upon, any other person, thing, or event. Thus, absolutely void means utterly void. Absolutely necessary may be used to make the idea of necessity more emphatic. Independently or unconditionally, wholly or positively. Collins v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 178 Va. 501, 17 S.E.2d 413, 418.

“Absolutely void” is that which the law or nature of things forbids to be enforced at all, and that is “relatively void” which the law condemns as a wrong to individuals and refuses to enforce against them. Kyle v. Chaves, 42 N.M. 21, 74 P.2d 1030; Scudder v. Hart, 45 N.M. 76, 110 P.2d 536, 541.

Absolution. In Canon Law, a juridical act whereby the clergy declare that the sins of such as are penitent are remitted. Among Protestants it is chiefly used for a sentence by which a person who stands excommunicated is released or freed from that punishment.

In the Civil Law, a sentence whereby a party accused is declared innocent of the crime laid to his charge.

In French Law, the dismissal of an accusation.

Absolutism /ābsal(y)ūwtilizm/. In politics, a system of government in which public power is vested in some person or persons, unchecked and uncontrolled by any law, institution, constitutional device, or coordinate body. Currently refers to any government which is run by a dictator whose power is without restriction and without any checks or balances.

Absolve. To set free, or release, as from obligation, debt, or responsibility. State ex rel. St. Louis Car Co. v. Hughes, 348 Mo. 125, 152 S.W.2d 193, 194. See also Amnest; Pardon.

Absorption /ābzhōrpshan/. Term used in collective bargaining agreements to provide seniority for union members if employer’s business is merged with another. Humphrey v. Moore, Ky., 375 U.S. 335, 84 S.Ct. 363, 369. Partial or complete payment of freight charges by seller or freight carrier.

Absque /ābskwī/. Without. Occurs in phrases taken from the Latin; such as those immediately following.

Absque aliquo inde redendo /ābskwī śīśkwow indiy redēndow/. Lat. Without reserving any rent therefrom; without rendering anything therefrom. A term used of a free grant by the crown.

Absque consideratione curiae /ābskwī konsidērēshyōwīnyō kyūrūliyō/. In old practice, without the consideration of the court; without judgment.

Absque hoc /ābskwī hōk/. Without this. These are technical words of denial, used in pleading at common law by way of special traverse, to introduce the negative part of the plea, following the affirmative part or induction. See also Traverse.

Absque impetitione vasti /ābskwī impatishyōwīnyō vēststō/. Without impeachment of waste; without accountability for waste; without liability to suit for waste. A clause anciently often inserted in leases (as the equivalent English phrase sometimes is) signifying that the tenant or lessee shall not be liable to suit (impetitio) or challenged, or called to account, for committing waste. See Waste.

Absque tall causa /ābskwī téylay közā/. Lat. Without such cause. A form of replication, now obsolete. In an action ex delicto which works a general denial of the whole matter of the defendant’s plea of de injuria.

Abstinence. Refraining completely from indulgence in some act such as eating or drinking, unlike temperance which presupposes moderate indulgence. Mayfield v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y., 16 C.A.2d 611, 61 P.2d 83.

Abstract /ābstrēkt/, n. A less quantity containing the virtue and force of a greater quantity; an abridgment. A transcript is generally defined as a copy, and is more comprehensive than an abstract. Summary or epitome, or that which comprises or concentrates in itself the essential qualities of a larger thing or of several things. Robbins Inv. Co. v. Robbins, 49 Cal. App.2d 446, 122 P.2d 91, 92. See Abridge; Abridgment; Digest; Headnote; Syllabus.

Abstract /əˈbrɛstrɛkt/. v. To take or withdraw from; as, to abstract the funds of a bank. To remove or separate. To summarize or abridge.

Abstraction. Taking from with intent to injure or defraud. "Wrongful abstraction" is "unauthorized and illegal taking or withdrawing of funds, etc., and appropriation thereof to taker's benefit." Pacific Coast Adjustment Bureau v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, 115 Cal.App. 583, 2 P.2d 218, 219.

Abstract of a fine. In old English conveyancing, one of the parts of a fine, being an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord, naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement. 2 Bl.Com. 351. More commonly called the "note" of the fine. See Fine; Concord.

Abstract of record. A complete history in short, abbreviated form of the case as found in the record, complete enough to show that the questions presented for review have been properly reserved. Synopsis or summary of facts, rather than table of contents of transcript. Abbreviated accurate and authentic history of proceedings. Brown v. Reichmann, 237 Mo. App. 138, 184 S.W.2d 201, 207.

Abstract of title. A condensed history of the title to land, consisting of a synopsis or summary of the material or operative portion of all the conveyances, of whatever kind or nature, which in any manner affect said land, or any estate or interest therein, together with a statement of all liens, charges, or liabilities to which the same may be subject, and of which it is in any way material for purchasers to be apprised. An epitome of the record evidence of title, including maps, plats, and other aids. Commissioners’ Court of Madison County v. Wallace, 118 Tex. 279, 15 S.W.2d 535, 536. An epitome of the conveyances, transfers, and other facts relied on as evidence of title, together with all such facts appearing of record as may impair the title. State ex rel. Freeman v. Abstracters Board of Examiners, 99 Mont. 564, 45 P.2d 668, 670. Memorandum or concise statement in orderly form of the substance of documents or facts appearing on public records which affect title to real property. State ex rel. Doria v. Ferguson, 145 Ohio St. 12, 60 N.E.2d 476, 478. See also Torrens title system.

Abstract question. One which does not rest upon existing facts or rights. Morris Plan Bank of Fort Worth v. Ogden, Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 998, 1004. Hypothetical question.

Absurdity. Anything which is so irrational, unnatural, or inconvenient that it cannot be supposed to have been within the intention of men of ordinary intelligence and discretion. Obviously and flatly opposed to the manifest truth; inconsistent with the plain dictates of common sense; logically contradictory; nonsensical; ridiculous.

Abundans cautra non nocet /əbʌndæns kɔtɪˈlə nɒn nɔkɪt/ . Abundant or extreme caution does no harm. This principle is generally applied to the construction of instruments in which superfluous words have been inserted more clearly to express the intention.

Ab urbe condita /əb ərˈbi kɔndɪtə/ . From the founding of the city. See A.U.C.

Abus de confiance /ɑbjuw da kɔnfɛsɑ̃/ . Fraudently missing or spending to anybody's prejudice goods, cash, bills, documents, or contracts handed over for a special object.

Abuse /ɑbjuw/ . n. Everything which is contrary to good order established by usage. Departure from reasonable use; immoderate or improper use. Physical or mental maltreatment. Misuse. Deception. "Abuse" means to wrong in speech, reproach coarsely, disparage, revile, and malign. State v. Neubauer, 2 Conn.Cir. 169, 197 A.2d 93, 96. See Defamation.

Child abuse. See Child abuse.

Civil law. The destruction of the substance of a thing in using it. See Abuse, v.

Corporate franchise or entity. The abuse or misuse of its franchises by a corporation signifies any positive act in violation of the charter and in derogation of public right, willfully done or caused to be done. The use of rights or franchises as a pretext for wrongs and injuries to the public.

Discretion. "Abuse of discretion" is synonymous with a failure to exercise a sound, reasonable, and legal discretion. It is a strict legal term indicating that appellate court is of opinion that there was commission of an error of law by the trial court. It does not imply intentional wrong or bad faith, or misconduct, nor any reflection on the judge but means the clearly erroneous conclusion and judgment—one is that clearly against logic and effect of such facts as are presented in support of the application or against the reasonable and probable deductions to be drawn from the facts disclosed upon the hearing; an improvident exercise of discretion; an error of law. State v. Draper, 83 Utah 115, 27 P.2d 39; Ex parte Jones, 246 Ala. 433, 20 So.2d 859, 862. A discretion exercised to an end or purpose not justified by and clearly against reason and evidence. Unreasonable departure from considered precedents and settled judicial custom, constituting error of law. Beck v. Wings Field, Inc., C.C.A.Pa., 122 F.2d 114, 116, 117. "Abuse of discretion" by trial court is any unreasonable, unconscionable and arbitrary action taken without proper consideration of facts and law pertaining to matter submitted. Harvey v. State, Okl.Cr., 458 P.2d 336, 338.

Drug abuse. See that title.

Female child. An injury to the genital organs in an attempt at carnal knowledge, falling short of actual penetration. Lee v. State, 246 Ala. 69, 18 So.2d 706, 707. But, according to other authorities, "abuse" is here equivalent to ravishment or rape. Any injury to private parts of girl constitutes "abuse" within meaning of criminal statute proscribing abuse of girl under age of 12 years in attempt to have carnal knowledge of her; mere hurt to private parts of girl, even though they are not bruised, cut, lacerated or torn, is sufficient. Ard v. State, 57 Ala.App. 250, 327 So.2d 745, 747. See also Carnal abuse; Child abuse.
Police officer. As used in statute prohibiting one from obstructing, resisting, or abusing an officer, word "abuses" means to wrong in speech, reproach coarsely, disparage, revile, or malign an officer who is performing his duty. State v. Neubauer, 2 Conn.Cir. 168, 197 A.2d 93.

Power. Use of one who possesses it in a manner contrary to law. Improper use of power, distinguished from usurpation of power which presupposes exercise of power not vested in the offender. Swenson v. Cahoon, 111 Fla. 788, 152 So. 203, 204.

Process. The gist of an action for "abuse of process" is improper use or perversion of process after it has been issued. Publix Drug Co. v. Breyer Ice Cream Co., 347 Pa. 346, 32 A.2d 413, 415. A malicious abuse of legal process occurs where the party employs it for some unlawful object, not the purpose which it is intended by the law to effect; in other words, a perversion of it. 500 West 174 St. v. Vasquez, 67 Misc.2d 993, 325 N.Y.S.2d 256, 258. Thus, where the purpose of a prosecution for issuance of a check without funds was to collect a debt, the prosecution is an abuse of criminal process. Regular and legitimate use of process, although with a bad intention, is not a malicious "abuse of process." Priest v. Union Agency, 174 Tenn. 304, 125 S.W.2d 142, 143. Action for "abuse of process" is distinguished from action for "malicious prosecution," in that action for abuse of process rests upon improper use of regularly issued process, while "malicious prosecution" has reference to wrong in issuance of process. McNinis v. Atlantic Inv. Corporation, 137 Or. 648, 4 P.2d 314, 315; Lobel v. Trade Bank of New York, 132 Misc. 643, 229 N.Y.S. 778, 781. See also Malicious abuse of legal process; Malicious use of process.

Abuse /əˈbjuːər/. v. To make excessive or improper use of a thing, or to employ it in a manner contrary to the natural or legal rules for its use. To make an extravagant or excessive use, as to abuse one's authority.

Abused and neglected children. Those who are suffering serious physical or emotional injury inflicted on them, including malnutrition. See Abuse (Female child); Child abuse.

Abusive. Tending to deceive; practicing abuse; prone to ill-treat by coarse, insulting words or harmful acts. Using ill treatment; injurious, improper, hurtful, offensive, reproachful.

Abut. To reach; to touch. To touch at the end; be contiguous; join at a border or boundary; terminate on; end at; border on; reach or touch with an end. The term "abutting" implies a closer proximity than the term "adjacent." No intervening land.

Abuttals /æbəˈdæls/. The buttings or boundaries of lands, showing to what other lands, highways, or places they belong or are abutting. It has been used to express the end boundary lines as distinguished from those on the sides, as "buttals and sidings".

Abutter. One whose property abuts, is contiguous, or joins at a border or boundary, as where no other land, road, or street intervenes.

Abutting owner. An owner of land which abuts or adjoins. The term usually implies that the relative parts actually adjoin, but is sometimes loosely used without implying more than close proximity. See Abut.

A.C. Anno Christi, the year of Christ.

A/C means account and is much used by bookkeepers. As used in a check, it has been held not a direction to the bank to credit the amount of the check to the person named, but rather a memorandum to identify the transaction in which the check was issued.

Academic. Pertaining to college, university, or preparatory school. Sisters of Mercy v. Town of Hooksett, 93 N.H. 301, 42 A.2d 222, 225. A question or issue which is not relevant to case or is premature or hypothetical. In re Battell's Will, 286 N.Y. 97, 35 N.E.2d 913. See Academic question.

Academic question. An issue which does not require answer or adjudication by court because it is not necessary to case; hypothetical or moot question. In re Electrolux Corp., 288 N.Y. 440, 43 N.E.2d 480. See Hypothetical question.

Academy. An institution of higher learning. An association of experts in some particular branch of art, literature, or science. In its original meaning, an association formed for mutual improvement, or for the advancement of science or art; in later use, a species of educational institution, of a level between the elementary school and the college. U. S. ex rel. Jacobides v. Day, C.C.A.N.Y., 32 F.2d 542, 544; Sisters of Mercy v. Town of Hooksett, 93 N.H. 301, 42 A.2d 222, 225. In current usage, term commonly refers to private high school or one of the service academies (e.g. Air Force Academy). See School.

A cancellando /əˈkænəlsəndəʊ/. From cancelling. 3 Bl.Comm. 46.

A cancellis /əˈkænəlsɪs/. The Chancellor.

A cancellis curiae explodi /əˈkænəlsɪs kəˈriːəi ɪkˈsploʊdi/. To be expelled from the bar of the court.

Acapte. In French feudal law, a species of relief; a seignorial right due on every change of a tenant. A feudal right which formerly prevailed in Languedoc and Guyenne, being attached to that species of heritable estates which were granted on the contract of emphiteusis.

A causa de cy /əˈkoʊzə də sɪ/ . For this reason.

Accedas ad curiam /æksiˈdæs æd kəˈriːəm/. (Lat. That you go to court.) An original writ out of chancery directed to the sheriff, for the purpose of removing a reprieve suit from a Court Baron or a hundred court to one of the superior courts of law. It directs the sheriff to go to the lower court and enroll the proceedings and send up the record. 3 Bl.Comm. 34.
ACCEDE

Accede. To consent; agree.

Accelerated cost recovery system. System for recovering costs of business assets through tax deductions, replacing prior depreciation rules. ACRS permits a more rapid write-off of costs without regard, as under prior depreciation rules, to how long the assets are expected to be in use. I.R.C. § 188 (1981).

Accelerated depreciation. Various methods of depreciation that yield larger deductions in the earlier years of the life of an asset than the straight-line method. Examples include the double declining-balance and the sum of the years’ digits methods of depreciation. See Accelerated cost recovery system; Depreciation.

Acceleration. The shortening of the time for the vesting in possession of an expectant interest. Hardening of the enjoyment of an estate which was otherwise postponed to a later period. Blackwell v. Virginia Trust Co., 177 Va. 299, 14 S.E.2d 301, 304. If the life estate fails for any reason the remainder is “accelerated”. Elliott v. Brittinger, 376 Ill. 147, 33 N.E.2d 199, 201.

Doctrine of “acceleration”, as applied to law of property, refers to hardening of owner of future interests toward status of present possession or enjoyment by reason of failure of preceding estate. Aber v. First Nat’l Bank in Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 450 S.W.2d 403, 408. A remedy used where there has been an anticipatory repudiation or a possibility of a future breach. Rose City Transit Co. v. City of Portland, 18 Or.App. 369, 525 P.2d 1325, 1353.

Acceleration clause. A provision or clause in a mortgage, note, bond, deed of trust, or other credit agreement, which allows a lender the opportunity to call monies due under the instrument. Such clause operates when there has been a default such as nonpayment of principal, interest, or failure to pay insurance premiums. General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Shuey, 243 Ky. 74, 47 S.W.2d 968. U.C.C. § 1–208 provides that if the provision for acceleration is “at will” such demand must be made only under a “good faith” belief that the prospect of payment is impaired.

Acceleration premium. Increased rate of pay for increased production.

Accept. To receive with approval or satisfaction; to receive with intent to retain. Morris v. State, 102 Ark. 513, 145 S.W. 213, 214. Also, in the capacity of drawee of a bill, to recognize the draft, and engage to pay it when due (see Acceptance, infra). Admit and agree to; accede to or consent to; receive with approval; adopt; agree to. Rocha v. Hulen, 6 Cal. App.2d 245, 44 P.2d 478, 482, 483. Means something more than to receive, meaning to adopt, to agree to carry out provisions, to keep and retain.

Acceptance. The taking and receiving of anything in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated or avoided if such acceptance had not been made. The act of a person to whom a thing is offered or tendered by another, whereby he receives the thing with the intention of retaining it, such intention being evidenced by a sufficient act. Aetna Inv. Corporation v. Chandler Landscape & Floral Co., 227 Mo.App. 17, 50 S.W.2d 195, 197. The exercise of power conferred by an offer by performance of some act. In re Larney’s Estate, 148 Misc. 871, 266 N.Y.S. 564.

Commercial paper. Acceptance is the drawee’s signed engagement to honor the draft as presented. It must be written on the draft, and may consist of his signature alone. It becomes operative when completed by delivery or notification. U.C.C. § 3–410. Certification of a check is acceptance. U.C.C. § 3–411. A draft may be accepted although it has not been signed by the drawer or is otherwise incomplete or is overdue or has been dishonored. U.C.C. § 3–410(2). See also Acceptor; Banker’s acceptance; Honor.

Contracts. Compliance by offeree with terms and conditions of offer constitute an “acceptance”. Davis & Clanton v. C. I. T. Corporation, 190 S.C. 151, 2 S.E.2d 382, 383. See also Confirmation; Offer and acceptance.

Insurance. In a contract of insurance, the “acceptance” occurs when insurer agrees to accept application and to issue policy. Acacia Mut. Life Ass’n v. Berry, 54 Ariz. 208, 94 P.2d 770, 772. Delay or inaction on the part of an insurer cannot constitute an “acceptance”. French American Banking Corporation v. Fireman’s Fund Ins. Co., D.C.N.Y., 43 F.Supp. 494, 498. More than mere mental resolution or determination on part of insurer to accept application is required; such must be communicated to applicant. Limbaugh v. Monarch Life Ins. Co., Springfield, Mass., Mo.App., 84 S.W.2d 208, 212. Term as applied to policy means assent, acquiescence or agreement to terms and conditions of policy. Baker v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Mo.App., 427 S.W.2d 281, 291.

Sale of goods. U.C.C. § 2–606 provides three ways a buyer can accept goods: (1) by signifying to the seller that the goods are conforming or that he will accept them in spite of their nonconformity, (2) by failing to make an effective rejection, and (3) by doing an act inconsistent with the seller’s ownership. Acceptance of a part of any commercial unit is acceptance of that entire unit.

Types of acceptance.

Conditional. An engagement to pay the draft or accept the offer on the happening of a condition. A “conditional acceptance” is in effect a statement that the offeree is willing to enter into a bargain differing in some respects from that proposed in the original offer. The conditional acceptance is, therefore, itself a counter offer.

Express. An undertaking in direct and express terms to pay the bill, draft, etc.; an absolute acceptance.

Implied. An undertaking to pay the draft inferred from acts of the drawee of a character which fairly warrant such an inference. In case of a bilateral contract, “acceptance” of an offer need not be expressed, but may be shown by any words or acts indicating the offeree’s assent to the proposed bargain.

Qualified. One either conditional or partial, and which introduces a variation in the sum, mode, or place of payment. In contract law, an acceptance based on a variation of the terms of the offer and hence a counteroffer. In negotiable instruments, a variation in the terms of the instrument by the acceptor.

Acceptance au besoin /ákseptóns ów bázwán/. Fr. Acceptance in case of need. An acceptance by one whom a bill is drawn au besoin, that is, in case of refusal or failure of the drawee to accept.

Acceptare /ákseptéry/. Lat. To accept; to assent; to assent to a promise made by another.

Accepteur par intervention. In French law, acceptor of a bill of honor.

Acceptation /ákseptáléshan/. In the civil and Scotch law, release made by a creditor to his debtor of his debt, without receiving any consideration. It is a species of donation, but not subject to the forms of the latter, and is valid unless in fraud of creditors. The verbal extinction of a verbal contract, with a declaration that the debt has been paid when it has not; or the acceptance of something merely imaginary in satisfaction of a verbal contract.

Acceptor. One who engages that he will pay the draft according to its tenor at the time of his engagement or as completed pursuant to authority on incomplete instruments. U.C.C. § 3–413.

Acceptor supra protest /ákseptar s(y)úwpro prówtést/. One who accepts a bill which has been protested, for the honor of the drawer or any one of the indorsers.

Access. Freedom of approach or communication; or the means, power, or opportunity of approaching, communicating, or passing to and from. Sometimes importing the occurrence of sexual intercourse, Jackson v. Jackson, 182 Okl. 74, 76 P.2d 1062, 1066; otherwise importing opportunity of communication for that purpose as between husband and wife.

In real property law, the term “access” denotes the right vested in the owner of land which adjoins a road or other highway to go and return from his own land to the highway without obstruction. See Access, easement of. “Access” to property does not necessarily carry with it possession. People v. Brenneauer, 101 Misc. 156, 166 N.Y.S. 801, 806.

Multiple access. The defense of several lovers in paternity actions. Yarmark v. Strickland, 193 So.2d 212.

Public records. The right of access to public records includes not only a legal right of access but a reasonable opportunity to avail oneself of the same. See Freedom of Information Act.

Accessory. See Accessory.

Access, easement of /fyzmant sv ákses/. An easement of access is the right which an abutting owner has of ingress to and egress from his premises, in addition to the public easement in the street.

Accessio /áksekésh(í)yow/. In Roman law, an increase or addition; that which lies next to a thing, and is supplementary and necessary to the principal thing; that which arises or is produced from the principal thing; an “accessory obligation” (q.v.). One of the modes of acquiring property, being the extension of ownership over that which grows from, or is united to, an article which one already possesses.

Accessio includes both accession and accretion as used in the common law. See Adjunction.

Accession. Coming into possession of a right or office; increase; augmentation; addition.

The right to all which one’s own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable; and the right to that which is united to it by accession, either naturally or artificially. The right to own things that become a part of something already owned; e.g. riparian owners’ right to abandoned river beds and rights of alluvion by accretion and reliction. Manry v. Robison, 122 Tex. 213, 56 S.W.2d 438, 443, 444. See Accretion.

A principle derived from the civil law, by which the owner of property becomes entitled to all which it produces, and to all that is added or united to it, either naturally or artificially, (that is, by the labor or skill of another) even where such addition extends to a change of form or materials; and by which, on the other hand, the possessor of property becomes entitled to it, as against the original owner, where the addition made to it by his skill and labor is of greater value than the property itself, or where the change effected in its form is so great as to render it impossible to restore it to its original shape.

The commencement or inauguration of a sovereign’s reign.

International law. The absolute or conditional acceptance by one or several nations of a treaty already concluded between other sovereignties. It may be of two kinds: First, the formal entrance of a third state into a treaty so that such nation becomes a party to it; and this may only be with the consent of the original parties. Second, a nation may accede to a treaty among other nations solely for the purpose of guarantee, in which case, though a party, it is affected by the treaty only as a guarantor. See Adhesion.

Accessions. Goods which are installed in or affixed to other goods. U.C.C. § 9–314(1).

Accessorum non duci, sed sequitur suum principale /ákseóriyam non dyúwst sed sékwádár síwyám prinsapélyi/. That which is the accessory or incident does not lead, but follows, its principal.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis /ákseóríyas sékwádár neyšhúram síwyák prinsapélyá/. An accessory follows the nature of his principal. One who is accessory to a crime cannot be guilty of a higher degree of crime than his principal.

Accessory. Anything which is joined to another thing as an ornament, or to render it more perfect, or which accompanies it, or is connected with it as an incident, or as subordinate to it, which belongs to or with it.
Adjunct or accompaniment. Louis Werner Saw Mill Co. v. White, 205 La. 242, 17 So.2d 264, 270. A thing of subordinate importance. Aiding or contributing in secondary way or assisting in or contributing to as a subordinate. Gilfoil v. Greenspon, La.App., 216 So.2d 829, 831.

Accessory after the fact. A person who, knowing a felony to have been committed by another, receives, relieves, comforts or assists the felon, in order to enable him to escape from punishment, or the like. Robertson v. State, 5 Md.App. 723, 249 A.2d 504, 507; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3. See also Harbor; Obstructing Justice.

Accessory before the fact. One who orders, counsels, encourages, or otherwise aids and abets another to commit a felony and who is not present at the commission of the offense. Com. v. Leach, 455 Pa. 448, 317 A.2d 293, 294. The primary distinction between the accessory before the fact and the principal in the second degree is presence. Virtually all states have now expressly abrogated the distinction between principals and accessories before the fact; the latter now being classified as principals.

Accessory during the fact. One who stands by without interfering or giving such help as may be in his power to prevent the commission of a criminal offense.

Criminal law. Contributing to or aiding in the commission of a crime. One who, without being present at the commission of a felonyous offense, becomes guilty of such offense, not as a chief actor, but as a participant, as by command, advice, instigation, or concealment; either before or after the fact or commission; a particeps criminis. Model Penal Code, § 2.06.

One who is not the chief actor in the offense, nor present at its performance, but in some way concerned therein, either before or after the act committed. One who aids, abets, commands, or counsels another in the commission of a crime. See also Abettor; Aid and abet; Accomplice.

Accessory building. Structures used for benefit of main building; e.g. tool shed. Out-buildings.

Accessory contract. An accessory contract is made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others; such as suretyship, mortgage, and pledge.

Accessory obligation. An obligation which is incidental to another or principal obligation; e.g. the obligation of a surety.

Accessory use. With reference to zoning law, an "accessory use" in its ordinary signification is a use which is dependent on or pertains to principal or main use. Town of Foxborough v. Bay State Harness Horse Racing & Breeding Ass’n, Inc., Mass.App., 366 N.E.2d 773, 777. Accessory use is one which is subordinate to, clearly incidental to, customary in connection with, and ordinarily located on same lot with, principal use. Board of County Com’rs of Boulder County v. Thompson, 177 Colo. 277, 493 P.2d 1358, 1360.

Access to counsel. Right of one to consult with his attorney guaranteed by the 6th Amendment. U.S. Const. Geders v. U.S., 425 U.S. 80, 96 S.Ct. 1330, 47 L.Ed.2d 552. See also Counsel, right to.

Accident. The word "accident" is derived from the Latin verb "accidere" signifying "fall upon, befall, happen, chance." In the etymological sense anything that happens may be said to be an accident and in this sense, the word has been defined as befalling a change; a happening; an incident; an occurrence or event. In its most commonly accepted meaning, or in its ordinary or popular sense, the word may be defined as meaning: a fortuitous circumstance, event, or happening; an event happening without any human agency, or if happening wholly or partly through human agency, an event which under the circumstances is unusual and unexpected by the person to whom it happens; an unusual, unforeseen or unlooked for event, happening or occurrence; an unusual or unexpected result attending the operation or performance of a usual or necessary act or event; chance or contingency; fortune; mishap; some sudden and unexpected event taking place without expectation, upon the instant, rather than something which continues, progresses or develops; something happening by chance; something unforeseen, unexpected, unusual, extraordinary or phenomenal, taking place not according to the usual course of things or events, out of the range of ordinary calculations; that which exists or occurs abnormally, or an uncommon occurrence. The word may be employed as denoting a calamity, casualty, catastrophe, disaster, an undesirable or unfortunate happening; any unexpected personal injury resulting from any unlooked for mishap or occurrence; any unpleasant or unfortunate occurrence, that causes injury, loss, suffering or death; some untoward occurrence aside from the usual course of events. An event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an undesigned, sudden, and unexpected event. Kochring Co. v. American Auto. Ins. Co., C.A.Wis., 353 F.2d 993, 996. See also Act of God; Casualty; Inevitable accident.

Automobiles. The word "accident" as used in automobile liability policy requiring notice of any "accident" to be given to the insurer as a condition precedent to liability means an untoward and unforeseen occurrence in the operation of the automobile which results in injury to the person or property of another. Ohio Casualty Ins. Co. v. Marr, C.C.A.Okl., 98 F.2d 973, 975. The word "accident", requiring operator of vehicle to stop immediately in case of accident, contemplates any situation occurring on the highway wherein he so operates his automobile as to cause injury to the property or person of another using the same highway. See also Hit and run accident.

Insurance contract. An accident within accident insurance policies is an event happening without any human agency, or, if happening through such agency, an event which, under circumstances, is unusual and not expected by the person to whom it happens. A more comprehensive term than "negligence," and in its common signification the word means an unexpected happening without intention or design.
Maritime law. "Accidents of navigation" or "accidents of the sea" are such as are peculiar to the sea or to usual navigation or the action of the elements, which do not happen by the intervention of man, and are not to be avoided by the exercise of proper prudence, foresight, and skill. The G. R. Booth, 171 U.S. 450, 19 S.Ct. 9, 43 L.Ed. 234. See also Perils of the sea.

Unavoidable accident. One which is not occasioned in any degree, either directly or remotely, by the want of such care and prudence as the law holds every man bound to exercise. Vincent v. Johnson, Tex.Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 135. One which could not have been prevented by exercise of due care by both parties under circumstances prevailing. Woodiawiss v. Rise, 3 Wash.App. 5, 471 P.2d 124, 126. One which occurs while all persons concerned are exercising ordinary care, which is not caused by fault of any of persons and which could not have been prevented by any means suggested by common prudence. Cavanaugh v. Jepson, Iowa, 167 N.W.2d 616, 623. See also Restatement, Second, Torts § 8.

Workers' compensation acts. A befalling; an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an undesigned, sudden, and unexpected event; chance; contingency; often, an undesigned and unforeseen occurrence of an afflicting or unfortunate character; casualty; mishap; as, to die by an accident. Its synonyms are chance, contingency, mishap, mischance, misfortune, disaster, calamity, catastrophe.

Accidental. Happening by chance, or unexpectedly; taking place not according to usual course of things; casual; fortuitous. Norris v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Md., 49 F.2d 62, 63; Murphy v. Travelers Ins. Co., 141 Neb. 41, 2 N.W.2d 576, 578, 579. See also Accident.

Accidental cause. That which produces result which is not foreseen; producing an unexpected effect. Fernandez v. Flint Bd. of Ed., C.A.Mich., 283 F.2d 906, 908.

Accidental killing. One resulting from an act which is lawful and lawfully done under a reasonable belief that no harm is possible; distinguished from "involuntary manslaughter," which is the result of an unlawful act, or of a lawful act done in an unlawful way.

Accidental vein. See Veln.

Accident proneness. Tendency towards being involved in or contributing to accidents.

Accidere /əksidərɪə/. Lat. To fall; fall in; come to hand; happen. Judgment is sometimes given against an executor or administrator to be satisfied out of assets quando acciderint; i.e., when they shall come to hand.

Accion /əkˈʃiːən/. In Spanish law, a right of action; also the method of judicial procedure for the recovery of property or a debt.

Accipere quid ut justitiām facias, non est tam acclpere quam extorquere /əksɪˈpɒrə kwɪd ət jɑːstɪʃiəm fɛʃˈʃɪəs, nɒn ɛst tæm əksɪˈpɒrə kwɑːm ekstɔrˈkwɔːri/. To accept anything as a reward for doing justice is rather extorting than accepting.

Acceptare /əkˈspɛktərɛ/. To pay relief to lords of manors. Capitāli dominō acceptare, i.e., to pay a relief, homage, or obedience to the chief lord on becoming his vassal.

Accola /əˈkɔlə/. Civil law. One who inhabits or occupies land near a place, as one who dwells by a river, or on the bank of a river.

Feudal law. A husbandman; an agricultural tenant; a tenant of a manor. A name given to a class of vassiles in Italy.

Accomenda /əkˈkɒmɛndə/. In maritime law, a contract between the owner of goods and the master of a ship, by which the former intrusts the property to the latter to be sold by him on their joint account. In such case, two contracts take place: First, the contract called mandatum, by which the owner of the property gives the master power to dispose of it; and the contract of partnership, in virtue of which the profits are to be divided between them. One party runs the risk of losing his capital; the other, his labor. If the sale produces no more than first cost, the owner takes all the proceeds. It is only the profits which are to be divided.

Accommodated party. One to whom the credit of the accommodation party is loaned, and is not necessarily the payee, since the inquiry always is as to whom did the maker of the paper loan his credit as a matter of fact; not third person who may receive advantage. See also Accommodation party.

Accommodation /əkəˈmədɛʃən/. An arrangement or engagement made as a favor to another, not upon a consideration received. Something done to oblige, usually spoken of a loan of money or commercial paper; also a friendly agreement or composition of differences. The word implies no consideration. While a party's intent may be to aid a maker of note by lending his credit, if he seeks to accomplish thereby legitimate objects of his own, and not simply to aid maker, the act is not for accommodation.

Accommodation bill or note. See Accommodation paper.

Accommodation indorsement. See Indorsement.

Accommodation indorser. A party who places his name to a note without consideration for purpose of benefitting or accommodating some other party. U.C.C. § 3-415.
ACCOMMODATION LANDS

Accommodation lands. Land bought by a builder or speculator, who erects houses thereon, and then leases portions thereof upon an improved ground-rent.

Accommodation line. Insurance policies accepted by insurer because agent or brokers account in general is satisfactory, even though specific policy would otherwise likely not be acceptable.

Accommodation loan. Loan furnished as an act of friendship or assistance without tangible consideration; money or credit extended for such reasons.

Accommodation maker. One who puts his name to a note without any consideration with the intention of lending his credit to the accommodated party. In re Chamberlain's Estate, Cal.App., 109 P.2d 449, 454. U.C.C. § 3–415. See also Accommodation party.

Accommodation note. One to which accommodating party has put his name, without consideration, to accommodate some other party, who is to issue it and is expected to pay it. U.C.C. § 3–415.

Accommodation paper. An accommodation bill or note is one to which the accommodating party, be he acceptor, drawer, or indorser, has put his name, without consideration, for the purpose of benefiting or accommodating some other party who desires to raise money on it, and is to provide for the bill when due. Hickox v. Hickox, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 913, 917. Such must be executed for the purpose of loaning credit, and incidental benefit to party is insufficient. Morrison v. Painter, Mo.App., 170 S.W.2d 965, 970.

Accommodation party. One who signs commercial paper in any capacity for purpose of lending his name to another party to instrument. U.C.C. § 3–415. Such party is a surety.

Accommodation road. A road opened for benefit of certain individuals to go from and to their homes, for service of their lands, and for use of some estates exclusively. See also Easement.

Accommodatum /skɔməˈdeɪdəm/. The same as Commodatum (q.v.).

Accompany. To go along with. To go with or attend as a companion or associate; to occur in association with. United States v. Lee, C.C.A.Wis., 131 F.2d 464, 466. The word has been defined judicially in cases involving varied facts; thus, an automobile driver under sixteen is not accompanied by an adult person unless the latter exercises supervision over the driver; an unlicensed driver is not accompanied by a licensed driver unless the latter is near enough to render advice and assistance.

Accomplice /skəˈmpləs/. One who knowingly, voluntarily and with common intent unites with the principal offender in the commission of a crime. Smith v. State, Tenn.Cr.App., 525 S.W.2d 674, 676; Model Penal Code, § 2.06(3). One who is in some way concerned or associated in commission of crime; partaker of guilt; one who aids or assists, or is an accessory. McLendon v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 19 F.2d 465, 466. Equally concerned in the commission of crime. Fryman v. Commonwealth, 289 Ky. 540, 159 S.W.2d 426, 429. An "accomplice" is one who is guilty of complicity in crime charged, either by being present and aiding or abetting in it, or having advised and encouraged it, though absent from place when it was committed, though mere presence, acquiescence, or silence, in the absence of a duty to act, is not enough, no matter how reprehensible it may be, to constitute one an accomplice. One is liable as an accomplice to the crime of another if he gave assistance or encouragement or failed to perform a legal duty to prevent it with the intent thereby to promote or facilitate commission of the crime. See also Abet; Aid and abet; Accessory.

Accomplice liability. Criminal responsibility of one who acts with another before, during or after the perpetration of a crime. Model Penal Code, § 2.06.

Accomplice witness. A person who either as principal, accomplice, or accessory, was connected with crime by unlawful act or omission on his part, transpiring either before, at time of, or after commission of offense, and whether or not he was present and participated in crime. Johnson v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 502 S.W.2d 761, 763.

Accord, n. A satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured which, when performed, is a bar to all actions upon this account. An accord being a contract, the requirements of mutual assent and consideration must be met. Buob v. Feenaghty Machinery Co., 191 Wash. 477, 71 P.2d 559, 564. An agreement to accept, in extinction of an obligation, something different from or less than that to which the person agreeing to accept is entitled. Whepley Oil Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 6 Cal.App.2d 94, 44 P.2d 670, 677. It may arise both where the demand itself is unliquidated or in dispute, and where the amount and nature of the demand is undisputed, and it is agreed to give and take less than the demand. See Accord and satisfaction; Compromise and settlement; Executory accord.

Accord, v. In practice, to agree or concur, as one judge with another. In agreement with.

Accordance. Agreement; harmony; concord; conformity. City and County of San Francisco v. Boyd, 22 Cal.2d 685, 140 P.2d 666, 668.

Accord and satisfaction. A method of discharging a claim whereby the parties agree to give and accept something in settlement of the claim and perform the agreement, the "accord" being the agreement and the "satisfaction" its execution or performance, and it is a new contract substituted for an old contract which is thereby discharged, or for an obligation or cause of action which is settled, and must have all of the elements of a valid contract. Holm v. Hansen, Iowa, 248 N.W.2d 503, 506. An executory bilateral contract of "accord" is an agreement embodying a promise, express or implied, to accept at some future time a stipulated performance in satisfaction or discharge in whole or in part of any present claim, cause of action or obligation, and a promise express or implied to render such performance. An "accord and satisfaction arises" where parties, by a subsequent agreement, have satisfied the former one, and the latter agreement has been executed. The execution of a new agreement may itself amount to a satisfaction, where it is so expressly agreed by the parties; and without such agreement, if the new promise is founded on a new consideration, in which case the taking of the new consideration amounts to the satisfaction of the former contract.

In some jurisdictions, novation is a species of accord and satisfaction.

See Composition; Compromise and settlement; Novation; Settlement.

Accordant /akɔrdɔnt/. Fr. and Eng. Agreeing; concurrence.

Accord executory. A bilateral agreement of settlement which has not yet been performed (satisfied). Restatement of Contracts, § 417.

Accouchement /akwашмοn/. The act of a woman in giving birth to a child. The fact of the accouchement, which may be proved by the direct testimony of one who was present, as a physician or midwife, is often important evidence in proving parentage.

Account. A detailed statement of the mutual demands in the nature of debt and credit between parties, arising out of contracts or some fiduciary relation. A statement in writing, of debits and credits, or of receipts and payments; a list of items of debits and credits, with their respective dates. A statement of pecuniary transactions; a record or course of business dealings between parties; a list or statement of monetary transactions, such as payments, losses, sales, debits, credits, etc., in most cases showing a balance or result of comparison between items of an opposite nature.

Any account with a bank; including a checking, time, interest or savings account. U.C.C. § 4-194.

Account means any right to payment for goods sold or leased or for services rendered which is not evidenced by an instrument or chattel paper, whether or not it has been earned by performance. This covers the ordinary account receivable. Rights arising under a ship charter are also accounts. See U.C.C. § 9–106.

See also Aging of accounts; Blocked account; Charge account; Common account; Community account; Custody account; Contra accounts; Escrow account; Impond account; Intermediate account; Liquidated account; Ledger; Long account; Margin account; Nominal account; Stated account; Statement of account. For Open account, see Open.

Account annexed. Form of simplified statement used in pleading a common count (e.g. money had and received) impliedly authorized for use under Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2).

Account balance. Difference between debit and credit sides of an account.

Account debtor. Person who is obligated on an account, chattel paper or general intangible. U.C.C. § 9–105(1)(a).

Account payable. A debt, owed by an enterprise, that arises in the normal course of business dealings and has not been replaced by a note payable of a debtor. For example, bills for materials received but not yet paid. Contract obligations owing by a person on open account. State Tax Commission v. Shattuck, 44 Ariz. 379, 38 P.2d 631, 639. A liability representing an amount owed to a creditor, usually arising from purchase of merchandise or materials and supplies; not necessarily due or past due.

Account receivable. A debt, owed to an enterprise, that arises in the normal course of business dealings and is not supported by negotiable paper. For example, the charge accounts of a department store. But income due from investments (unless investments are the business itself) is not usually shown in accounts receivable. A claim against a debtor usually arising from sales or services rendered; not necessarily due or past due. For accounts receivable insurance, see Insurance.

Account rendered. An account made out by the creditor, and presented to the debtor for his examination and acceptance. When accepted, it becomes an account stated.

Account settled. One in which the balance has been in fact paid, thereby differing from an account stated.

Account stated. An “account stated” arises where there have been transactions between debtor and creditor resulting in the creation of matured debts and the parties by agreement compute a balance which the debtor promises to pay and the creditor promises to accept in full payment for the items of account.

Adjunct account. An account that accumulates additions to another account.

Bank account. See Bank.

Book account. See Book.

Closed account. An account to which no further additions can be made on either side, but which remains still open for adjustment and set-off, which distinguishes it from an account stated.

Contra account. An account, such as accumulated depreciation, that accumulates subtractions from another account, such as machinery. Contrast with adjunct account, supra.

Current account. An open or running or unsettled account between two parties; the antithesis of an account stated.

Mutual accounts. Accounts comprising mutual credits between the parties; or an existing credit on one side which constitutes a ground for credit on the other, or where there is an understanding that mutual debts shall be a satisfaction or set-off pro tanto between the parties.

Open account. An account which has not been finally settled or closed, but is still running or open to future adjustment or liquidation. Open account, in legal as well as in ordinary language, means an indebtedness subject to future adjustment, and which may be reduced or modified by proof.

Account, or account render. “Account,” sometimes called “account render,” was a form of action at common law against a person who by reason of some fiduciary relation (as guardian, bailiff, receiver, etc.) was bound to render an account to another, but refused to do so. Peoples Finance & Thrift Co. of Visalia v. Bowman, 58 Cal.App.2d 729, 137 P.2d 729, 731.
ACCOUNTABILITY

Accountability. State of being responsible or answerable. See also Liability.

Accountable. Subject to pay; responsible; liable.

Accountable receipt. An instrument acknowledging the receipt of money or personal property, coupled with an obligation.

Accountant. Person skilled in keeping books or accounts; in designing and controlling systems of account; in giving tax advice and preparing tax returns.

“Accountant” means accountant authorized under applicable law to practice public accounting, and includes professional accounting association, corporation, or partnership, if so authorized. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(1).

Certified Public Accountant (CPA). An accountant who has satisfied the statutory and administrative requirements of his or her jurisdiction to be registered or licensed as a public accountant. In addition to passing the Uniform CPA Examination administered by the AICPA, the CPA must meet certain business experience, educational and moral requirements that differ from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

Cost accountant. See Cost.

Accountant privilege. Protection afforded to client from disclosure by accountant of materials submitted to or prepared by accountant.

Accountants, chartered. Persons skilled in the keeping and examination of accounts, who are employed for the purpose of examining and certifying to the correctness of accounts of corporations and others. British Commonwealth equivalent of Certified Public Accountant.

Accountant’s lien. Possessor right of accountant to papers prepared by him and held until payment is made for his services.

Account book. A book kept by a merchant, trader, mechanic, or other person, in which are entered from time to time the transactions of his trade or business. Entries made therein are admissible in evidence as exception to hearsay rule under certain conditions. Fed.Evid.R. 803.

Account computatio. The primary idea of “account computatio”, whether in proceedings of courts of law or equity, is some matter of debt and credit, or demand in nature thereof. Coleman v. Kansas City, 351 Mo. 254, 173 S.W.2d 572, 576.

Account for. To pay over the money to the person entitled thereto. U. S. v. Rehwald, D.C.Cal., 44 F.2d 663.

Accounting. An act or system of making up or settling accounts; a statement of account, or a debit and credit in financial transactions. Kansas City v. Burns, 137 Kan. 905, 22 P.2d 444. Rendition of an account, either voluntarily or by order of a court. In the latter case, it imports a rendition of a judgment for the balance ascertained to be due. The term may include payment of the amount due.

The methods under which income and expenses are determined for tax purposes. Major accounting methods are the cash basis and the accrual basis.

Special methods are available for the reporting of gain on installment sales, recognition of income on construction projects (i.e., the completed-contract and percentage-of-completion methods), and the valuation of inventories (i.e. last-in-first-out and first-in-first-out). The various types of accounting methods appear below:

Accrual method. A method of keeping accounts which shows expenses incurred and income earned for a given period, although such expenses and income may not have been actually paid or received. Right to receive and not the actual receipt determines inclusion of amount in gross income. When right to receive an amount becomes fixed, right accrues. H. Liebes & Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 90 F.2d 932, 937. Obligations payable to or by taxpayer are treated as if discharged when incurred. H. Liebes & Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 90 F.2d 932, 936. Entries are made of credits and debits when liability arises, whether received or disbursed. Insurance Finance Corporation v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 84 F.2d 382. See also Accrual basis; Accrue (Taxation).

Cash method. The practice of recording income and expense only when received or paid out; used in contradistinction to accrual method. See Cash basis accounting.

Completed contract method. A method of reporting gain or loss on certain long-term contracts. Under this method of accounting, gross income and expenses are recognized in the tax year in which the contract is completed.

Cost method. The practice of recording the value of assets in terms of their cost.

Fair value method. Refers to present value as used in valuation of assets; means same as actual value, market value. Kerr v. Klinchfield Coal Corp., 169 Va. 149, 192 S.E. 741, 744.

Installment method. Procedure applied in reflecting collection of sales price in installments.

Price level accounting. Modern method of valuing assets in a financial statement which requires use of gross national product to reflect current values. See also Change of accounting method.

See also Generally accepted accounting principles; Installment method; Interim statements; Percentage of completion method; Purchase method of accounting; T-Account; Trial balance.

Accounting for profits. Action for equitable relief against one in a fiduciary relation to recover profits taken in breach of relation.

Accounting period. The period of time, usually a year, used by a taxpayer for the determination of tax liability. Unless a fiscal year is chosen, taxpayers must determine and pay their income tax liability by using the calendar year (i.e., January 1 through December 31) as the period of measurement. An example of a fiscal year is July 1 through June 30. A change in accounting periods (e.g., from a calendar year to a fiscal year) generally requires the consent of the Internal Revenue Service. New taxpayers, such as a newly formed corporation or an estate created upon the death of an individual taxpayer, are free to select either a calendar or a fiscal year without the consent of the Internal Revenue Service. See Annual accounting period; Fiscal year.

Account in trust. Account established by an individual to be held in trust for the benefit of another.

Account payable. See Account.

Account receivable. See Account.

Account stated. See Account.

Accouple. To unite; to marry. Ne unques accouple, never married.

Accredit /ak'redat/. To give official authorization or status. To recognize as having sufficient academic standards to qualify graduates for higher education or for professional practice. In international law: (1) To acknowledge; to receive as an envoy in his public character, and give him credit and rank accordingly. (2) To send with credentials as an envoy. This latter use is now the accepted one.

Accredited law school. Law school which has been approved by the state and the Association of American Law Schools and/or the American Bar Association. In certain states (e.g., Calif.) a law school might be accredited by the state, but not by either the AALS or ABA. In most states only graduates of AALS or ABA accredited law schools are permitted to take the state bar exam.

Accredited representative. As respects service of process, representative having general authority to act.

Accredulltare /ak'redylat'ri/. Lat. To purge an offense by oath.

Accretion /ak'reshon/. The act of growing to a thing; usually applied to the gradual and imperceptible accumulation of land by natural causes, as out of the sea or a river.

Civil law. The right of heirs or legatees to unite or aggregate with their shares or portions of the estate the portion of any co-heir or legatee who refuses to accept it, fails to comply with a condition, becomes incapacitated to inherit, or dies before, the testator.

Land. Addition of portions of soil, by gradual deposition through the operation of natural causes, to that already in possession of owner. Willett v. Miller, 176 Okl. 278, 55 P.2d 90, 92. Accretion of land is of two kinds: By alluvion, i.e., by the washing up of sand or soil, so as to form firm ground; or by dereliction, as when the sea shrinks below the usual water-mark. The term "alluvion" is applied to deposit itself, while "accretion" denotes the act. However, the terms are frequently used synonymously. Land uncovered by gradual subsidence of water is not an "accretion" but a "relliction".

Trust property. Receipts other than those ordinarily considered as income.

See Accrue; Alluvion; Avulsion; Relliction.
Accrued alimony. Alimony which is due but not yet paid.

Accrued compensation. Awarded compensation, due and payable, but not yet paid.

Accrued depreciation. Amount reserved each year in the accounting system for replacement of asset. Portion of useful service life which has expired. State ex rel. City of St. Louis v. Public Service Commission, 341 Mo. 920, 110 S.W.2d 749, 768. A loss which is not restored by current maintenance, and which is due to all factors involved causing ultimate retirement of the property, including wear, tear, decay, and inadequacy. Iowa-Illinois Gas & Elec. Co. v. Iowa City, 255 Iowa 1341, 124 N.W.2d 840, 845.

Accrued dividend. A share of net earnings declared but not yet paid as a dividend.

Accrued expense. Expense incurred but not yet paid.

Accrued income. Income which is earned but not yet due and payable. In re Schlinger's Will, 48 Misc.2d 345, 438, 265 N.Y.S.2d 32, 35.

Accrued interest. Interest that has been earned but is not yet paid or payable.

Accrued liability. An obligation or debt which is properly chargeable in a given accounting period but which is not paid or yet payable.

Accrued right. A matured cause of action, as legal authority to demand redress.

Accrued salary. Compensation to employee which is chargeable to employer but not yet payable.

Accrued taxes. Taxes which are properly chargeable in a given accounting period but not yet payable.

Accruer (or accrual), clause of. An express clause, frequently occurring in the case of gifts by deed or will to persons as tenants in common, providing that upon the death of one or more of the beneficiaries his or their shares shall go to the survivor or survivors. The share of the decedent is then said to accrue to the others.

Accrueing /əkrəwɪŋ/. Inchoate; in process of maturing. That which will or may, at a future time, ripen into a vested right, an available demand, or an existing cause of action. Arising by way of increase or augmentation. Globe Indemnity Co. v. Bruce, C.C.A. Okl., 81 F.2d 143, 153.

Accounting. Allocation of income and expense, which has been earned or incurred but not yet collected or paid out, to the accounting period in which the income is earned or expense incurred.

Accruing costs. Costs and expenses incurred after judgment.

Accrue. To accrue, as distinguished from accrued or matured interest. Interest daily accumulating on the principal debt but not yet due and payable.

Accrueing interest. One that is increasing, enlarging, or augmenting.

Accumulate. Abbreviation for "account", of such universal and immemorial use that the courts will take judicial notice of its meaning.

Accumulated dividend. Dividend due shareholder which has not been paid. See Accumulative dividends; Dividend (Cumulative).

Accumulated earnings credit. A deduction allowed in arriving at accumulated taxable income for purposes of determining the accumulated earnings tax. See Accumulated earnings tax; Accumulated taxable income.

Accumulated earnings tax. A special tax imposed on corporations that accumulate (rather than distribute via dividends) their earnings beyond the reasonable needs of the business. The accumulated earnings tax is imposed on accumulated taxable income in addition to the corporate income tax. See also Excess profits tax.

Accumulated legacy. Portion of distributable estate not yet paid to legatees or donees.

Accumulated surplus. In statutes relative to the taxation of corporations, this term refers to the fund which the company has in excess of its capital and liabilities.

Accumulated taxable income. The income upon which the accumulated earnings tax is imposed. Basically, it is the taxable income of the corporation as adjusted for certain items (e.g., the Federal income tax, excess charitable contributions, the 85% dividends received deduction) less the dividends paid deduction and the accumulated earnings credit.

Accumulations /əkˈmjuːləʃənz/. Increase by continuous or repeated additions, or, if taken literally, means either profit accruing on sale of principal assets, or increase derived from their investment, or both. Adding of interest or income of a fund to principal pursuant to provisions of a will or deed, preventing its being expended. When an executor or other trustee masses the rents, dividends, and other income which he receives, treats it as a capital, invests it, makes a new capital of the income derived therefrom, invests that, and so on, he is said to accumulate the fund, and the capital and accrued income thus procured constitute accumulations.

Accumulations, rule against. A rule rendering an accumulation of income beyond the period of perpetuities void.
Accumulation trust. A trust in which the trustee is directed to accumulate income for a period of time before distribution.

Accumulative. That which accumulates, or is heaped up; additional. Said of several things heaped together, or of one thing added to another.

Accumulative dividends. Same as cumulative dividends; characteristic of preferred stockholders’ agreement by which they receive their agreed dividends before common stockholders. Dividends which accumulate from year to year when not paid. See Dividend (Cumulative).

Accumulative judgment. Where a person has already been convicted and sentenced, and a second or additional judgment is passed against him, the execution of which is postponed until the completion of the first sentence, such second judgment is said to be accumulative. See also Accumulative sentence.

Accumulative legacy. A second, double or additional legacy; a legacy given in addition to another given by the same instrument, or by another instrument. See also Legacy.

Accumulative sentence. A sentence, additional to others, imposed on a defendant who has been convicted upon an indictment containing several counts, each of such counts charging a distinct offense, or who is under conviction at the same time for several distinct offenses; one of such sentences to begin at the expiration of another. Consecutive sentences. See Sentence.

Accusation /əkˈsjuːzəʃən/. A formal charge against a person, to the effect that he is guilty of a punishable offense, laid before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the alleged crime. See Accuse; Indictment; Information.

Accusatory body. Body such as grand jury whose duty is to hear evidence to determine whether a person should be accused (charged) of a crime; to be distinguished from a traverse or petit jury which is charged with duty of determining guilt or innocence.

Accusatory instrument. A document in which an accusation of crime is set forth like an indictment, information or complaint.

Accusatory part. The “accusatory part” of an indictment is that part where the offense is named.

Accusatory pleading. An indictment or complaint in which a person is accused of crime and on which the government tries such person. Fed.R.Crim.P. 3.

Accusatory procedure. System of American jurisprudence in which the government accuses and bears the burden of proving the guilt of a person for a crime; to be distinguished from inquisitorial system. Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534, 81 S.Ct. 735, 5 L.Ed.2d 760.

Accuse. To bring a formal charge against a person, to the effect that he is guilty of a crime or punishable offense, before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the alleged crime. See also Indictment; Information.

Accused. The generic name for the defendant in a criminal case. Person becomes “accused” within meaning of guarantee of speedy trial only at point at which either formal indictment or information has been returned against him, or when he becomes subject to actual restraints on his liberty imposed by arrest, whichever first occurs. State v. Almeida, 54 Haw. 443, 509 P.2d 549, 551.

Accuser. The person by whom an accusation is made.

Accustomed. Habitual; often used; synonymous with usual or customary.

A ce. For this purpose.

A cel jour /a sɛl ˈʃʊər/. At this day.

Acequia /əˈʃi.kwɪˈja/. A ditch, channel, or canal, through which water, diverted from its natural course, is conducted, for use in irrigation or other purposes; public ditches.

Ac etiam /əˈʃi.əm/ (Lat. And also.) The introduction of the statement of the real cause of action, used formerly in those cases where it was necessary to allege a fictitious cause of action to give the court jurisdiction, and also the real cause in compliance with the statutes. It is sometimes written ac etiam. See Bill of Middlesex under Bill, definition 2.

Acid test. Method of financial analysis; ratio of cash and receivables to current liabilities. Sum of cash, marketable securities, and receivables divided by current liabilities. Also called the “quick ratio.”

Acknowledge. To own, avow, or admit; to confess; to recognize one’s acts, and assume the responsibility therefor.

Debt. Part payment of obligation which tolls statute of limitations is a form of “acknowledgment of debt”. In re Badger’s Estate, 156 Kan. 734, 137 P.2d 198, 205.

Instruments. Formal declaration before authorized official, by person who executed instrument, that it is his free act and deed. The certificate of the officer on such instrument that it has been so acknowledged. See also Attestation clause; Jurat; Notary public; Verification.

Paternity. An avowal or admission that the child is one’s own. Recognition of a parental relation, either by a written agreement, verbal declarations or statements, by the life, acts, and conduct of the parties, or any other satisfactory evidence that the relation was recognized and admitted.

A.C.L.U. American Civil Liberties Union.
A Cælo usque ad centrum /'ɛɪ slɔɪləw ēskwiəd sɛntrəm/. From the heavens to the center of the earth. Or more fully, Cælius est solum ejus est usque ad cælum et ad inferos. The owner of the soil owns to the heavens and also to the lowest depths. Or, Cælius est solum est usque ad cælum,—the owner of the soil owns to the heavens. This doctrine has, however, been abrogated; the flight of airplanes and oil and gas regulations have qualified the owner’s dominion not only in the heavens but in the lowest depths. See Air rights.

A communis observantia non est recedendum /ˈɛɪ kæmniːəl əbərvənʃi(ɪ)ə nən əst rɪəsdəndəm/. From common observance there should be no departure; there must be no departure from common usage. A maxim formerly applied to the practice of the courts, to the ancient and established forms of pleading and conveying, and to professional usage generally. Lord Coke applies it to common professional opinion.

A confection /ˈɛɪ ʃæŋkʃiˈəʊnɪ/. From the making.

A conficiendum presentium /ˈɛɪ kænʃiˈəʊnɪ prəˈzɛnʃi(ɪ)əm/. From the making of the indentures.

A consiliis /ˈɛɪ kɔnsəliːs/. (Lat. consilium, advice.) Of counsel; a counsellor. The term is used in the civil law by some writers instead of a respons.

A contrario sensu /ˈɛɪ kæntrəriˈiəʊ səˈnɛsjuː/. On the other hand; in the opposite sense.

Acquainted. Having personal, familiar, knowledge of a person, event, or thing. “Acquaintance” expresses less than familiarity; familiarity less than intimacy. Acquaintance springs from occasional intercourse, familiarity from daily intercourse, intimacy from unreserved intercourse. Atkins Corporation v. Tourny, 6 Cal.2d 206, 57 P.2d 480, 483. To be “personally acquainted with,” and to “know personally,” are equivalent terms; Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U.S. 710, 24 L.Ed. 544. When used with reference to a paper to which a certificate or affidavit is attached, it indicates a substantial knowledge of the subject-matter thereof.

Acquereur /ˈɛkærər/. In French and Canadian law, one who acquires title, particularly to immovable property, by purchase.

Acquest /ˈækwɛst/. An estate acquired newly, or by purchase.

Acquêts /əˈkwɛt/. In the civil law, property which has been acquired by purchase, gift, or otherwise than by succession. Immoveable property which has been acquired otherwise than by succession. Profits or gains of property, as between husband and wife. Civ. Code La. art. 2402. The profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact, of the produce of the joint industry of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them both, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even though the purchase be only in the name of one of the two, and not of both. See Community; Conquêts.

Acquiesce /ˈækwɪsəs/. To give an implied consent to a transaction, to the accrual of a right, or to any act, by one’s mere silence, or without express assent or acknowledgment.

Acquiescence /ˈækwɪsəns/. Conduct recognizing the existence of a transaction, and intended, in some extent at least, to carry the transaction, or permit it to be carried, into effect. It is some act, not deliberately intended to ratify a former transaction known to be voidable, but recognizing the transaction as existing, and intended, in some extent at least, to carry it into effect, and to obtain or claim the benefits resulting from it, and thus differs from “confirmation,” which implies a deliberate act, intended to renew and ratify a transaction known to be voidable. De Boe v. Prentice Packing & Storage Co., 172 Wash. 514, 20 P.2d 1107, 1110. Passive compliance or satisfaction; distinguished from avowed consent on the one hand, and, on the other, from opposition or open discontent. Paul v. Western Distributing Co., 142 Kan. 816, 52 P.2d 379, 387. Acquiescence from which assent may be reasonably inferred. Frank v. Wilson & Co., 24 Del.Ch. 237, 9 A.2d 82, 86. Equivalent to assent inferred from silence with knowledge or from encouragement and presupposes knowledge and assent. Imports tacit consent, concurrence, acceptance or assent. Natural Soda Products Co. v. City of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 132 P.2d 553, 563. A silent appearance of consent. Failure to make any objections. Submission to an act of which one had knowledge.

It is to be distinguished from avowed consent, on the one hand, and from open discontent or opposition, on the other.

It arises where a person who knows that he is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right neglects to do so for such a length of time that, under the circumstances of the case, the other party may fairly infer that he has waived or abandoned his right. A form of equitable estoppel. Schmitt v. Wright, 317 Ill.App. 384, 46 N.E.2d 184, 192.

Acquiescence and laches are cognate but not equivalent terms. The former is a submission to, or resting satisfied with, an existing state of things, while laches implies a neglect to do that which the party ought to do for his own benefit or protection. Hence laches may be evidence of acquiescence. Laches imports a merely passive assent, while acquiescence implies active assent. In re Wilbur’s Estate, 334 Pa. 45, 5 A.2d 325, 331. “Acquiescence” relates to inaction during performance of an act while “laches” relates to delay after act is done.

See also Admission; Confession; Estoppel; Ratification.

Internal Revenue Service. In agreement with the result reached. The I.R.S. follows a policy of either acquiescing (i.e., A, Acq.) or non-acquiescing (i.e., NA, Non-Acq.) in the results reached in the regular decisions of the U.S. Tax Court.

Acquiescence, estoppel by. Acquiescence is a species of estoppel. An estoppel arises where party aware of his rights sees other party acting upon mistaken notion of his rights. Injury accruing from one’s acquiescence in another’s action to his prejudice creates “estoppel”. Lebold v. Inland Steel Co., C.C.A.III., 125

An acquisition may result from the act of the party himself, or those who are in his power acting for him, as his children while minors.

Acquisitive offenses. A generic term to describe all forms of larceny and offenses against the title or possession of property.

Acquit /'akwit/. To set free, release or discharge as from an obligation, burden or accusation. To absolve one from an obligation or a liability; or to legally certify the innocence of one charged with crime. See also Acquittal.

Acquittal. See Absolution.

Acquittal /-'kwidal/. Contracts. A release, absolution, or discharge from an obligation, liability, or engagement.

Criminal law. The legal and formal certification of the innocence of a person who has been charged with crime; a delverance or setting free a person from a charge of guilt; finding of not guilty. Also, one legally acquitted by a judgment rendered otherwise than in pursuance of a verdict, as where he is discharged by a magistrate because of the insufficiency of the evidence, or the indictment is dismissed by the court or a nol. pros. entered. Or, it may occur even though the question of guilt or innocence has never been submitted to a jury, as where a defendant, having been held under an indictment or information, is discharged because not brought to trial within the time provided by statute.

Acquittals in fact are those which take place when the jury, upon trial, finds a verdict of not guilty. Acquittals in law are those which take place by mere operation of law; as where a man has been charged merely as an accessory, and the principal has been acquitted.

See Autefols acquit; Jeopardy; Nolle prosequi; Verdict.

Feudal law. The obligation on the part of a mesne lord to protect his tenant from any claims, entries or molestations by lords paramount arising out of the services due to them by the mesne lord.

Acquittance /-'kwidens/. A written discharge, whereby one is freed from an obligation to pay money or perform a duty. This word, though perhaps not strictly speaking synonymous with "receipt," includes it. A receipt is one form of an acquittance; a discharge is another. A receipt in full is an acquittance, and a receipt for a part of a demand or obligation is an acquittance pro tanto.

Acquitted /-'kwidid/. Released; absolved; purged of an accusation. Judicially discharged from accusation; released from debt, etc. Includes both civil and criminal prosecutions. See Acquittal.

Acre. A quantity of land containing 160 square rods, 4,840 square yards, or 43,560 square feet of land, in whatever shape. See Land measure.

Acre foot. 325,850 gallons, or the amount of water which will cover one acre one foot in depth.

Acre right. Formerly the share of a citizen of a New England town in the common lands. The value of the acre right was a fixed quantity in each town, but varied in different towns. A 10-acre lot or right in a certain town was equivalent to 113 acres of upland and 12 acres of meadow, and a certain exact proportion was maintained between the acre right and salable lands.

Across. From side to side. Transverse to the length of. It may mean "over," or "upon and along," or "upon," or "within".

Act, n. Denotes external manifestation of actor’s will. Restatement, Second, Torts § 2. Expression of will or purpose; carries idea of performance; primarily that which is done or doing; exercise of power, or effect of which power exerted is cause; a performance; a deed. In its most general sense, this noun signifies something done voluntarily by a person; the exercise of an individual’s power; an effect produced in the external world by an exercise of the power of a person objectively, prompted by intention, and proximately caused by a motion of the will. In a more technical sense, it means something done voluntarily by a person, and of such a nature that certain legal consequences attach to it. Thus a grantor acknowledges the conveyance to be his “act and deed,” the terms being synonymous. It may denote something done by an individual, as a private citizen, or as an officer; or by a body of men, as a legislature, a council, or a court of justice; including not merely physical acts, but also decrees, edicts, laws, judgments, resolves, awards, and determinations. Some general laws made by the Congress of the United States are styled joint resolutions, and these have the same force and effect as those styled acts.

Acts under private signature are those which have been made by private individuals under their hands. Criminal act. External manifestation of one’s will which is prerequisite to criminal responsibility. There can be no crime without some act, affirmative or negative. An omission or failure to act may constitute an act for purpose of criminal law.

Legislative act. An alternative name for statutory law. When introduced into the first house of the legislature, a piece of proposed legislation is known as a bill. When passed to the next house, it may then be referred to as an act. After enactment the terms “law” and “act” may be used interchangeably. An act has the same legislative force as a joint resolution but is technically distinguishable, being of a different form and introduced with the words “Be it enacted” instead of “Be it resolved.”

Acts are either public or private. Public acts (also called general acts, or general statutes, or statutes at large) are those which relate to the community generally, or establish a universal rule for the governance of the whole body politic. Private acts (formerly called special), are those which relate either to particular persons (personal acts) or to particular places (local acts), or which operate only upon specified individuals or their private concerns. Unity v. Bur- rage, 103 U.S. 447, 454, 26 L.Ed. 485. Public acts are those which concern the whole community and of which courts of law are bound to take judicial notice.

A “special” or “private” act is one operating only on particular persons and private concerns. A “local act” is one applicable only to a particular part of the legislative jurisdiction.

See also Governmental act; Legislation; Legislative act; Statute.

Private acts are those made by private persons as registers in relation to their receipts and expenditures, schedules, acquittances, and the like.

Public acts are those which have a public authority, and which have been made before public officers, are authorized by a public seal, have been made public by the authority of a magistrate, or which have been extracted and been properly authenticated from public records.

Acta diurna /ækta dajɜːrna/. Lat. In the Roman law, daily acts or chronicles; the public registers or journals of the daily proceedings of the senate, assemblies of the people, courts of justice, etc. Supposed to have resembled a modern newspaper.

Acta in uno judicio non probant in alio nisi inter easdem personas /ækta in juːnˈdɪdʒɪkə nɒn pɜːrˈbænt ɪn ˈɛləʊ nɪsi ɪntə ɛezˈdɛm pɜːrˈsɔːrnəs/-. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it be between the same parties.

Acta publica /ækta pɔːbləkə/-. Lat. Things of general knowledge and concern; matters transacted before certain public officers.

Aecte /ɑkt/-. In French law, denotes a document, or formal, solemn writing, embodying a legal attestation that something has been done, corresponding to one sense or use of the English word “act.”

Actes de naissance are the certificates of birth, and must contain the day, hour, and place of birth, together with the sex and intended christian name of the child, and the names of the parents and of the witnesses. Actes de mariage are the marriage certificates, and contain names, professions, ages, and places of birth and domicile of the two persons marrying, and of their parents; also the consent of these latter, and the mutual agreements of the intended husband and wife to take each other for better and worse, together with the usual attestations. Actes de décès are the certificates of death, which are required to be drawn up before any one may be buried. Les actes de l’état civil are public documents.

Aecte authentique /ɑkt ɔ̃tɔntyek/-. A deed executed with certain prescribed formalities, in the presence of a notary, mayor, greffier, huissier, or other functionary qualified to act in the place in which it is drawn up.

Aecte de francisation /ɑkt du frɑ̃ksəzəsɔ̃jɔ̃/-. The certificate of registration of a ship, by virtue of which its French nationality is established.

Aecte d’hérilier /ɑkt də ˈdɛrɪlje/-. Act of inheritance. Any action or fact on the part of an heir which manifests his intention to accept the succession; the acceptance may be express or tacit.

Aecte extrajudicale /ɑkt trətrwɪdəskəlɛr/-. A document served by a huissier, at the demand of one party upon another party, without legal proceedings.
ACTIO DIRECTA

Acting. Doing duty for another; officiating or holding a temporary rank or position or performing services temporarily; as, an acting captain, manager, president. Pellechhia v. Mattia, 121 N.J.L. 21, 1 A.2d 28. Performing; operating.

Acting executor. One who assumes to act as executor for a decedent, not being the executor legally appointed or the executor in fact.

Acting officer. Term is used to designate, not an appointed incumbent, but merely a locum tenens, who is performing the duties of an office to which he himself does not claim title.

Acting within scope of employment. See Scope of employment.

Act in pais /ækst in péy(s)/. An act done out of court, and not a matter of record. A deed or an assurance transacted between two or more private persons in the country, that is, according to the old common law, upon the very spot to be transferred, is matter in pais.

Actio /ækshiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action or suit; a right or cause of action. Term means both the proceeding to enforce a right in a court and the right itself which is sought to be enforced.

Actio ad exhibendum /ækshiyow ad égíbyéndam/. An action for the purpose of compelling a defendant to exhibit a thing or title in his power. It was preparatory to another action, which was always a real action in the sense of the Roman law; that is, for the recovery of a thing, whether it was movable or immovable.

Actio estimatoria; actio quanti minoris /ækshiyow íystamatóriya /ækshiyow kwóntay mó nóras/. In the criminal law, two names of an action which lay in behalf of a buyer to reduce the contract price proportionately to the defects of the object, not to cancel the sale; the judex had power, however, to cancel the sale.

Actio arbitralia /ækshiyow árbetráriya/. Action depending on the discretion of the judge. In this, unless defendant would make amends to plaintiff as dictated by the judge in his discretion, he was liable to be condemned.

Actio bona fidel /ækshiyow bóóniy fádiyay/. An action of good faith. A class of actions in which the judge might at the trial ex officio, take into account any equitable circumstances that were presented to him affecting either of the parties to the action.

Actio calunnia /ækshiyow kálámniyiy/. An action to restrain defendant from prosecuting a groundless proceeding or trumped-up charge against plaintiff. An action for malicious prosecution.

Actio civilis /ækshiyow sívalás/. In the common law, a civil action, as distinguished from a criminal action.

Actio commodati /ækshiyow kómádéyday/. Included several actions appropriate to enforce the obligations of a borrower or a lender.

Actio commodati contraria /ækshiyow kómádéyday kántrériya/. An action by the borrower against the lender, to compel the execution of the contract.
defined and recognized as actionable. See Actio utilis.

Actio empti /áéškshiyow émp(p)тай/-. An action employed in behalf of a buyer to compel a seller to perform his obligations or pay compensation; also to enforce any special agreements by him, embodied in a contract of sale.

Actio ex conducto /áéškshiyow éks kandáktow/-. An action which the bailor of a thing for hire may bring against the bailee, in order to compel him to redeliver the thing hired.

Actio ex contractu /áéškshiyow éks kontráktyuw/-. In the civil and common law, an action of contract; an action arising out of, or founded on, contract. 3 Bl.Com. 117.

Actio ex delicto /áéškshiyow éks daliktow/-. In the civil and common law, an action of tort; an action arising out of fault, misconduct, or malfeasance. 3 Bl. Comm. 117. Ex maleficio is the more common expression of the civil law; which is adopted by Bracton.

Actio exercitoria /áéškshiyow egząrstóriya/-. An action against the exercitor or employer of a vessel.

Actio ex locato /áéškshiyow éks lokwéyow/-. An action upon letting; an action which the person who let a thing for hire to another might have against the hirer.

Actio ex stipulatu /áéškshiyow éks stipyalétyuw/-. An action brought to enforce a stipulation.

Actio familie eriscunde /áéškshiyow famíliiy ársi-skándiy/-. An action for the partition of an inheritance.

Actio furti /áéškshiyow fárday/-. An action of theft; an action founded upon theft. This could be brought only for the penalty attached to the offense, and not to recover the thing stolen, for which other actions were provided. An appeal of larceny. The old process by which a thief can be pursued and the goods vindicated.

Actio honoraria /áéškshiyow (h)onórériya/-. An honorary, or praetorian action. Actiones honorariae are those forms of remedies which were gradually introduced by the praetors and adiles, by virtue of their equitable powers, in order to prevent the failure of justice which too often resulted from the employment of the actiones civilis. These were found so beneficial in practice that they eventually supplanted the old remedies, of which in the time of Justinian hardly a trace remained.

Actio in factum /áéškshiyow in fáktam/-. In action adapted to the particular case, having an analogy to some actio in jus, the latter being founded on some subsisting acknowledged law. The origin of these actions is similar to that of actions on the case at common law.

Actio in personam /áéškshiyow in parsównam/-. In the civil law, an action against the person, founded on a personal liability; an action seeking redress for the violation of a jus in personam or right available against a particular individual. See In personam.

Actio in rem /áéškshiyow in rém/-. In the civil and common law, an action for a thing; an action for the recovery of a thing possessed by another. An action for the enforcement of a right (or for redress for its invasion) which was originally available against all the world, and not in any special sense against the individual sued, until he violated it. See In rem.

Actio judicati /áéškshiyow józdakéyadý/-. In the civil law, an action instituted after four months had elapsed after the rendition of judgment, in which the judge issued his warrant to seize, first, the movables, which were sold within eight days afterwards; and then the immovables, which were delivered in pledge to the creditors, or put under the care of a curator, and if, at the end of two months, the debt was not paid, the land was sold.

Actio legis aquilae /áéškshiyow lijjas akwíliyiy/-. An action under the Aquilian law; an action to recover damages for maliciously or injuriously killing or wounding the slave or beast of another, or injuring in any way a thing belonging to another. Otherwise called damnii injuria actio.

Actio mandati /áéškshiyow mändéyadý/-. In the civil law, term included actions to enforce contracts of mandate or obligations arising out of them.

Actio mixta /áéškshiyow místá/-. A mixed action, an action brought for the recovery of a thing, or compensation for damages, and also for the payment of a penalty; partaking of the nature both of an actio in rem and in personam.

Action. Conduct; behavior; something done; the condition of acting; an act or series of acts.

Term in its usual legal sense means a suit brought in a court; a formal complaint within the jurisdiction of a court of law. Pathman Const. Co. v. Knox County Hospital Ass'n, Ind.App., 326 N.E.2d 844, 853. The legal and formal demand of one's right from another person or party made and insisted on in a court of justice. An ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. It includes all the formal proceedings in a court of justice attendant upon the demand of a right made by one person of another in such court, including an adjudication upon the right and its enforcement or denial by the court.

Merger of law and equity. In the federal courts, and most state courts, there is only one form of action—civil action—which embraces all actions formerly denominated suits in equity and actions at law. While there has been a merger of law and equity for procedural purposes, substantive principles of equity still govern. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Types of action. Such phrase is used to describe action for damages as distinguished from suit in equity for equitable relief. This distinction however has been abolished under Fed. Rules of Civil Procedure and in those states which have adopted Rules tracking the Federal Rules. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.
Action for death. See Wrongful death action.

Action in equity. Action in which person seeks equitable relief as distinguished from damages; e.g. injunction or specific performance of real estate agreement. Term has been abolished by Fed. Rules of Civil Procedure (Rule 2) in favor of single form of action—civil action—which embraces both law and equity actions.

Action in personam. See In personam.

Action in rem. See In rem.

Action quasi in rem. See In rem.

Civil actions are such as lie in behalf of persons to enforce their rights or obtain redress of wrongs in their relation to individuals. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Class actions. See Class or representative action;

Derivative action.

Common law actions are such as will lie, on the particular facts, at common law, without the aid of a statute. Actions are called, in common-law practice, ex contractu when they arise out of a contract, and ex delicto when they arise out of a tort. If a cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is “ex contractu”; and, if it arises from breach of duty growing out of contract, it is “ex delicto”.

Criminal actions are such as are instituted by the sovereign power (i.e. government), for the purpose of punishing or preventing offenses against the public.

Local action. See Local action.

Mixed actions partake of twofold nature of real and personal actions, having for their object the demand and restitution of real property and also personal damages for a wrong sustained. In the civil law, an action in which some specific thing was demanded, and also some personal obligation claimed to be performed; or, in other words, an action which proceeded both in rem and in personam.

Penal actions are such as are brought, either by the state or by an individual under permission of a statute, to enforce a penalty imposed by law for the commission of a prohibited act.

Personal action. In civil law, an action in personam seeks to enforce an obligation imposed on the defendant by his contract or delict; that is, it is the contention that he is bound to transfer some dominion or to perform some service or to repair some loss. In common law, an action brought for the recovery of some debt or for damages for some personal injury, in contradistinction to the old real actions, which related to real property only. An action which can be brought only by the person himself who is injured, and not by his representatives. See In personam.

Popular actions, in English usage, were those actions which were given upon the breach of a penal statute, and which any man that will may sue on account of the king and himself, as the statute allowed at the case required. Because the action was not given to one especially, but generally to any that would prosecute, it was called “action popular;” and, from the words used in the process (qui tam pro domino rege sequitur quam pro se ipso, who sues as well for the king as for himself) it was called a qui tam action.

Real actions. At common law, one brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. They are droital when they are based upon the right of property, and possessory when based upon the right of possession. They are either writs of right; writs of entry upon disseisin (which lie in the per, the per et cui, or the post), intrusion, or alienation; writs ancestral possessory, as mort d’ancestor, aiel, besaiei, cossiggae, or nuper obit. The former class was divided into droital, founded upon demandant’s own seisin, and ancestor droital upon the demandant’s claim in respect of a mere right descended to him from an ancestor. Possessory actions were divided in the same way—as to the demandant’s own seisin and as to that of his ancestor. Among the civilians, real actions, otherwise called “vindications,” were those in which a man demanded something that was his own. They were founded on dominion, or jus in re. The real actions of the Roman law were not, like the real actions of the common law, confined to real estate, but they included personal, as well as real, property. See In rem.

Statutory actions are such as can only be based upon the particular statutes creating them. Contrast Common law actions, supra.

Transitory actions are those founded upon a cause of action not necessarily referring to or arising in any particular locality. Their characteristic feature is that the right of action follows the person of the defendant. Actions are “transitory” when the transactions relied on might have taken place anywhere, and are “local” when they could not occur except in some particular place; the distinction being in the nature of the subject of the injury, and not in the means used or the place at which the cause of action arises. The test of whether an action is local or transitory is whether the injury is done to a subject-matter which, in its nature, could not arise beyond the locality of its situation, in contradistinction to the subject causing the injury. Actions triable where defendant resides are termed “transitory” and those triable where the subject-matter is situated are termed “local.”

Actionable. That for which an action will lie, furnishing legal ground for an action. (See Cause of action; Justiciable controversy.)

Actionable fraud. Deception practiced in order to induce another to part with property or surrender some legal right. A false representation made with an intention to deceive; may be committed by stating what is known to be false or by professing knowledge of the truth of a statement which is false, but in either case, the essential ingredient is a falsehood uttered with intent to deceive. To constitute “actionable fraud,” it must appear that defendant made a material representation; that it was false; that when he made it he knew it was false, or made it recklessly without any knowledge of its truth and as a positive assertion; that he made it with intention that it should be acted on by plaintiff; that plaintiff acted in reliance on it; and that plaintiff thereby suffered injury. Vertes v. GAC Properties, Inc., D.C.Fla., 337 F.Supp. 256, 266. Essential elements are representation, falsity, scienter, deception, and injury. See Fraud.
ACTIONABLE MISREPRESENTATION

Actionable misrepresentation. A false statement respecting a fact material to the contract and which is influential in procuring it. See Fraud; Misrepresentation.

Actionable negligence. The breach or nonperformance of a legal duty, through neglect or carelessness, resulting in damage or injury to another. It is failure of duty, omission of something which ought to have been done, or doing of something which ought not to have been done, or which reasonable man, guided by considerations which ordinarily regulate conduct of human affairs, would or would not do. Essential elements are failure to exercise due care, injury, or damage, and proximate cause. See Negligence.

Actionable nuisance. Anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights. Miller v. City of Dayton, 70 Ohio App. 173, 41 N.E.2d 728, 730. Anything injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property. See Nuisance.

Actionable per quod. Words actionable only on allegation and proof of special damage. Knapp v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 111 Colo. 492, 144 P.2d 981, 984. Words not actionable per se upon their face, but only in consequence of extrinsic facts showing circumstances under which they were said or the damages resulting to slandered party therefrom. Not injurious on their face in their usual and natural signification, but only so in consequence of extrinsic facts and requiring innuendo. See Libelous per quod.

Actionable per se. Words in themselves libelous or slanderous. Knapp v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 111 Colo. 492, 144 P.2d 981, 984. Words which law presumes must actually, proximately and necessarily damage defendant for which general damages are recoverable and whose injurious character is a fact of common notoriety, established by the general consent of men, necessarily importing damage. Actions based on such words require no proof of damages. Words actionable per se include imputation of crime, a loathsome disease, unchastity, or words affecting plaintiff's business, trade, profession, office or calling. See Libelous per se.

Actionable tort. To constitute an "actionable tort," there must be a legal duty, imposed by statute or otherwise, owing by defendant to the one injured, and in the absence of such duty damage caused is "injury without wrong" or "damnum absque injuria." Coleman v. California Yearly Meeting of Friends Church, 27 Cal.App.2d 579, 81 P.2d 469, 470. See Tort.

Actionable words. In law of libel and slander, such words as naturally imply damage. See Libel; Slander.

Actionable wrong. Committed when a responsible person has neglected to use a reasonable degree of care for protection of another person from such injury as under existing circumstances should reasonably have been foreseen as a proximate consequence of that negligence.

Actionare /aksh(y)aneri/. L. Lat. (From actio, an action.) To bring an action; to prosecute; or sue.

Actionary /akshan(ary)/. A foreign commercial term for the proprietor of an action or share of a public company's stock; a stockholder.

Actio negatoria (or negativa) /akshiyow negatowrya /"negatowrya/. An action brought to repley a claim of the defendant to a servitude in the plaintiff's land. See Actio confessoria.

Actio negotiorum gestorum /akshiyow nagowshyorum jestowrom/. Included actions between principal and agent and other parties to an engagement, whereby one person undertook the transaction of business for another.

Actiones legis /akshiyowlyiz lyiyas/. In the Roman law, legal or lawful action; actions of or at law (legitime actiones).

Actiones nominatae /akshiyowlyiz nomaneeydiy/. (Lat. named actions). In the English chancery, writs for which there were precedents. The statute of Westminster, 2, c. 24, gave chancery authority to form new writs in consimilli casu; hence the action on the case.

Action ex delicto /akshen ekks daliktow/. An action arising from a breach of duty growing out of contract.

Action for accounting. Action in equity based on inadequacy of legal remedy and particularly applicable to mutual and complicated accounts and where confidential or fiduciary relationship exists. Action to adjust mutual accounts and to strike a balance.

Action for money had and received. Action in assumpsit based upon promise to repay implied by law, and in respect of limitation is a stated or liquidated account. Action brought where one person has received money or its equivalent under such circumstances that in equity and good conscience he ought not to retain it and in justice it belongs to another. Interstate Life & Accident Co. v. Cook, 19 Tenn.App. 290, 86 S.W.2d 887, 891.

Action for pointing /akshen for pindig/. An action by a creditor to obtain a sequestration of the rents of land and the goods of his debtor for the satisfaction of his debt, or to enforce a distress.

Action in personam. See In personam.

Action in rem. See In rem.

Action of assise /akshen av asayz/. A real action at common law which proved the title of the demandant, merely by showing his ancestor's possession.

Action of assumpsit. See Assumpsit.

Action of book debt. A form of common law action for the recovery of claims, such as are usually evidenced by a book-account.

Action of contract. An action brought to enforce rights whereof the contract is the evidence, and usually the sufficient evidence.
Action of writ. A phrase in common law pleading used when a defendant pleads some matter by which he shows that the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ sued upon, although it may be that he is entitled to another writ or action for the same matter.

Actio non /ækshiyou nɔn/. In the common law pleading, the Latin name of that part of a special plea which follows next after the statement of appearance and defense, and declares that the plaintiff "ought not to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against" the defendant (in Latin, actionem non habere debet).

Actio non accretit infra sex annos /ækshiyou nɔn əkriˈvɛt ɪnˈfɾə ˈseks ənəʊs/. The name of the plea of the statute of limitations, when the defendant alleges that the plaintiff's action has not accrued within six years.

Actio non datur non damnificato /ækshiyou nɔn ˈdɛtər nɔn ˈdɛmənfəkˈɛdəʊw/. An action is not given to one who is not injured.

Actio non facit reum, nisi mens sīt rea /ækshiyou nɔn feɪˈsɛt ˈriːəm, ˈnɛsɪ ˈmens sɪt ˈriːə/. An act does not make one guilty, unless the intention be bad.

Action on the case. A common law species of personal action of formerly extensive application, otherwise called "trespass on the case," or simply "case," from the circumstance of the plaintiff's whole case or cause of complaint being set forth at length in the original writ by which formerly it was always commenced. In its most comprehensive signification it includes assumptio as well as an action in form ex delicto; though when it is mentioned it is usually understood to mean an action in form ex delicto. It is founded on the common law or upon acts of Parliament, and lies generally to recover damages for torts not committed with force, actual or implied; or having been occasioned by force where the matter affected was not tangible, or the injury was not immediate but consequential; or where the interest in the property was only in reversion, in all of which cases trespass is not sustainable. In the progress of judicial contestation it was discovered that there was a mass of tortious wrongs unattended by direct and immediate force, or where the force, though direct, was not expended on an existing right of present enjoyment, for which the then known forms of action furnished no redress. The action on the case was instituted to meet this want. And wrongs which will maintain an action on the case are frequently committed in the nonobservance of duties, which are but the implication of contract obligation, duties of requisite skill, fidelity, diligence, and a proper regard for the rights of others, implied in every obligation to serve another. If the cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is "ex contractu"; but if the cause of action arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract, it is in form ex delicto and case. When there is a contract, either express or implied, from which a common-law duty results, an action on the case lies for the breach of that duty. Such form of action no longer exists under Code and Rule pleading. See Assumpsit.

Actio non ulterior /ækshiyou nɔn ʊlˈtɪəriəs/. In English pleading, a name given to the distinctive clause in the plea to the further maintenance of the action, introduced in place of the plea puis darrein continuance; the averment being that the plaintiff ought not further (ulterius) to have or maintain his action.

Actio noxalis /ækshiyou noksəˈleɪs/. In civil law, a noxal action; an action which lay against a master for a crime committed or injury done by his slave; and in which the master had the alternative either to pay for the damage done or to deliver up the slave to the complaining party. So called from noxa, the offense or injury committed.

Action quasi in rem /ækʃən kwɪˈɛs ɪn rɛm/. An action brought against persons which only seeks to subject certain property of those persons to discharge of claims asserted and judgment therein is only conclusive between parties and their privies. Tobin v. McClellan, 225 Ind. 335, 75 N.E.2d 149, 151. See In rem.

Action redhibitory /ækʃən ˈrɛd(ə)hɪˈbɪt(ə)ri/. See Redhibitory action.

Action to quiet title. One in which plaintiff asserts his own estate and declares generally that defendant claims some estate in the land, without defining it, and avers that the claim is without foundation, and calls on defendant to set forth the nature of his claim, so that it may be determined by decree. It differs from a "suit to remove a cloud," in that plaintiff therein declares on his own title, and also avers the source and nature of defendant's claim, points out its defect, and prays that it may be declared void as a cloud on plaintiff's estate. It embraces every sort of a claim whereby the plaintiff might be deprived of his property or his title clouded or its value depreciated, or whereby the plaintiff might be inconvenienced or damned by assertion of an outstanding title already held or to grow out of the adverse pretension. Bank of American Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Town of Atherton, 60 Cal.App.2d 268, 140 P.2d 678, 680.

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda /ækshiyouˈwənəm jɛnərə məksəmɪj sɛnt ˈsərvəndə/. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved.

Actio perpetua /ækshiyou pɜrˈpɛktʃuə/. An action without limitation period.

Actio personalis /ækshiyou pəˈɜrsənəlɪs/. In the civil and common law, a personal action. See In personam.

Actio personalis mortitur cum persona /ækshiyou pəˈɜrsənəlɪs mɔrˈtɪtər kəm ˈpɜrsənən/. A personal right of action dies with the person. The maxim was originally applied to almost every form of action, whether arising out of contract or tort, but the common law was modified by the Statute of 4 Edward the III. Momand v. Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation, D.C.Ok., 37 F.Supp. 649, 652.

Actio pignorativi /ækshiyou ˈpɪŋnərətɪvɪʃiə/. An action of pledge; an action founded on the contract of pledge (pignus).

Actio penalis /ækshiyou ˈpɪnləs/. Called also actio ex delicto. An action in which a penalty was recovered of the delinquent.
Actiones poenales and actiones mixtæ comprehended cases of injuries, for which the civil law permitted redress by private action, but which modern civilization universally regards as crimes; that is, offenses against society at large, and punished by proceedings in the name of the state alone. Thus, theft, receiving stolen goods, robbery, malicious mischief, and the murder or negligent homicide of a slave (in which case an injury to property was involved), gave rise to private actions for damages against the delinquent.

Actio poenalis in hæredem non datur, nisi forte ex damno harrydam nòs déydar nåyasy fördiény ëks dámnnow lókypadystar haryyz fàktas sit. A penal action is not given against an heir, unless, indeed, such heir is benefited by the wrong.

Actio prejudicialis /ækšiyow prijyuwdishiyélə/. A preliminary or preparatory action. An action instituted for the determination of some preliminary matter on which other litigated matters depend, or for the determination of some point or question arising in another or principal action; and so called from its being determined before (prius, or pre judicari).

Actio prescriptis verbis /ækšiyow praskrïptas værbəs/. A form of action which derived its force from continued usage or the responsa prudentium, and was founded on the unwritten law. The distinction between this action and an actio in factum is said to be, that the latter was founded not on usage or the unwritten law, but by analogy to or on the equity of some subsisting law.

Actio prætoria /ækšiyow pratɔriya/. A prætorian action; one introduced by the prætor, as distinguished from the more ancient actio civillis (q.v.).

Actio pro socio /ækšiyow prɔw sóweshiyow/. An action of partnership. An action brought by one partner against his associates to compel them to carry out the terms of the partnership agreement.

Actio publiciana /ækšiyow pɔbjulishiyéyna/. An action which lay for one who had lost a thing of which he had bona fide obtained possession, before he had gained a property in it, in order to have it restored, under color that he had obtained a property in it by prescription. It was an honorary action, and derived its name from the prætor Publicius, by whose edict it was first given.

Actio quaellibet in sua via /ækšiyow kwieljəbet in s(y)uwa váya/. Every action proceeds in its own way.

Actio quod Jussu /ækšiyow kwɔd jəsysu/. An action given against a master, founded on some business done by his slave, acting under his order (jussu).

Actio quod metus causa /ækšiyow kwɔd médəs kɔza/. An action granted to one who had been compelled by unlawful force, or fear (metus causa) that was not groundless (metus probabilitis or justus) to deliver, sell, or promise a thing to another.

Actio reæls /ækšiyow riviyélas/. A real action. The proper term in the civil law was rei vindicatio.

Actio redhibitoria /ækšiyow rad(h)ibɔriya/. An action to cancel a sale in consequence of defects in the thing sold. It was prosecuted to compel complete restitution to the seller of the thing sold, with its produce and accessories, and to give the buyer back the price, with interest, as an equivalent for the restitution of the produce. See Redhibitory action.

Actio rerum amotarum /ækšiyow rirm ɛymology-tərum/. An action for things removed; an action which, in cases of divorce, lay for a husband against a wife, to recover things carried away by the latter, in contemplation of such divorce. It also lay for the wife against the husband in such cases.

Actio rescissoria /ækšiyow rɛsissɔriya/. An action for restoring plaintiff to a right or title which he has lost by prescription, in a case where the equities are such that he should be relieved from the operation of the prescription. An action to rescind a prescriptive title by one who was entitled to exemption from the prescription law, as a minor, etc.

Actio serviana /ækšiyow sərviyέna/. An action which lay for the lessor of a farm, or rural estate, to recover the goods of the lessee or farmer, which were pledged or bound for the rent.

Actio stricti Jurs /ækšiyow striktay jurs/. An action of strict right. The class of civil law personal actions, which were adjudged only by the strict law, and in which the judge was limited to the precise language of the formula, and had no discretionary power to regard the bona fides of the transaction.

Actio tæmoralis /ækšiyow tɛmpərəfyəsə/. An action which must be brought within a limited time. See Limitation.

Actio tutele /ækšiyow t(y)uwtiɛli/. Action founded on the duties or obligations arising on the relation analogous to that of guardian and ward.

Actio utilis /ækšiyow yuwdəla/. In the civil law, a beneficial action or equitable action. An action founded on equity instead of strict law, and available for those who had equitable rights or the beneficial ownership of property. Actions are divided into actions directæ or utiles. The former are founded on certain legal obligations which from their origin were accurately defined and recognized as actionable. The latter were formed analogically in imitation of the former. They were permitted in legal obligations for which the actions directæ were not originally intended, but which resembled the legal obligations which formed the basis of the direct action.

Actio venditi /ækšiyow vɛndədəyi/. An action employed in behalf of a seller, to compel a buyer to pay the price, or perform any special obligations embodied in a contract of sale.

Actio vi honorum raptorum /ækšiyow vəy bownikəm raptɔrəm/. An action for goods taken by force; a species of mixed action, which lay for a party whose goods or movables (bona) had been taken from him by force (vi), to recover the things so taken, together with a penalty of triple the value. Bracton describes it as lying de rebus mobilibus vi aлатиis sive robbatis (for movable things taken away by force, or robbed).
ACT OF PARLIAMENT

Actio vulgäris /äkšiowvalgérä/. A legal action; a common action. Sometimes used for actio directa.

Active. That is in action; that demands action; actually subsisting; the opposite of passive. An active debt is one which draws interest. An active trust is a confidence connected with a duty. An active use is a present legal estate.

Active concealment. Term implies a purpose or design accomplished by words or acts, while passive concealment consists in mere silence where there is a duty to speak. Vend v. Duenke, Mo.App., 210 S.W.2d 692, 699. Concealment becomes a fraud where it is effected by misleading and deceptive talk, acts, or conduct, where it is accompanied by misrepresentations, or where, in addition to a party's silence, there is any statement, word, or act on his part which tends affirmatively to a suppression of the truth. Such conduct is designated active concealment. Equitable Life Ins. Co. of Iowa v. Halsey, Stuart & Co., C.C.A.III., 112 F.2d 302, 308.

Active negligence. A term of extensive meaning embracing many occurrences that would fall short of willful wrongdoing, or of crass negligence, for example, all inadvertent acts causing injury to others, resulting from failure to exercise ordinary care; likewise, all acts the effects of which are misjudged or unforeseen, through want of proper attention, or reflection, and hence the term covers the acts of willful wrongdoing and also those which are not of that character. Cohen v. Noel, Tenn.App., 104 S.W.2d 1001, 1005.

Active negligence denotes some positive act or some failure in duty of operation which is equivalent of a positive act and is omission of due care and affirmative action by person in control, or negligence occurring in connection with activities conducted on the premises. Pachowitz v. Milwaukee & Suburban Transport Corp., 56 Wis.2d 383, 202 N.W.2d 268, 275. Difference between "active" and "passive" negligence is that one is only passively negligent if he merely fails to act in fulfillment of duty of care which law imposes upon him, while one is actively negligent if he participates in some manner in conduct or omission which caused injury. King v. Timber Structures, Inc. of Cal., 240 C.A.2d 178, 49 Cal.Rptr. 414, 417.

See also Negligence.

Active trust. See Trust.

Act malum in se. See Malum in se.

Act malum prohibitum. See Malum prohibitum.

Act of attainer. A legislative act, attainting a person. See Attainer.

Act of bankruptcy. Any act which renders a person liable to be proceeded against involuntarily as a bankrupt, or for which he may be adjudged bankrupt.

The Bankruptcy Act, § 3 (11 U.S.C.A. § 21 (1952)) lists the following as acts of bankruptcy: Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed any part of his property, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a lien upon any of his property through legal proceedings and not having vacated or discharged such lien within thirty days from the date thereof or at least five days before the date set for any sale or other disposition of such property; or (4) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or (5) while insolvent or unable to pay his debts as they mature, procured, permitted, or suffered voluntarily or involuntarily the appointment of a receiver or trustee to take charge of his property; or (6) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt. The new Bankruptcy Act (effective Oct. 1, 1979) no longer provides for specific acts of bankruptcy but rather provides for involuntary bankruptcy when the debtor, in general, is not paying his debts as they become due. Bankruptcy Act, § 303.

Act of Elizabeth. See Act of supremacy.

Act of God. An act occasioned exclusively by violence of nature without the interference of any human agency. It means a natural necessity proceeding from physical causes alone without the intervention of man. It is an act, event, happening, or occurrence, due to natural causes and inevitable accident, or disaster; a natural and inevitable necessity which implies entire exclusion of all human agency which operates without interference or aid from man and which results from natural causes and is in no sense attributable to human agency. It is an accident which could not have been occasioned by human agency but proceeded from physical causes alone. Watts v. Smith, D.C.App., 226 A.2d 160, 162; Middaugh v. U. S., D.C.Wyo., 293 F.Supp. 977, 980. See Inevitable accident; Perils of the sea; Vis major.

Act of grace. The term is often used to designate a general act of parliament, originating with the crown, such as has often been passed at the commencement of a new reign, or the coming of age or marriage of a sovereign, or at the close of a period of civil troubles, declaring pardon or amnesty to numerous offenders. See also Days of grace; Grace period.

Act of insolvency. Within the meaning of the national currency act, an act which shows a bank to be insolvent, such as nonpayment of its circulating notes, bills of exchange, or certificates of deposit; failure to make good the impairment of capital, or to keep good its surplus or reserve; in fact, any act which shows that the bank is unable to meet its liabilities as they mature, or to perform those duties which the law imposes for the purpose of sustaining its credit. Kullman & Co. v. Woolley, C.C.A.Miss., 83 F.2d 129, 132; Garvin v. Chadwick Realty Corporation, 212 Ind. 499, 9 N.E.2d 268, 271.

Act of law. The operation of fixed legal rules upon given facts or occurrences, producing consequences independent of the design or will of the parties concerned; as distinguished from "act of parties" or an act performed by judicial authority which prevents or precludes a party from fulfilling a contract or other engagement. See Act in pais.

Act of parliament. A statute; a law made by the British sovereign, with the advice and consent of the lords and the commons, in parliament assembled. Acts of parliament form the leges scriptae, i.e., the written laws of the kingdom. Such acts are of three kinds: public, local or special, private or personal.

Act of providence. An accident against which ordinary skill and foresight could not guard. Equivalent to "act of God" (q.v.).

Act of sale. An official record of a sale of property, made by a notary who writes down the agreement of the parties as stated by them, and which is then signed by the parties and attested by witnesses.

Act of settlement. The English statute (12 & 13 Wm. III, c. 2) limiting the crown to the Princess Sophia of Hanover, and to the heirs of her body being Protestants. 1 Bl.Comm. 128. One clause of it made the tenure of judges' office for life or good behavior independent of the crown.

Act of state. An act done by the sovereign power of a country, or by its delegate, within the limits of the power vested in him. An act of state cannot be questioned or made the subject of legal proceedings in a court of law. See Act of state doctrine.

Act of supremacy. An act of 26 Hen. VIII, c. 1, and also 1 Eliz., c. 1, which recognized the king as the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England having full power to correct all errors, heresies, abuses, offenses, contempts and enormities. The oath, taken under the act, denies to the Pope any other authority than that of the Bishop of Rome.

Act of uniformity. The English statute of 13 & 14 Car. II, c. 4, enacting that the book of common prayer, as then recently revised, should be used in every parish church and other place of public worship, and otherwise ordaining a uniformity in religious services, etc.

Acton Burnel, statute of. In English law, a statute, otherwise called Statutum Mercatorum or de Mercatoribus, the statute of the merchants, made at a parliament held at the castle or village of Acton Burnel in Shropshire, in the 11th year of the reign of Edward I. It was a statute for the collection of debts, the earliest of its class, being enacted in 1283. A further statute for the same object, and known as De Mercatoribus, was enacted 13 Edw. I, (c. 3). See Statute merchant.

Act on petition. A form of summary proceeding formerly in use in the high court of admiralty, in England, in which the parties stated their respective cases briefly, and supported their statements by affidavit.

Actor. One who acts. The term is used in the Restatement of Torts, Second, to designate either the person whose conduct is in question as subjecting him to liability toward another, or as precluding him from recovering against another whose tortious conduct is a legal cause of the actor's injury. Sec. 2.

Old European law. A patron, proctor, advocate, or pleader; one who acted for another in legal matters; one who represented a party and managed his cause. An attorney, bailiff, or steward; one who managed or acted for another. The Scotch "doer" is the literal translation.

Roman law. One who acted for another; one who attended to another's business; a manager or agent. A slave who attended to, transacted, or superintended his master's business or affairs, received and paid out moneys, and kept accounts. The word has a variety of closely-related meanings, very nearly corresponding with manager. Thus, actor domini, manager of his master's farm; actor ecclesiae, manager of church property; actores provinciarum, tax-gatherers, treasurers, and managers of the public debt.

Actor ecclesiae—An advocate for a church; one who protects the temporal interests of a church. Actor villa was the steward or head-bailiff of a town or village.

Plaintiff or complainant. In a civil or private action the plaintiff was often called by the Romans "petitor"; in a public action (causa publica) he was called "accusator." The defendant was called "reus," both in private and public causes. This term, however, might signify either party, as might be concluded from the word itself. In a private action, the defendant was often called "adversarius," but either party might be called so.

Also, the term is used of a party who, for the time being, sustains the burden of proof, or has the initiative in the suit.

Actore non probante reus absolvitur /æk'təri neɪn prɔ:bənte riːs əbˈsəlvɪtər/. When the plaintiff does not prove his case the defendant is acquitted (or absolved).

Actori incumbit onus probandi /ækˈtɔrɪ ɪnˈkɜmbɪt əʊnəs prəˈbændɪ/. The burden of proof rests on the plaintiff (or on the party who advances a proposition affirmatively.)

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit, non est audien- dus /ækˈtɔr kuː kəntra ˈrɛɡʒʊˌlæm kwɪd ædˈdʌksət, nɔn eːst ˈɔdiərəndəs/. A plaintiff (or pleader) is not to be heard who has advanced anything against authority (or against the rule).

Actor sequitor forum rei /ækˈtɔr ˈsɛkwɪtər fɔːrəm ˈriːj/. According as rei is intended as the genitive of res, a thing, or reus, a defendant, this phrase means: The plaintiff follows the forum of the property in suit, or the forum of the defendant's residence.

Actrix /ˈæktrɪks/. Lat. A female actor; a female plaintiff.

Acts of possession. To constitute adverse possession, acts of possession must be: (1) hostile or adverse, (2) actual, (3) visible, notorious, and exclusive, (4) continuous, and (5) under claim of ownership. Bilyeu v. Plant, 75 Ill.App.2d 109, 220 N.E.2d 513. See Adverse possession.

Actual. Real; substantial; existing presently in act; having a valid objective existence as opposed to that which is merely theoretical or possible. Opposed to potential, possible, virtual, theoretical, hypothetical, or ordinary. Slang: real as opposed to constructive or speculative; something existing in act. It is used as a legal term in contradistinction to virtual or constructive as of possession or occupation. Actually is opposed to seemingly, pretendedly, or feignedly, as actually engaged in farming means really, truly in fact. As to actual Bias; Damages; Delivery; Fraud; Malice; Notice; Occupation; Ouster; Possession; Residence; Seisin; Total loss, see those titles.

Actual authority. In the law of agency, such authority as a principal intentionally confers on the agent, or intentionally or by want of ordinary care allows the agent to believe himself to possess. National Cash Register Co. v. Wichita Frozen Food Lockers, Tex. Civ.App., 172 S.W.2d 781, 787. Includes both express and implied authority.

Actual bias. See Bias.

Actual cash value. The fair or reasonable cash price for which the property could be sold in the market in the ordinary course of business, and not at forced sale. The price it will bring in a fair market after reasonable efforts to find a purchaser who will give the highest price. What property is worth in money, allowing for depreciation. Ordinarily, "actual cash value", "fair market value", and "market value" are synonymous terms. See Actual value; Fair market value; Fair value.

Actual change of possession. In statutes of frauds, an open, visible and unequivocal change of possession, manifested by the usual outward signs, as distinguished from a merely formal or constructive change.

Actual controversy. See Case (Cases and controversies).

Actual cost. The actual price paid for goods by a party, in the case of a real bona fide purchase, which may not necessarily be the market value of the goods. It is a general or descriptive term which may have varying meanings according to the circumstances in which it is used. It imports the exact sum expended or loss sustained rather than the average or proportional part of the cost. Its meaning may be restricted to materials, labor, and overhead or extended to other items.

Actual damages. Compensation for actual injuries or loss. Chappell v. City of Springfield, Mo., 423 S.W.2d 810, 814. Term used to denote the type of damage award as well as the nature of injury for which recovery is allowed; thus, actual damages flowing from injury in fact are to be distinguished from damages which are nominal, exemplary or punitive. Rasm v. Retail Credit Co., 87 Wash.2d 516, 554 P.2d 1041, 1049.

Actual delivery. See Delivery.

Actual eviction. An actual expulsion of the tenant out of all or some part of the demised premises. A physical ouster or possession of the thing granted or some substantial part thereof. Cauley v. Northern Trust Co., 315 Ill.App. 307, 43 N.E.2d 147, 155, 315. See Constructive eviction; Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Summary process.

Actual fraud. See Fraud.

Actual loss. One resulting from the real and substantial destruction of the property insured.

Actual malice. See Malice.

Actual market value. In custom laws, the price at which merchandise is freely offered for sale to all purchasers; the price which the manufacturer or owner would have received for merchandise, sold in the ordinary course of trade in the usual wholesale quantities.

Actual notice. See Notice.

Actual possession. See Possession.

Actual practice. Active, open and notorious engagement in business, vocation or profession as opposed to casual or clandestine practice. State ex rel. Laughlin v. Washington State Bar Ass'n, 26 Wash.2d 914, 176 P.2d 301, 309.

Actual residence. The abode, where one actually lives, not mere naked legal residence. In re McGrath, 243 App.Div. 803, 278 N.Y.S. 135. See Domicile; Residence.

Actual use. Term "actual use" in automobile liability policy providing coverage for nonowned automobile if the actual operation or actual use of automobile by relative of insured is with permission of owner means present or active use or a use existing in fact or reality as distinguished from an imputed or constructive use. United Services Auto. Ass'n v. United States Fire Ins. Co., 36 C.A.3d 769, 111 Cal.Rptr. 595, 596.

Actual value. Actual value to be awarded in condemnation proceeding is price that would probably result from negotiations between willing seller and willing buyer. "Actual value," "market value," "fair market value," "just compensation" and the like may be used as convertible terms. "Saleable value," "actual value," "cash value," and other like terms used in directions to tax assessing officers, all mean generally the same thing. In re Lang Body Co., C.C.A. Ohio, 92 F.2d 338, 340.

Actual violence. An assault with actual violence is an assault with physical force put in action, exerted upon the person assaulted. The term violence is synonymous with physical force, and the two are used interchangeably in relation to assaults.

Actual table /ækju₁wɛriʊnl tɛɪbəl/. A form of organized statistical data which indicates the life expectancy of a person and which is admissible in evidence through an expert witness. Leave v. Boston Elevated Railway, 306 Mass. 391, 397, 28 N.E.2d 483. Such tables are used by insurance companies in determining premiums. See also American experience table of mortality; Life tables; Mortality tables.
Actuary /akchuwérýias/. In Roman law, a notary or clerk. One who drew the acts or statutes, or who wrote in brief the public acts. An officer who had charge of the public baths; an officer who received the money for the soldiers, and distributed it among them; a notary. See also Actor.

Actum /áktem/. Lat. A deed; something done.

Actus /ákta/. In the civil law, an act or action. Non tantum verbis, sed etiam actu; not only by words, but also by act.

A species of right of way, consisting in the right of driving cattle, or a carriage, over the land subject to the servitude. It is sometimes translated a “road,” and included the kind of way termed “iter,” or path.

In old English law, an act of parliament; a statute. A distinction, however, was sometimes made between actus and statutum. Actus parliamenti was an act made by the lords and commons; and it became statutum, when it received the king’s consent.

Actus curie neminem gravabit /ákta kyúriyiy némñan grávenýat/. An act of the court shall prejudice no man. Where a delay in an action is the act of the court, neither party shall suffer for it.

Actus Dei nemini est damnosus /ákta diýay némñan yést damnówassas/. The act of God is hurtful to no one. That is, a person cannot be prejudiced or held responsible for an accident occurring without his fault and attributable to the “act of God.” See Act of God.

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam /ákta diýay némñanay féysaý anjúriyam/. The act of God does injury to no one. 2 Bl. Comm. 122. A thing which is inevitable by the act of God, which no industry can avoid, nor policy prevent, will not be construed to the prejudice of any person in whom there was no laches.

Actus inceptus, cujus perfectio pendet ex voluntate partium, revocari potest; si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiae persona, vel ex contingenti, revocari non potest /ákta insépsťas, kyúwyas pérfeňkshiyow pénásad éks yólnántydi társhiyiy parsovównyi, vël éks kóntinjéntáy, révákéray nón pówdast/. An act already begun, the completion of which depends on the will of the parties, may be revoked; but if it depend on the will of a third person, or on a contingency, it cannot be revoked.

Actus judiciarius coram non judice irritus habetur, de ministerial autem a quocunque provenit ratum esto /ákta jadishýjériyiy kórm nón júwadisy irhádshá habiéydr, diy ministiriéyay òdami éy kwówákňkwi práfýnay réydam éstow/. A judicial act by a judge without jurisdiction is void; but a ministerial act, from whomsoever proceeding, may be ratified.

Actus legis nemini est damnosus /ákta liýjas némñanay yést damnówwasas/. The act of the law is hurtful to no one. An act in law shall prejudice no man.

Actus legis nemini facit injuriam /ákta liýjas némñanay féysaý anjúriyam/. The act of the law does injury to no one.
Ad audiendum considerationem curie /ād ōdiyēndám kansidaryeshōynam kyūriyiy/. To hear the judgment of the court.

Ad audiendum et determinandum /ād ōdiyēndám et datārmanēndám/. To hear and determine. 4 Bl.
Comm. 278.

Ad barram /ād bārām/. To the bar; at the bar.

Ad barram evocatus /ād bārām iyovokėydas/. Called to the bar.

Ad campl partem /ād kämpay párdam/. For a share of the field or land, for champert.

Ad captum vulgi /ād kāptem vāłjy/. Adapted to the common understanding.

Ad coelum doctrine /ād sīlyam dōktran/. A person owns the space above his real estate to the extent that no one may acquire a right to such air space that will limit the owner's enjoyment of it. This doctrine has been rejected by most courts. U. S. v. Caubby, 328 U.S. 256, 66 S.Ct. 1062, 90 L.Ed. 1206. Literally, to heaven. See Air rights.

Ad colligendum /ād kōlajēndám/. For collecting; as an administrator or trustee ad colligendum.

Ad colligendum bona defuncti /ād kōlajēndám bówna dāfāktay/. For collecting the goods of the deceased.
See Administration of estates.

Ad communem legem /ād kamyūwnam liyjam/. At common law, the name of a writ of entry (now obsolete) brought by the reversioners after the death of the life tenant, for the recovery of lands wrongfully alienated by him.

Ad commune nocumentum /ād kamuywniy nōkyaméntam/. To the common nuisance.

Ad comparendum /ād kōmpārēndám/. To appear. Ad comparendum, et ad standum juri, to appear and to stand to the law, or abide the judgment of the court.

Ad damnum /ād(d) dāmnam/. In pleading, "To the damage." The technical name of that clause of the writ, declaration, or, more commonly, the complaint, which contains a statement of the plaintiff's money loss, or the damages which he claims. Fed.R.Civil P.
8(a).

Such clause informs an adversary of the maximum amount of the claim asserted without being proof of injury or of liability. Natale v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 8 App.Div. 781, 186 N.Y.S.2d 785,

Ad defendendum /ād(d) dafendēndám/. To defend. 1

Addendum /ādēndám/. A thing that is added or to be added;
a list or section consisting of added material.

Addicere /addyisary/. Lat. In the civil law, to adjudge or condemn; to assign, allot, or deliver; to sell. In the Roman law, addico was one of the three words used to express the extent of the civil jurisdiction of the praeors.

Addict. Any individual who habitually uses any narcotic drug so as to endanger the public morals, health, safety, or welfare, or who is or has been so far addicted to the use of such narcotic drugs as to have lost the power of self-control with reference to his addiction. 18 U.S.C.A. § 4251. People v. McKibben, Addictio /ādiškiyoy/. In the Roman law, the giving up to a creditor of his debtor's person by a magistrate; also the transfer of the (deceased) debtor's goods to one who assumes his liabilities.

Addictive drugs. Any drug, natural or synthetic, which causes periodic or chronic intoxication by its repeated consumption.

Ad diem /ād(d) dāyam/. At a day; at the day. Ad ailium diem, at another day. Ad certum diem, at a certain day. Solvit ad diem, he paid at or on the day.

another. Structure physically attached to or connect-671, 59 S.W.2d 1049. Extension; increase; augmentation.
Meyering v. Miller, 330 Mo. 885, 51 S.W.2d 65, 66.
That which has become united with or a part of. See Fixture.

In insurance law, the word "addition", as applied to buildings usually means a part added or joined to a main building; though the term has also been held to apply to buildings appurtenant to some other building though not actually in physical contact therewith.

At common law, whatever was added to a man's name by way of title or description. In English law, there were four kinds of additions.—additions of es-state, such as yeoman, gentleman, esquire; additions of degree, or names of dignity, as knight, earl, marquis, duke; additions of trade, mystery, or occupation, as scrivener, painter, mason, carpenter; and additions of place of residence as London, Chester, etc.

Additional. This term embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another, so as thereby to form one aggregate. Ex parte Boddie, 200 S.C. 379, 21
S.E.2d 4, 8.

Additional burden. See Eminent domain.

Additionales /ādish(y)anēyliyiy/. In the law of contracts, additional terms or propositions to be added to a former agreement.
Additional extended coverage. Insurance policy indorsement covering dwellings; covering water damage from plumbing and heating systems, vandalism and malicious mischief, glass breakage, falling trees, ice, snow, etc.

Additional instructions. Charge by judge to jury beyond the original instructions. Frequently required when the jury returns from deliberations with a question concerning the evidence, point of law, or some portion of the original charge.

Additional insured. Person(s) covered by policy in addition to the named insured; e.g. a person using another’s automobile, which is covered by liability policy containing statutory omnibus clause, only when insured’s permission is expressly or impliedly given for particular use. Stewart v. City of Rio Vista, 72 Cal.App.2d 279, 164 P.2d 274, 275.

Additional legacy. See Legacy.

Additional servitude. The imposition of a new and additional easement or servitude on land originally taken by eminent domain proceedings. A use of a different character, for which owner of property is entitled to compensation.

Additional work. Of nature involved in modifications and changes, not independent project. Maryland Casualty Co. v. City of South Norfolk, C.C.A.Va., 54 F.2d 1032, 1037. Work which results from a change or alteration in plans concerning work which has to be done under a contract, while “extra work” relates to work which is not included within the contract itself. De Martini v. Elade Realty Corp., Co.Ct., 52 N.Y.S.2d 487, 489.

Additio probat minoritatem /adsh(ly)ow prówt manóratétdam/. An addition [to a name] proves or shows minority or inferiority. That is, if it be said that a man has a fee tail, it is less than if he has the fee.

Additur /adstarr/. The power of trial court to assess damages or increase amount of an inadequate award made by jury verdict, as condition of denial of motion for new trial, with consent of defendant whether or not plaintiff consents to such action. Dorsey et al. v. Barba et al., Cal.App., 226 P.2d 677. This is not allowed in the Federal system. Dimick v. Schiedt, 293 U.S. 474, 55 S.Ct. 296, 79 L.Ed. 603.

Add on clause. A clause in an installment contract that makes earlier purchases with that firm security for new purchases.

Addone, addonne /adowniy/. L. Fr. Given to.

Address. Place where mail or other communications will reach person. Munson v. Bay State Dredging & Contracting Co., 314 Mass. 485, 50 N.E.2d 633, 636. Generally a place of business or residence.

Bill of address. Provision in Massachusetts Constitution which provides that judges are subject to removal upon the address of a majority of both houses of the legislature with approval of the Governor and the Executive Council.

Equity pleading. Part of a bill wherein is given the appropriate and technical description of the court in which the bill is filed. See Caption.

Address to the crown. In England when the royal speech has been read in Parliament, an address in answer thereto is moved in both houses. Two members are selected in each house by the administration for moving and seconding the address. Since the commencement of the session 1890–1891, it has been a single resolution expressing their thanks to the sovereign for his gracious speech.

Adduce. To present, bring forward, offer, introduce. Used particularly with reference to evidence.

Ad ea que frequentius accident jurá adaptantur /ad iy kwiy frákwensh(y)yas àksdant járu adapténtar/. Laws are adapted to those cases which most frequently occur.

Adeem. To take away, recall, or revoke. To satisfy a legacy by some gift or substituted disposition, made by the testator, in advance. Woodburn Lodge No. 102, I. O. O. F. v. Wilson, 148 Or. 150, 34 P.2d 611, 614. See Ademption.

Ad effectum /ad sëftam/. To the effect, or end. Ad effectum sequentem, to the effect following.

Adeling, or atheling /ad(æ)ling/. Noble; excellent. A title of honor among the Anglo-Saxons, properly belonging to the king’s children.

Ademption /adém(p)sh(ly)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, a revocation of a legacy; an ademption. Where it was expressly transferred from one person to another, it was called translatio.

Ademption /adém(æ)sh/-. Extinction or withdrawal of legacy by testator’s act equivalent to revocation or indicating intention to revoke. Tagnon’s Adm’x v. Tagnon, 253 Ky. 374, 69 S.W.2d 714.

Removal. Lewis v. Hill, 387 Ill. 542, 56 N.E.2d 619, 621. Testator’s giving to a legatee that which he has provided in his will, or his disposing of that part of his estate so bequeathed in such manner as to make it impossible to carry out the will. Hurley v. Schuler, 296 Ky. 118, 176 S.W.2d 275, 276. Revocation, recalling, or cancellation of a legacy, according to the apparent intention of the testator, implied by the law from acts done by him in his life, though such acts do not amount to an express revocation of it.

To take away, recall, revoke, or to satisfy legacy by some gift or substituted disposition, made by testator, in advance. In re Burnett’s Estate, 49 N.J. Super. 439, 140 A.2d 242, 244.

The act by which the testator pays to his legatee, in his life-time, a general legacy which by his will he had proposed to give him at his death; and the act by which a specific legacy has become inoperative on account of the testator having parted with the subject. Dillender v. Wilson, 228 Ky. 758, 16 S.W.2d 173, 174.

See Advancement.

Adeo /adshiyow/. Lat. So, as. Adeo plene et integre, as fully and entirely.

 Adequate. Sufficient; commensurate; equally efficient; equal to what is required; suitable to the case or occasion; satisfactory. Equal to some given occasion or work. Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 326.

Adequate care. Such care as a man of ordinary prudence would himself take under similar circumstances to avoid accident; care proportionate to the risk to be incurred. See also Care.
Adequate cause. Sufficient cause for a particular purpose.

In criminal law, adequate cause for the passion which reduces a homicide committed under its influence from the grade of murder to manslaughter, means such cause as would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror, in a person of ordinary temper, sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection. Insulting words or gestures, or an assault and battery so slight as to show no intention to inflict pain or injury, or an injury to property unaccompanied by violence are not adequate causes. Berry v. State, 143 Tex.Cr.R. 67, 157 S.W.2d 650, 652. See Adequate provocation; Cause; Probable cause.

Adequate compensation. Just value of property taken under power of eminent domain, payable in money, as guaranteed by 5th Amendment. Market value of property when taken. It may include interest and may include the cost or value of the property to the owner for the purposes for which he designed it. Such only as puts injured party in as good a condition as he would have been in if injury had not been inflicted. Town of Winchester v. Cox, 129 Conn. 106, 26 A.2d 592, 597. See also Fair market value; Just compensation.

Adequate consideration. One which is equal, or reasonably proportioned, to the value of that for which it is given. One which is not so disproportionate as to shock our sense of that morality and fair dealing which should always characterize transactions between man and man. Fair and reasonable under circumstances. Reasonably just and equitable. See Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Adequate or reasonable facilities. Such railroad facilities as might be fairly demanded, with regard to size of place, extent of demand for transportation, cost of furnishing additional accommodation asked for, and to all other facts which would have bearing upon question of convenience and cost. Kurn v. State, 175 Okl. 379, 52 P.2d 841, 843.

Adequate preparation. Embraces full consultation with accused, interviews with witnesses, study of facts and law, and determination of character of defense to be made and policy to be followed during trial. Nelson v. Commonwealth, 295 Ky. 641, 175 S.W.2d 132, 133.

Adequate provocation. An adequate provocation to cause a sudden transport of passion that may suspend the exercise of judgment and exclude premeditation and a previously formed design is one that is calculated to excite such anger as might obscure the reason or dominate the volition of an ordinary reasonable man. See Adequate cause.

Adequate remedy. An “adequate remedy at law,” for purposes of rule that a litigant who fails to avail himself of a remedy provided by law and who is subsequently barred from pursuing that remedy by cause of his own lack of diligence cannot rely on the absence of a remedy at law as a basis for equitable jurisdiction, is one which is as complete, practical and as efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as a remedy in equity, and which is obtainable as of right. In re Wife, K., Del.Ch., 297 A.2d 424, 426.

An “adequate remedy at law”, preventing relief by injunction, means a remedy which is plain and complete and as practical and efficient to ends of justice and its prompt administration as a remedy in equity, and although an injunction will issue when legal remedy is inadequate, injunction should not be granted where complainant has an adequate remedy at law. Hancock v. Bradshaw, Tex.Civ.App., 350 S.W.2d 955, 957.

A remedy that affords complete relief with reference to the particular matter in controversy, and is appropriate to the circumstances of the case. Must reach end intended, and actually compel performance of duty in question. Must be plain, accurate, certain, speedy, specific, and appropriate to the particular circumstances, and must also be equally as convenient, beneficial, and effective as the remedy by mandamus. Simpson v. Williams Rural High School Dist., Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 852, 856.

Adessee /ædɪˈsiː/. In the civil law, to be present; the opposite of absesse.

Adeu /ˈædyʊ/. Without day, as when a matter is finally dismissed by the court. Ales adeu, go without day. See Adieu.

Ad eversio nem juris nostri /æd avərˈzɪə(ʊ)n ˌdʒɜːs ˈnɒstrə/. To the overthrow of our right.

Ad excambium /æd ɪkˈskæmbiəm/. For exchange; for compensation.

Ad exhaereditationem /æd ekˈsɛriːdɪtəˈʃənəm/. To the disinheritance, to disinherit; to the injury of the inheritance. 3 Bl.Comm. 288. Formal words in the old wrat of write, which calls upon the tenant to appear and show cause why he hath committed waste and destruction in the place named, ad exhaereditationem, etc.

Ad exuitum /æd ɪˈɡzədəm/. At issue; at the end (of the pleadings).

Ad faciendum /æd fə ˈsiːdəm/. To do. Ad faciendum, subiciendum et recipiendum; to do, submit to, and receive. Ad faciendum juratam illam; to make up that jury.

Ad feodi firmam /æd ˈfiːudəˌfɜːməm/. To fee farm.

Ad fidem /æd fəˈdɛm/. In allegiance. Subjects born ad fidem are those born in allegiance.

Ad filium aquæ /æd fəˈlɪljəm ˈækwiː/. To the thread of the water; to the central line, or middle of the stream. Usque ad filium aquæ, as far as the thread of the stream. A phrase of which ad medium filium aquæ (q.v.) is another form, and etymologically more exact.

Ad filium vie /æd fəˈlɪljəm ˈvaij/. To the middle of the way; to the central line of the road.
Ad finem /æd fæynam/. Abbreviated ad fin. To the end. It is used in citations to books, as a direction to read from the place designated to the end of the chapter, section, etc. Ad finem litis, at the end of the suit.

Ad firmam /æd færm/,. To farm. Derived from an old Saxon word denoting rent. Ad firmam nostris was a fine or penalty equal in amount to the estimated cost of entertaining the king for one night. Ad feodi firmam, to fee farm.

Ad fundandam jurisdictionem /æd fændændæm jürisdikshiýównmas/. To make the basis of jurisdiction.

Ad gaolam delibarandam /æd gæolæm delibærændæ/. To deliver the gaol; to empty the gaols. Ad gaolam delibarandam; to deliver the gaol; to make gaol delivery.

Ad gravamen /æd grawéym/. To the grievance, injury, or oppression.

Adhering. Joining, leagued with, cleaving to; as, “adhering to the enemies of the United States.” “Adhering” consists in giving to the United States the loyalty due from a citizen. United States v. Stephan, D.C. Mich., 50 F.Supp. 738, 741. Any intentional act furthering hostile designs of enemies of the United States, or an act which intentionally strengthens or tends to strengthen enemies of the United States, or which weakens or tends to weaken power of the United States to resist and attack such enemies, constitutes “adhering” to such enemies. United States v. Haupt, D.C.Ill., 47 F.Supp. 836, 839.

Adhesion. Agreement to join; adherence. The entrance of another nation into an existing treaty with respect only to a part of the principles laid down or the stipulations agreed to. Properly speaking, by adhesion the third nation becomes a party only to such parts as are specifically agreed to, and by accession it accepts and is bound by the whole treaty. See Accession.

Adhesion contract. Standardized contract form offered to consumers of goods and services on essentially “take it or leave it” basis without affording consumer realistic opportunity to bargain and under such conditions that consumer cannot obtain desired product or services except by acquiescing in form contract. Distinctive feature of adhesion contract is that weaker party has no realistic choice as to its terms. Wheeler v. St. Joseph Hospital, Cal.App., 63 Cal.App.3d 345, 133 Cal.Rptr. 775, 783; Standard Oil Co. of Calif. v. Perkins, C.A.Or., 347 F.2d 379, 383. Not every such contract is unconscionable. Lechmere Tire and Sales Co. v. Burwick, 360 Mass. 713, 720, 721, 277 N.E.2d 503.

Adhibere /ædhabærï/. In the civil law, to apply; to employ; to exercise; to use. Adhibere diligentiam, to use care. Adhibere vim, to employ force.

Ad hoc /æd hó(w)k/. For this; for this special purpose. An attorney ad hoc, or a guardian or curator ad hoc, is one appointed for a special purpose, generally to represent the client or infant in the particular action in which the appointment is made.

Ad hoc arbitration. Submission of a particular issue to arbitration.

Ad hominem /æd (h)ómanəm/. To the person. A term used in logic with reference to a personal argument.

Ad hunc dlem /æd (h)ásð dæyam/. At this day.

Ad idem /æd áydam/. To the same point, or effect. Ad idem facit, it makes to or goes to establish the same point.

A die confectionis /éy dæyiy kæfækshiýównmas/. From the day of the making.

A die datus /éy dæyiy déydæs/. From the day of the date. Used in leases to determine the time or running of the estate, and when so used includes the day of the date.

Adie /ædýu/. L. Fr. Without day. A common term in the Year Books, implying final dismissal from court.

A dignitori fieri debet nominatio /éy digniýorá fáyáray débét dánománíyésh(i)yow/. Denomination ought to be from the more worthy. The description (of a place) should be taken from the more worthy subject (as from a will).

A dignitori fieri debet nominatio et resolutio /éy digniýorá fáyáray débét dánománíyésh(i)yow et rézál(y)-uwwsh(i)yow/. The title and exposition of a thing ought to be derived from, or given, or made with reference to, the more worthy, quality, or species of it.

Ad inde /æd indý/. Thereunto. Ad inde requisitus, thereunto required.

Ad infinitum /æd infináydam/. Without limit; to an infinite extent; indefinitely.

Ad inquirendum /æd igkwárändá/. To inquire; a writ of inquiry; a judicial writ, commanding inquiry to be made of anything relating to a cause pending in court.

Ad instantiam /æd instánsh(y)am/. At the instance. Ad instantiam partis, at the instance of a party.

Ad interim /æd intaram/. In the meantime. An officer ad interim is one appointed to fill a temporary vacancy, or to discharge the duties of the office during the absence or temporary incapacity of its regular incumbent.

Adlratus /ædlaréydas/. Lost; strayed; a price or value set upon things stolen or lost, as a recompense to the owner.

Adjacent. Lying near or close to; sometimes, contiguous; neighboring. Adjacent implies that the two objects are not widely separated, though they may not actually touch, Harrison v. Guilford County, 218 N.C. 718, 12 S.E.2d 269, while adjoining imports that they are so joined or united to each other that no third object intervenes. Wolfe v. Hurley, D.C.La., 46 F.2d 515, 521. See Adjoining.

Adjective law. The aggregate of rules of procedure or practice. As opposed to that body of law which the courts are established to administer (called “substantive law”), it means the rules according to which the substantive law is administered; e.g., Rules of Civil Procedure. That part of the law which provides a method for enforcing or maintaining rights, or obtain-Adjourning. The word in its etymological sense means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near to or adjacent. To be in contact with; to abut upon. State ex rel. Boynton v. Bunton, 141 Kan. 163, 40 F.2d 328, 328. And the same meaning has been given to it when used in statutes. See Adjacent.

Adjoining owners. Those persons who own land touching the subject land and who, as a result, have right to notice of proceedings concerning the subject real estate as, for example, in zoning and licensing matters. Bayport Civic Ass'n v. Koehler, Sup., 138 N.Y. S.2d 524, 530.

Adjourne /sêjirn/. To put off; defer; recess; postpone. To postpone action of a convened court or legislative body until another time specified, or indefinitely; the latter being usually called to adjourn sine die. To suspend or recess during a meeting, legislature or assembly, which continues in session. Suspending business for a time, delaying. See Adjournment.

Adjournment est ad diem dicere seu diem dare /aposablesm êst ə(d) dâyam disareyy syuw dâyam dêrey/. An adjournment is to appoint a day or give a day. Hence the formula "eat sine die."

Adjournatur /a/jârnéydz/. L. Lat. It is adjourned. A word with which the old reports very frequently concluded a case.

A continuation of the same meeting, and at such adjourned meeting the governing body can do any act which might have been done if no adjournment had taken place, and limitations imposed on governing body as regards action at original meeting obtain at adjourned meeting. One ordered by board at regular meeting, and which is to convene after termination of such regular meeting and prior to next regular meeting. Byrd v. Byrd, 193 Miss. 249, 8 So.2d 510, 513.

Adjudicated summons. A summons taken out in the chambers of a judge, and afterwards taken into court to be argued by counsel.

Adjourning term. In practice, a continuance, by adjournment, of a regular term. Distinguished from an "additional term," which is a distinct term. A continuation of a previous or regular term. The same term prolonged, wherein power of court over business which has been done, and the entries made at the regular term, continues.

Adjournment. A putting off or postponing of business or of a session until another time or place. The act of a court, legislative body, public meeting, or officer, by which the session or assembly is dissolved, either temporarily or finally, and the business in hand dismissed from consideration, either definitely or for an interval. If the adjournment is final, it is said to be sine die. See also Recess.

Adjournment day. A further day appointed by the judges at the regular sittings at nisi prius to try issue of fact not then ready for trial.

Adjudication day in error. In English practice, a day appointed some days before the end of the term at which matters left undone on the affirrmance day are finished.

Adjournment in eyre /a/jârârm ant in ēr/. In English law, the appointment of a day when the justices in eyre meet to sit again.

Adjournment sine die /a/jârârm ant sâniyâ day((i)y)/'sînney diye/. An adjournment without setting a time for another meeting or session. See Sine die.

Adjudicated rights. Rights which have been recognized in a judicial or administrative proceeding.

Adjudicatee /a/jûwdâkeity/. In French and civil law, the purchaser at a judicial sale.

Adjudicatio /a/jûwdâkesi(i)yow/. In the civil law, an adjudication. The judgment of the court that the subject matter is the property of one of the litigants; confirmation of title by judgment.

Adjudication /a/jûwdâkesiyan/. The formal giving or pronouncing a judgment or decree in a cause; also the judgment given. The entry of a decree by a court in respect to the parties in a case. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., v. United Artists Corporation, C.C.A.Del., 113 F.2d 703, 706. It implies a hearing by a court, after notice, of legal evidence on the factual issue(s) involved. Genzer v. Fillip, Tex.Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 730, 732. The equivalent of a "determination." Campbell v. Wyoming Development Co., 55 Wyo. 347, 100 P.2d 124, 132. And contemplates that the claims of all the parties thereto have been considered and set at rest. Miller v. Scobie, 152 Fla. 328, 11 So.2d 892, 894. See Administrative adjudication; Judgment.

Adjudicative claims arbitration. Concerned primarily with tort and other claims involving small amounts as distinguished from the traditional categories of arbitration in the fields of labor, commerce and international trade. Designed to relieve courts of burden of handling such cases.

Adjudicative facts. Factual matters concerning the parties to an administrative proceeding as contrasted with legislative facts which are general and usually do not touch individual questions of particular parties to a proceeding. Facts which concern a person’s motives and intent, as contrasted with general policy issues. U. S. v. Bishop Processing Co., D.C.Md., 287 F.Supp. 624, 633.

Adjudicatory hearing. A proceeding before an administrative agency in which the rights and duties of particular persons are adjudicated after notice and opportunity to be heard.

Adjudicatory process. Method of adjudicating factual disputes; used generally in reference to administrative proceedings in contrast to judicial proceedings.

Adjudicatäie /ajuwda:kachar/. In Canadian law, a purchaser at a sheriff's sale.

Ad judicium /æ(d) juwdis(h)iyam/. To judgment; to court. Ad judicium provocare; to summon to court; to commence an action; a term of the Roman law.

One associated with another in a subordinate or an auxiliary manner; an associate.

Adjunction /æjɔŋ(k)shan/. Adding, affixing or attaching to another. Act of adjoining. In civil law, the attachment or union permanently of a thing belonging to one person to that belonging to another. The common law implicitly adopts the civil law doctrines. See Accession.

Adjunctum accessorium /æjɔŋktam æksəsəˈriːəm/. An accessory or appurtenance.

Ad jungendum auxilium /æ(d) jænjëndəm oɡzii(li)yam/. To join in aid. See Aid prayer.

Ad jura regis /æ(d) jʊra riˈjəs/. To the rights of the king; a writ which was brought by the king's clerk, presented to a living against those who endeavored to eject him, to the prejudice of the king's title.

Adjuration /æjəˈriːʃən/. A swearing or binding upon oath.

Adjust. To settle or arrange; to free from differences or discrepancies. To bring to satisfactory state so that parties are agreed, as to adjust amount of loss by fire or controversy regarding property or estate. To bring to proper relations, to settle. To determine and apportion an amount due. Accounts are adjusted when they are settled and a balance is struck. Term is sometimes used in the sense of pay, when used in reference to a liquidated claim. Combination Oil & Gas Co. v. Brady, Tex.Civ.App., 96 S.W.2d 415, 416. Determination of amount to be paid to insured by insurer to cover loss or damage sustained. See Adjuster; Adjustment; Settlement.

Adjusted basis. The cost or other basis of property reduced by depreciation allowed or allowable and increased by capital improvements. See Basis.

Adjusted cost basis. For income tax purposes, original cost plus additions to capital less depreciation results in the "adjusted cost basis." Herder v. Helvering, 70 U.S.App.D.C. 287, 106 F.2d 153, 162.

Adjusted gross estate. The gross estate less I.R.C. §§ 2053 and 2054 expenses equals the adjusted gross estate. Generally, I.R.C. §§ 2053 and 2054 expenses include administration expenses, debts of the decedent, and losses incurred by the estate. Fifty percent of the adjusted gross estate measures the maximum amount of the marital deduction allowed for death tax purposes. See Administration expense; Gross estate; Marital deduction.

Adjusted gross income. Term used in individual taxation to describe gross income less certain allowable deductions. I.R.C. § 62.

Adjuster. One appointed to adjust a matter; to ascertain or arrange or settle. One who makes any adjustment or settlement, or who determines the amount of a claim, as a claim against an insurance company. A representative of the insurer who seeks to determine the extent of the firm's liability for loss when a claim is submitted. A person who acts for the insurance company or the insured in the determination and settlement of claims. "Public adjusters" represent claimants only. See Claim adjuster; Claimant adjuster; Independent adjuster.

Adjustment. An arrangement; a settlement. In the law of insurance, the adjustment of a loss is the ascertainment of its amount and the ratable distribution of it among those liable to pay it. The settling and ascertaining the amount of the indemnity which the assured, after all allowances and deductions made, is entitled to receive under the policy, and fixing the proportion which each underwriter is liable to pay.

Adjustment board. See Board of adjustment.

Adjustment bond. See Bond.

Adjustment securities. Stocks and bonds which are issued during a corporate reorganization.

Adjudant general /æˈdʒudant(t) jʊnəˈrɔl/. An officer in charge of the National Guard of one of the States. The administrative head of a military unit having a general staff.

Adjutari quippe nos, non decipi, beneficio oportet /æjuwˈvɛrət kwiˈpiː noʊs, nɔn ˈdɛsəpaɪ, bɛˈfiʃ(ɨ)ˈow əˈpɔrdət/. We ought to be favored, not injured by that which is intended for our benefit. (The species of bailment called "loan" must be to the advantage of the borrower, not to his detriment.)

Ad largum /æd lærgəm/. At large; as, title at large; assess at large. Also at liberty; free, or unconfined. Ire ad largum, to go at large. A special verdict was formerly called a verdict at large.

Adlegiāre /ædliˈjɪəriːə/. To purge one's self of a crime by oath.

Ad libitum /æd liˈbɪdəm/. At pleasure. 3 Bl.Comm. 292.

Ad litem /æd lɪˈdæm/. For the suit; for the purposes of the suit; pending the suit. A guardian ad litem is a guardian appointed to prosecute or defend a suit on behalf of a party incapacitated by infancy or otherwise.

Ad lucrandum vel perdendum /æd lʊˈkruːdəm vɛl pɜrdəˈdæm/. For gain or loss. Emphatic words in the old warrants of attorney. Sometimes expressed in English, "to lose and gain."

Ad majorem cautelam /æd məˈdʒɔrəm kəˈtɪləm/. For greater security.

Admanuensiis /ædˌmænjuˈwɛnsəs/. A person who swore by laying his hands on the book.
Ad manum /ad méynam/. At hand; ready for use. Et querens sectam habeat ad manum; and the plaintiff immediately have his suit ready.

Admeasurement /admězharmant/. Ascertainment by measure; measuring out; assignment or apportionment by measure, that is, by fixed quantity or value, by certain limits, or in definite and fixed proportions.

Admeasurement of dower. A common law remedy which lay for the heir on reaching his majority to rectify an assignment of dower made during his minority, by which the doweress had received more than she was legally entitled to.

Admeasurement of pasture. In English law, a writ which lay between those that had common of pasture appendant, or by vicinage, in cases where any one or more of them surcharged the common with more cattle than they ought. This remedy has long been abolished in England and in the United States.

Admeasurement, writ of. A common law remedy which lay against persons who usurped more than their share, in the two following cases: Admeasurement of dower, and admeasurement of pasture.

Ad medium filum aque /ad měiydiam fáylam áékwi/. To the middle thread of the stream. See Ad filum aque.

Ad medium filum vie /ad měiydiam fáylam váyi/. To the middle thread of the way.

Ad melius inquirendum /ad měiylys inkwaréndam/. A writ directed to a coroner commanding him to hold a second inquest.

Admensuratio /adměnsyáréysh(i)yow/. In old English law, admeasurement.

Adminicule /admínakél/. Used as an English word in the statute of 1 Edw. IV, c. 1, in the sense of aid, or support. In civil law, imperfect proof. See Adminiculum.

Adminicular /admánikylar/. Auxiliary or subordinate to. "The murder would be adminicular to the robbery" (i.e., committed to accomplish it).

Adminicular evidence /admánikylar évidant(t)s/. Auxiliary or supplementary evidence; such as is presented for the purpose of explaining and completing other evidence. (Chiefly used in ecclesiastical law.)

Adminiculate /admánikyalyet/. To give adminicular evidence.

Adminiculator /admánikyalyetdar/. An officer in the Roman Catholic Church who administered to the wants of widows, orphans, and afflicted persons.

Adminiculum /admánikylam/. Lat. An adminicule; a prop or support; an accessory thing. An aid or support to something else, whether a right or the evidence of one. It is principally used to designate evidence adduced in aid or support of other evidence, which without it is imperfect.

Administer. To manage or conduct. Glocksen v. Holmes, 299 Ky. 626, 186 S.W.2d 634, 637. To discharge the duties of an office; to take charge of business; to manage affairs; to serve in the conduct of affairs, in the application of things to their uses; to settle and distribute the estate of a decedent. Also, to give, as an oath; to direct or cause to be taken.

To "administer" a decree is to execute it, to enforce its provisions, to resolve conflicts as to its meaning, to construe and to interpret its language. U. S. v. Hemen, D.C.Nev., 300 F.Supp. 256, 283.

To supply, as medicine or a remedy; to give, as a dose of something beneficial or suitable. Barfield v. State, 71 Okl.Cr. 195, 110 P.2d 316, 317. To cause or procure a person to take some drug or other substance into his or her system; to direct and cause a medicine, poison, or drug to be taken into the system.

Administration. Management or conduct of an office or employment; the performance of the executive duties of an institution, business, or the like. In public law, the administration of government means the practical management and direction of the executive department, or of the public machinery or functions, or of the operations of the various organs or agencies. Direction or oversight of any office, service, or employment. Greene v. Wheeler, C.C.A.Wis., 29 F.2d 468, 469. The term "administration" is also conventionally applied to the whole class of public functionaries, or those in charge of the management of the executive department.

Administration expense. Administrative expenses imply disbursements incidental to the management of the estate which are deductible in computing estate taxes. Such deductions are allowed for such expenses or claims only to the extent that they "are allowable by the laws of the jurisdiction" under which the estate is being administered. I.R.C. § 2053.

Administration letters. The instrument by which an administrator or administratrix is authorized by the probate court, surrogate, or other proper officer, to have the charge and administration of the goods and property of an intestate. See Administrator.

Administration of estates. The management and settlement of the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor, performed under the supervision of a court, by a person duly qualified and legally appointed, and usually involving: (1) the collection of the decedent's assets; (2) payment of debts and claims against the estate; (3) payment of estate taxes; (4) distribution of the remainder of the estate among those entitled thereto. See Administrator; Letters of administration.

Administration of estates is principally of the following kinds:

Ad colligendum bona defuncti. To collect the goods of the deceased. Special letters of administration granted to one or more persons, authorizing them to collect and preserve the goods of the deceased.

Ad prosequendum. An administrator appointed to prosecute or defend a certain action (e.g. wrongful death) or actions in which the estate is concerned. Ancillary administration is auxiliary and subordinate to the administration at the place of the decedent's domicile; it may be taken out in any foreign state or country where assets are locally situated, and is merely for the purpose of collecting such assets and paying debts there.
ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES

Cum testamento annexo (CTA). Administration with the will annexed. Administration granted in cases where a testator makes a will without naming any executor; or where the executors who are named in the will are incompetent to act, are deceased, or refuse to act.

De bonis non (DBN). Administration granted for the purpose of administering such of the goods of a deceased person as were not administered by the former executor or administrator.

De bonis non cum testamento annexo (DBNCTA). That which is granted when an executor dies leaving a part of the estate unadministered.

Durante absentia. That which is granted during the absence of the executor and until he has proved the will.

Durante minori aetate. Exists where an infant is made executor, in which case administration with will annexed is granted to another during the minority of such executor, and until he shall attain his lawful age to act.

Foreign administration. That which is exercised by virtue of authority properly conferred by a foreign power.

General administration. The grant of authority to administer upon the entire estate of a decedent, without restriction or limitation, whether under the intestate laws or with the will annexed.

Pendente lite. Administration granted during the pendency of a suit touching the validity of a will.

Public administration is such as is conducted (in some jurisdictions) by an officer called the public administrator, who is appointed to administer in cases where the intestate has left no person entitled to apply for letters.

Special administration. Authority to administer upon some few particular effects of a decedent, as opposed to authority to administer his whole estate.

Administrative. Connotes of or pertains to administration, especially management, as by managing or conducting, directing, or superintending, the execution, application or conduct of persons or things. Fluet v. McCabe, 299 Mass. 173, 12 N.E.2d 89, 93. Particularly, having the character of executive or ministerial action. Mauritz v. Schwind, Tex.Civ.App., 101 S.W.2d 1083, 1090. In this sense, administrative functions or acts are distinguished from such as are judicial. People ex rel. Van Sickle v. Austin, 20 App.Div. 1, 46 N.Y.S. 526.

Administrative acts. Those acts which are necessary to be done to carry out our legislative policies and purposes already declared by the legislative body or such as are devolved upon it by the organic law of its existence. Ex parte McDonough, 27 Cal.App.2d 155, 80 P.2d 485, 487.

Administrative adjudication. The process by which an administrative agency issues an order, such order being affirmative, negative, injunctive or declaratory in form. Adm. Procedure Act, § 551.

The term "agency" includes any department, independent establishment, commission, administration, authority, board or bureau of the United States or any corporation in which the United States has a proprietary interest, unless the context shows that such term was intended to be used in a more limited sense.

Administrative authority. The power of an agency or its head to carry out the terms of the law creating the agency as well as to make regulations for the conduct of business before the agency; distinguishable from legislative authority to make laws.

Administrative board. This term is very broad and includes bodies exercising varied functions, some of which involve orders made or other acts done ex parte or without full hearing as to the operative facts, while others are done only after such a notice and hearing, and the functions of the former kind are plainly "administrative" and those of the latter are "quasi judicial." Beaverdale Memorial Park v. Danher, 127 Conn. 175, 15 A.2d 17, 21. Administrative boards differ from "courts" in that boards frequently represent public interests entrusted to boards, whereas courts are concerned with litigating rights of parties with adverse interests. Rummell v. Walsh, 127 Conn. 16, 15 A.2d 6, 9.

Administrative crime. An offense consisting of a violation of an administrative rule or regulation and carrying with it a criminal sanction.

Administrative determination. See Administrative adjudication.

Administrative deviation. Departure from the administrative provisions of a trust by the trustee acting alone or with prior approval of the court. Anderson v. Ryland, 232 Ark. 335, 336 S.W.2d 52.

Administrative discretion. Term means that the doing of acts or things required to be done may rest, in part at least, upon considerations not entirely susceptible of proof or disproof and at times which considering the circumstances and subject-matter cannot be supplied by the Legislature, and a statute confers such discretion when it refers a commission or office to beliefs, expectations, or tendencies instead of facts for the exercise of the powers conferred. Culver v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 754, 757.

Administrative hearing. An oral proceeding before an administrative agency consisting of argument or trial or both. Procedural rules are more relaxed at such hearings as contrasted with civil or criminal trials; e.g. rules governing admissibility of evidence are usually quite liberal. See also Hearing.
Administrative interpretation. Meaning given to a law or regulation by an administrative agency.

Administrative law. Body of law created by administrative agencies in the form of rules, regulations, orders, and decisions.

Administrative law judge. One who presides at an administrative hearing, with power to administer oaths, take testimony, rule on questions of evidence and make agency determinations of fact. Formerly called "hearing officer" or "hearing examiner". Adm. Procedure Act, § 556.

Administrative officer. Politically, and as used in constitutional law, an officer of the executive department of government, and generally one of inferior rank; legally, a ministerial or executive officer, as distinguished from a judicial officer.

Administrative order. The final disposition of a matter before an administrative agency; product of an administrative adjudication. Such order may be declaratory or it may contain an affirmative or negative command. Adm. Procedure Act, § 554.

A regulation issued by an administrative agency interpreting or applying the provisions of a statute. Administrative acts having force of law, designed to clarify or implement a law or policy.

Administrative procedure. Methods and processes before administrative agencies as distinguished from judicial procedure which applies to courts. Procedural rules and regulations of most federal agencies are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulations. See also Administrative Procedure Act.

State. Individual states have enacted variations of the federal Act, e.g. M.G.L.A. (Mass.) c. 30A. Such acts govern proceedings for state administrative agencies.

Administrative process. In general, the procedure used before administrative agencies; in particular, the means of summoning witnesses before such agencies, e.g. subpoena.

Administrative remedy. Non-judicial remedy provided by agency, board, commission, or the like. In most instances, all administrative remedies must have been exhausted before a court will take jurisdiction of a case; e.g. U.S. District Courts will not consider a social security case unless all hearing, appeal, etc. remedies before the Social Security Administration have been exhausted.

Administrative review. Generally refers to judicial review of administrative proceedings; may also embrace appellate review within the administrative agency itself. Adm. Procedure Act, § 557.

Administrative tribunal. A particular administrative agency before which a matter may be heard or tried as distinguished from a judicial forum.

Administrator. A person appointed by the court to administer (i.e., manage or take charge of) the assets and liabilities of a decedent (i.e., the deceased). Such person may be a male (i.e., administrator) or a female (i.e., administratrix). If the person performing these services is named by the decedent’s will, he is designated as the executor, or she the executrix, of the estate.

An instrumentality established by law for performing the acts necessary for transfer of effects left by deceased to those who succeed to their ownership. Behnke v. Gelb, D.C.Md., 169 F.Supp. 647, 650.

Domestic. One appointed at the place of the domicile of the decedent; distinguished from a foreign or an ancillary administrator.

Foreign. One appointed or qualified under the laws of a foreign state or country, where the decedent was domiciled.

Public. An official provided for by statute in some states to administer upon the property of intestates in certain cases.

Administrator ad litem /admiňstręťydar ãď läýďam/. A special administrator appointed by court to supply a necessary party to an action in which deceased or his estate is interested.

Administrator cum testamento annexo (C.T.A.) /admiňstręťydar kım testamęndow mëňksow/. See Cum testamento annexo.

Administrator de bonis non (D.B.N.) /admiňstręťydar dïy böňnas nöň/. "Administradores de bonis non administratis" are, as the term signifies, persons appointed by the court of probate to administer on the effects of a decedent which have not been included in a former administration.

Administrator pendente lite /admiňstręťydar pëndɛntey läýdiy/. A temporary administrator appointed before an adjudication of intestacy has been made for purpose of preserving assets of the estate.

Administrator with will annexed. One appointed administrator of deceased’s estate after executors named in will have refused or are unable to act.

Administratrix /admiňstręťytraks/. A woman who administers, or to whom letters of administration have been granted.

Admiralty. See Maritime.

Admiralty court. A court exercising jurisdiction over all maritime contracts, torts, injuries, or offenses. Federal district courts have jurisdiction over admiralty and maritime actions. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1333. Procedure in such actions is governed by the Fed.R. Civil P. and Supp. Admiralty Rules. See also Saving to suitors clause.

Admiralty, First Lord of the. In England, formerly the normal head of the executive department of state which presided over the naval forces of the kingdom was the lord high admiral, but in practice the func-
ADMISSIBILITY

Admissions by silence. If a statement is made by another person in the presence of a party to the action, containing assertions of facts which, if untrue, the party would under all the circumstances naturally be expected to deny, his failure to speak has traditionally been receivable against him as an admission. Failure of one not under arrest to respond by denial to accusation of crime, or element of crime, may be construed as admission of guilt if such person understood accusation and could have responded. See also ESTOPPEL; silence.

Adoptive admission. Action by a party in which he approves statement of one for whom he is responsible thereby accepting truth of statement. Silence, actions, or statements which manifest assent to the statements of another person. Such may be received into evidence as admissions of the defendant if it can be shown that the defendant adopted the statements as his own. See Fed.Evid.R. 801(d)(2)(B).

Criminal admissions. A statement by accused, direct or implied, of facts pertinent to issue, and tending, in connection with proof of other facts, to prove his guilt. State v. Johnson, 277 Minn. 368, 152 N.W.2d 768, 773. The avowal of a fact or of circumstances from which guilt may be inferred, but only tending to prove the offense charged, and not amounting to a confession of guilt. A statement by defendant of fact or facts pertinent to issues tending, in connection with proof of other facts or circumstances, to prove guilt, but which is, of itself, insufficient to authorize conviction. Does not include statements which are part of the res gestae. State v. Clark, 102 Mont. 432, 58 P.2d 276, 278.

Discovery practice. Requests for admissions in civil actions are governed by Fed.R.Civ.P. 36. Any matter admitted under Rule 36 is conclusively established unless the court on motion permits withdrawal or amendment of the admission. See Request (Request for admission); stipulation.

Distinguished from confession. A confession is a statement admitting or acknowledging all facts necessary for conviction of the crime. An admission, on the other hand, is an acknowledgment of a fact or facts tending to prove guilt which falls short of an acknowledgment of all essential elements of the crime. Gladden v. Unsworth, 9th Cir., 396 F.2d 373, 375 n. 2; People v. Fitzgerald, 56 Cal.2d 855, 861, 17 Cal.Rptr. 129, 132, 366 P.2d 481, 484. The term "admission" is usually applied to civil transactions and to those matters of fact in criminal cases which do not involve criminal intent, while the term "confession" is generally restricted to acknowledgments of guilt. People v. Sourisseau, 62 Cal.App.2d 917, 145 P.2d 916, 923.

Implied admissions are those which result from some act or failure to act of the party; e.g., part payment of a debt is an admission of liability to pay debt.

Incidental admissions are those made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact.

Judicial admissions are those made in court by a person's attorney for the purpose of being used as a substitute for the regular legal evidence of the facts at the trial. Such as are made voluntarily by a party, which appear of record in the proceedings of the court. Formal acts done by a party or his attorney in court on the trial of a cause for the purpose of dispensing with proof by the opposing party of some fact claimed by the latter to be true. Hofer v. Bitumi-Pleading. The acknowledgment or recognition by one party of the truth of some matter alleged by the opposite party, made in a pleading, the effect of which is to narrow the area of facts or allegations required to be proved by evidence. Averments in a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required are admitted when not denied in the responsive pleading. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(d).

Quasi admission. See that title.

Request for admission. See Request.

Tacit admissions. See Tacit admissions.

Admissions tax. Form of tax imposed as part of price of being admitted to a particular function or event.

Admit. See Admission; Admissions.

Admittance. In English law, the act of giving possession of a copyhold estate. It is of three kinds: (1)
Upon a voluntary grant by the lord, where the land has escheated or reversioned to him. (2) Upon surrender of the former tenant. (3) Upon descent, where the heir is tenant on his ancestor's death. Copyholds were abolished by Part V of Law of Property Act 1922.

Admittendo clerico /ædmésténdow kléríkow/. An old English writ issuing to the bishop to establish the right of the Crown to make a presentation to a benefice. A writ of execution upon a right of presentation to a benefice being recovered in quare impedit, addressed to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring him to admit and institute the clerk or presentee of the plaintiff.

Admittendo in socium /ædmésténdow in sówshiym/. An old English writ for associating certain persons, as knights and other gentlemen of the county, to justices of assize on the circuit.

Admixture /ædmírkz(h)char/. A substance formed by mixing; state of being mixed; act of mixing.

Admonish /ædmónash/. To caution or advise. To counsel against wrong practices, or to warn against danger of an offense. See Admonition.

Admonition /ædmánishan/. Any authoritative oral communication or statement by way of advice or care by the court to the jury respecting their duty or conduct as jurors, the admissibility or nonadmissi-bility of evidence, or the purpose for which any evidence admitted may be considered by them. Reprin-tand or cautionary statement addressed to counsel by judge.

In English law, a reprimand from a judge to a person accused, on being discharged, warning him of the consequences of his conduct, and intimating to him that, should he be guilty of the same fault for which he has been admonished, he will be punished with greater severity. The admonition was authorized as a species of punishment for slight misdemea-onors. In ecclesiastical law, this is the lightest form of punishment.

Admonitio trina /ædmánishiyow trúyna/. The threefold warning given to a prisoner who stood mute, before he was subjected to peine forte et dure (q.v.). 4 Bl.Comm. 325.

Ad mordendum assuetus /æd mordéndam aswiydás/. Accustomed to bite. A material averment in declarations for damage done by a dog to persons or animals.

Admortizatio /ædmórdzéúshán/. In feudal customs, the reduction of property of lands or tenements to mortmain.

Adsepós /ædnapows/. The son of a great-great-grandson.

Adnéeptis /ædnééptas/. The daughter of a great-great-granddaughter.

Adnichëld /ædnikald/. Annulled, canceled, made void.

Adnihilare /ædnihá(ñ)lériy/. In old English law, to annul; to make void; to reduce to nothing; to treat as nothing: to hold as or for nought.

Ad nocumentum /æd nókyméntam/. To the nuisance, or annoyance; to the hurt or injury. Ad nocumen-tum liberi tenementi sui, to the nuisance of his freehold. Formal words in the old assise of nuisance. 3 Bl.Com. 221.

Adnotatio /ædnówtěýsh(í)yow/. In the civil law, the subscription of a name or signature to an instrument.
A rescript (q.v.) of the prince or emperor, signed with his own hand, or sign-manual. In the imperial law, casual homicide was excused by the indulgence of the emperor, signed with his own sign-manual, annotatione principis. 4 Bl.Comm. 187.

Ad officium justiciariorum spectat, uniculque coram eis placitant ljustitiam exhibere /æd afiš(í)yam jastishiyěřiyóróm spěktát yüwnek(yuw)ájywyk kórám iýas plæsténtjay jáštish(í)yam eksambríy/. It is the duty of justices to administer justice to every one pleading before them.

Adolescence. That age which follows puberty and precedes the age of majority.

Ad omissa vel male appretiata /æd amísa vel mélí apriyish(í)yőyda/. With relation to omissions or wrong interpretations.

Adopt. To accept, appropriate, choose, or select. To make that one's own (property or act) which was not so originally. To accept, consent to, and put into effective operation; as in the case of a constitution, constitutional amendment, ordinance, court rule, or by-law.

Adoption. Legal process pursuant to state statute in which a child's legal rights and duties toward his natural parents are terminated and similar rights and duties toward his adoptive parents are substituted.
To take into one's family the child of another and give him or her the rights, privileges, and duties of a child and heir. The procedure is entirely statutory and has no historical basis in common law. Most adoptions are through agency placements. See Adoption by estoppel; De facto adoption; Equitable adoption; Placement; Private placement (Adoption).
ADOPTION BY ESTOPPEL

Adoption by estoppel. Equitable adoption of a child by promises and acts which preclude such person and his estate from denying adopted status to child. Heien v. Crabtree, Tex., 369 S.W.2d 28, 30. See also Equitable adoption.

Adoption by reference. Statement in writing by which another statement in a separate writing is incorporated by reference. Statement in pleading may be adopted by reference in a different part of same pleading or in another pleading or motion. Fed.R. Civil P. 10(c).

Adptive act. An act of legislation which comes into operation within a limited area upon being adopted, in manner prescribed therein, by the inhabitants of that area.

Ad opus /ād ōwpos/. To the work.

Ad ostendendum /ād ōstándədəm/. To show. Formal words in old writs.

Ad ostium ecclesiae /ād ōstiyam əkliyziyiy/. At the door of the church. One of the five species of dower formerly recognized by the English law. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Ad plos usus /ād páyows yúwzs/. Lat. For pious (religious or charitable) uses or purposes. Used with reference to gifts and bequests.

Ad prosequendam /ād prósəkwəndəm/. To prosecute.

Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio nisi impediatur sententia /ād prıkəsmən əntəsləndən fəet rələsh(y)ən nəyəsy impiydiyədər səntənəsh(y)yə/. Relative words refer to the nearest antecedent, unless it be prevented by the context. Brown v. Brown, Del., 3 Terry 157, 29 A.2d 149, 153.

Ad punctum temporis /ād pəŋktəm təmpərəs/. At the point of time.

Ad querimoniam /ād kwərəmyənəm/. On complaint of.

Ad questionem facti non respondent judices; ad questionem juris non respondent juratores /ād kwəsh(h)əchi'yənmən fəktət nən rəspəndənt jəwədəsiyz; /ād kwəsh(h)əchi'yənmən jərəs nən rəspəndənt jərəstəriyiy/. Means that juries must answer to questions of fact and judges to questions of law. Ex parte United States, C.C.A.Wis., 101 F.2d 870, 874.

Ad questiones legis judices, et non juratores, respondent /ād kwəsh(h)əchi'yəniyz ləjya jəwədəsiyz, et nən jərəstəriyiy, rəspəndənt/. Judges, and not jurors, decide questions of law.

Ad quem /ād kwəm/. To which. A term used in the computation of time or distance, as correlative to a quo; denotes the end or terminal point. See A quo.

The terminus a quo is the point of beginning or departure; the terminus ad quem, the end of the period or point of arrival.

Ad questiones facti non respondent judices; ad questiones legi non respondent juratores /ād kwəsh(h)əchi'yəniyz fəktət nən rəspəndənt jəwədəsiyz; /ād kwəsh(h)əchi'yəniyz ləjya nən rəspəndənt jərəstəriyiy/. Judges do not answer questions of fact; juries do not answer questions of law.

Adquieto /ādkwətiyədə/. Payment.

Ad quod curia concordavit /ād kwəd kəɾiə əkəɾədəviyt/. To which the court agreed.

Ad quod damnun /ād kwəd dəmənəm/. The name of a writ formerly issuing from the English chancery, commanding the sheriff to make inquiry “to what damage” a specified act, if done, will tend.

It is a writ which ought to be sued before the king grants certain liberties, as a fair, market or such like, which may be prejudicial to others, and thereby it should be inquired whether it will be a prejudice to grant them, and to whom it will be prejudicial, and what prejudice will come thereby.

There is also another writ of ad quod damnun, if any one will turn a common highway and lay out another way as beneficial.

A “writ of ad quod damnun” is of ancient origin, and could be issued as a writ of right when landowner was dissatisfied with assessment of damages by condemnation commission. Lewis v. Du Pont, Del. Super., 2 Terry 347, 22 A.2d 832, 834.

Ad quod non fuit responsum /ād kwəd nən fəwət rəspənsonəm/. To which there was no answer. A phrase used in old reports, where a point advanced in argument by one party was not denied by the other; or where a point or argument of counsel was not met or noticed by the court; or where an objection was met by the court, and not replied to by the counsel who raised it.

A.D.R. Asset Depreciation Range.

Ad rationem ponere /ād rəʃəniyənmən pənərər/. To cite a person to appear. A technical expression in the old records of the Exchequer, signifying, to put to the bar and interrogate as to a charge made; to arraign on a trial.

Ad recognoscendum /ād rəjəknəsəndəm/. To recognize. Formal words in old writs.

Adrectare /ādredəkətər/. To set right, satisfy, or make amends.

Ad recte docendum oportet, primum inquirere nominam, quia rerum cognitio a nominibus rerum dependet /ād rəktət doəwəndəm owpərdət, prəiməm inkwəriəri nəmənəm, kəwəm rərm kəŋnəshiyiyə mənəməbəs rərm dəpendəd/. In order rightly to comprehend a thing, inquire first into the names, for a right knowledge of things depends upon their names.

Ad rectum /ād rəktəm/. To right. To do right. To meet an accusation. To answer the demands of the law. Habeant eos ad rectum. They shall render themselves to answer the law, or to make satisfaction.

Ad reparacionem et sustentacionem /ād rəpərəsiyənmən et səstəntəsəhəsiyənəm/. For repairing and keeping in suitable condition.

Ad respondendum /ād rəsəndəndəm/. For answering; to make answer. Words used in certain writs employed for bringing a person before the court to make answer in defense in a proceeding, as in habeas corpus ad respondendum and capias ad respondendum, q.v.
Adelmire /ædrɪməri/. In old European law, to undertake, declare, or promise solemnly; to pledge; to pledge one’s self to make oath.

Adrogation /ædrowgərəʃən/. In the civil law, the adoption of one who was impubes; that is, if a male, under fourteen years of age; if a female, under twelve.

Ads. An abbreviation for ad sectam (q.v.), meaning “at the suit of.”

Ad satisfacientum /æd əsəsfəʃəkəntəm/. To satisfy. The emphatic words of the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, which requires the sheriff to take the person of the defendant to satisfy the plaintiff’s claim.

Adscendentes /ædəsdəndəntiəz/. Lat. In the civil law, ascendants.

Adscripti /ædskrɪptɪ/. See Adscriptus.

Adscripti glebe /ædskrɪptɪ gliːbə/. Slaves who served the master of the soil, who were annexed to the land, and passed with it when it was conveyed.

Adscriptili /ædskrɪptɪlɪə/. Lat. A species of serfs or slaves. Those persons who were enrolled and liable to be drafted as legionary soldiers.

Adscriptus /ædskrɪptəs/. In the civil law, added, annexed, or bound by or in writing; enrolled, registered; united, joined, annexed, bound to, generally. Servus colone adscriptus, a slave annexed to an estate as a cultivator. Fundus adscriptus, an estate bound to, or burdened with a duty.

Ad sectam /æd sɛktəm/. At the suit of. Commonly abbreviated to ads. Used in entering and indexing the names of cases, where it is desired that the name of the defendant should come first. Thus, “B. ads. A.” indicates that B. is defendant in an action brought by A., and the title so written would be an inversion of the more usual form “A. v. B.”

Adsessores /ædəsəseriəz/. Side judges. Assistants or advisers of the regular magistrates, or appointed as their substitutes in certain cases. See Assessor.

Adstipulator /ædstɪpʊlətər/. In Roman law, an accessory party to a promise, who received the same promise as his principal did, and could equally receive and exact payment; or he only stipulated for a part of that for which the principal stipulated, and then his rights were coextensive with the amount of his own stipulation. One who supplied the place of a procurator at a time when the law refused to allow stipulations to be made by procuration.

Ad terminum annorum /æd tərəmənəm ænərəm/. For a term of years.

Ad terminum qui praeritet /æd tərəmən kwi praərətət/. For a term which has passed. Words in the Latin form of the writ of entry employed at common law to recover, on behalf of a landlord, possession of premises from a tenant holding over after the expiration of the term for which they were demised.

Ad testificandum /æd tɛstɪfəkəndəm/. To testify. Type of writ of habeas corpus used to bring prisoner to court to testify. See Habeas corpus.

Ad tristem partem strenua est suspicio /æd trɪsɛm pərˈtɛm streŋˈjuːə ɛst səˈspɪʃ(ə)ʊʃ/. Suspicion lies heavy on the unfortunate side.

Ad tunc et ibidem /æd tʌŋk æd ɪˈbɛdəm/. In pleading, the Latin name of that clause of an indictment containing the statement of the subject-matter “then and there being found.”

Adult. One who has attained the legal age of majority; generally 18 years. At civil law, a male who had attained the age of 14; a female who had attained the age of 12. See Legal age; Majority.

Adulter /ædəltər/. One who corrupts; one who seduces another man’s wife. Adulter solidorum. A corruptor of metals; a counterfeiter.

Adultera /ædəltərə/. In the civil law, an adulteress; a woman guilty of adultery.

Adulation. The act of corrupting or debasing. The act of mixing something impure or spurious with something pure or genuine, or an inferior article with a superior one of the same kind. The term is generally applied to the act of mixing up with food or drink intended to be sold other matters of an inferior quality, and usually of a more or less deleterious quality. The act, process or omission to act by which food becomes impure and unfit for consumption. Such is prohibited and regulated by federal and state statutes and agencies. See Food and Drug Administration; Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act.

Adulator /ædəltərədərə/. A corrupter. In the civil law, a forger; a counterfeiter.

Adulatoriores monete /ædəltərətɔrɪəz mənəti/. Counterfeiters of money.

Adulterine /ædəltərɪn/. Begotten in an adulterous intercourse. Those are not deemed adulterine who are begotten of a woman openly married through ignorance of a former wife being alive. In the Roman and canon law, adulterine bastards were distinguished from such as were the issue of two unmarried persons, and the former were treated with more severity, not being allowed the status of natural children, and being ineligible to holy orders.

Adulterine gilds. Traders acting as a corporation without a charter, and paying a fine annually for permission to exercise their usurped privileges.

Adulterium /ædəltɪriəm/. A fine anciently imposed for the commission of adultery.

Adulterous bastards. Those produced by an unlawful connection between two persons, who at the time when the child was conceived, were, either of them or both, connected by marriage with some other person. Civil Code La. art. 182.

Adultery /ædəltərɪ/. Voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender’s husband or wife. Franzetti v. Franzetti, Tex.Civ. App., 120 S.W.2d 123, 127. In some states, however, as was also true under the Roman and Jewish law, this crime is committed only when the woman is married to a third person; the unlawful commerce of a married man with an unmarried woman not being of the grade of adultery. In other jurisdictions, both
ADULTERY

Advances. Moneys paid before or in advance of the proper time of payment; money or commodities furnished on credit; a loan or gift, or money advanced to be repaid conditionally. Payments advanced to the owner of property by a factor or broker on the price of goods which the latter has in his hands, or is to receive, for sale. See also Advance.

Advance sheets. Pamphlets (published weekly for National Reporter System) containing the most recently reported opinions of specific courts (e.g. Federal Reporter) or the courts of several jurisdictions (e.g. Pacific Reporter). The volume and page numbers usually are the same as in the subsequently bound volumes of the series, which cover several numbers of the advance sheets.

Advantagium. In old pleading, an advantage.

Advena /advana/. In Roman law, one of foreign birth, who has left his own country and settled elsewhere, and who has not acquired citizenship in his new locality; often called albanus.

Advent. A period of time recognized by the English common and ecclesiastical law, beginning on the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew’s day, being the 30th of November, or the next to it, and continuing to Christmas day.

Adventitious /advantishias/. That which comes incidentally, fortuitously, or out of the regular course.

Adventitius /advantishiyas/. Lat. Fortuitous; incidental; coming from an unusual source. Adventitia bona are goods which fall to a man otherwise than by inheritance. Adventitia dos is a dowry or portion given by some friend other than the parent.

Ad ventrem insplicendum /adv ventrem inspsihyendam/. To inspect the womb. A writ for the summoning of a jury of matrons (q.v.) to determine the question of pregnancy.

Adventura /advanchurā/. An adventure. Flotsam, jetsam, and lagon are styled adventure maris (adventures of the sea).

Adventure. A hazardous and striking enterprise. A bold undertaking accompanied by possible hazards, risks and unforeseen events.

A common word in marine insurance policies, used as synonymous, or nearly so, with “perils.” A shipment of goods in charge of an agent to be disposed of for the best price obtainable.

Adventure, bill of. In commercial law, a writing signed by a merchant, stating that the property in goods shipped in his name belongs to another, to the adventure or chance of which the person so named is to stand, with a covenant from the merchant to account to him for the produce.

Gross adventure. In maritime law, a loan on bottomry. So named because the lender, in case of a loss, or expense incurred for the common safety, must contribute to the gross or general average.

Joint adventure. A commercial or maritime enterprise undertaken by several persons jointly; a limited partnership,—not limited in the statutory sense as to the liability of the partners, but as to its scope and duration. An association of two or more persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. A special combination of two or more persons, where, in some specific adventure, a profit is jointly sought, without any actual partnership or corporate designation. See also Joint venture.

Adventurer. One who undertakes uncertain or hazardous actions or enterprises. It is also used to denote one who seeks to advance his-own interests by unscrupulous designs on the credulity of others.

Adversary proceeding. One having opposing parties; contested, as distinguished from an ex parte hearing or proceeding. One of which the party seeking relief has given legal notice to the other party, and afforded the latter an opportunity to contest it.

Adversary system. The jurisprudential network of laws, rules and procedures characterized by opposing parties who contend against each other for a result favorable to themselves. In such system, the judge acts as an independent magistrate rather than prosecutor; distinguished from inquisitorial system.

Adverse. Opposed; contrary; in resistance or opposition to a claim, application, or proceeding. Having opposing interests; having interests for the preservation of which opposition is essential.

Use of land is "adverse", as against owner, if it is not made in subordination to him, is open and notorious and is not wrongful as to him; "adverse" means that one making use shall not recognize in those as against whom it is claimed to be adverse an authority either to prevent or to permit its continuance, and refers to nonrecognition of such authority at time use is made. Benson v. Fekete, Mo., 424 S.W.2d 729, 738.

As to adverse Enjoyment; User; Verdict; Witness, see those titles.

Adverse claim. An alleged right of one person asserted against the interest of another person. U.C.C. § 8-302.

Adverse enjoyment. See Adverse possession.

Adverse interest. The "adverse interest" of a witness, so as to permit cross-examination by the party calling him, must be so involved in the event of the suit that a legal right or liability will be acquired, lost, or materially affected by the judgment, and must be such as would be promoted by the success of the adversary of the party calling him. See also Adverse witness.

Adverse party. A party to an action whose interests are opposed to or opposite the interests of another party to the action.

Appeal. An "adverse party" entitled to notice of appeal is every party whose interest in relation to the judgment or decree appealed from is in conflict with the modification or reversal sought by the appeal. Such term includes the following: Every party interested in sustaining the judgment or decree. All parties appearing against losing party unless reversal of case will not be to party's detriment. Any party who would be prejudicially affected by a modification or reversal of the judgment appealed from. One who has interest in opposing object sought to be accomplished by appeal. Party to record, whose interest in subject-matter of appeal is adverse to reversal or modification of judgment or order appealed from.

Discovery. When the parties exchange pleadings, one asserting a claim for relief against the other, the parties are "adverse," within rule allowing written interrogatories to be served upon any adverse party. Carey v. Schultz, D.C.La., 42 F.R.D. 390, 393, 394, 395.

Adverse possession. A method of acquisition of title to real property by possession for a statutory period under certain conditions. Lowery v. Garfield County, 122 Mont. 571, 208 P.2d 478, 486. It has been described as the statutory method of acquiring title to land by limitation. Field v. Sosby, Tex.Civ.App., 226 S.W.2d 484, 486.

Because of the statute of limitations on the bringing of actions for the recovery of land, title can be acquired to real property by adverse possession. In order to establish title in this manner, there must be proof of nonpermissive use which is actual, open, notorious, exclusive and adverse for the statutorily prescribed period. Ryan v. Stavros, 348 Mass. 251, 203 N.E.2d 85. State statutes differ with respect to the required length of possession from an upper limit of 20 years to a lower one of 5 years, with even more extreme time periods covering certain special cases. There may be different periods of time even within a single state, depending on whether or not the adverse possessor has color of title and/or whether or not taxes have been paid. In some cases a longer possession is required against public entities than against individuals.

Adverse possession depends on intent of occupant to claim and hold real property in opposition to all the world, Sertic v. Roberts, 171 Or. 121, 136 P.2d 248; and also embodies the idea that owner of or persons interested in property have knowledge of the assertion of ownership by the occupant, Field v. Sosby, Tex.Civ.App., 226 S.W.2d 484, 486.

Adverse possession consists of actual possession with intent to hold solely for possessor to exclusion of others and is denoted by exercise of acts of dominion over land including making of ordinary use and taking of ordinary profits of which land is susceptible in its present state. U. S. v. Chatham, D.C.N.C., 208 F.Supp. 220, 226.

See also Constructive adverse possession; Prescription; Tacking.

Adverse use. Use without license or permission; an element necessary to acquire title or easement by prescription. Shuggars v. Brake, 248 Md. 38, 234 A.2d 752.

Adverse witness. A witness who gives evidence prejudicial to the party then examining him. Commonly used to describe a witness whose testimony is prejudicial to the party who called him and as a result, such witness may be impeached. Foremost Dairies Inc. v. Cutler, Fla.App., 212 So.2d 37, 40, 41. See also Adverse interest; Hostile or adverse witness.

Adversus /a'dvərəs/. In the civil law, against (contra). Adversus bonos mores, against good morals.
ADVERTISE

Adversus extraneos vitiosa possessio prodesse solet /adværšas ekstrēniyów vishiyówza pazesh(y)ow prowđęšę sówłat/. Prior possession is a good title of ownership against all who cannot show a better.

Advertise. To advise, announce, apprise, command, give notice of, inform, make known, publish. On call to the public attention by any means whatsoever. Any oral, written, or graphic statement made by the seller in any manner in connection with the solicitation of business and includes, without limitation because of enumeration, statements and representations made in a newspaper or other publication or on radio or television or contained in any notice, handbill, sign, catalog, or letter, or printed on or contained in any tag or label attached to or accompanying any merchandise. See also Printers Ink Statute.

Comparative advertising. Advertising that specifically compares the advertised brand with other brands of the same product.

Competitive advertising. Advertising that contains basically little information and is used only to allow a producer to maintain a share of the market for that product.

Informative advertising. Advertising that gives information about the suitability and quality of products. To be contrasted with competitive advertising.

Advice. View; opinion; information; the counsel given by lawyers to their clients; an opinion expressed as to wisdom of future conduct. Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 496.

The instruction usually given by one merchant or banker to another by letter, informing him of shipments made to him, or of bills or drafts drawn on him, with particulars of date, or sight, the sum, and the payee. Bills presented for acceptance or payment are frequently dishonored for want of advice.

Advice of counsel. A defense used in actions for malicious prosecution which requires a finding that defendant presented all facts to his counsel and that he honestly followed counsel's advice. Boylen v. Tracy, 254 Mass. 105, 108, 149 N.E. 674.

Ad vim majorem vel ad casus fortuitus non tenetur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenit /åd vim majórm vel åd käyssas fort(y)ywads nón tanlyðr kwís, náyssay s(y)ywá kälpá ítravánáirat/. No one is held to answer for the effects of a superior force, or of accidents, unless his own fault has contributed.

Advisare /ådvažéry/ or advisari /ådvažéray/. Lat. To consult, deliberate, consider, advise; to be advised. Occurring in the phrase curia advisari vult (q.v.), (usually abbreviated cur. adv. vult, or C.A.V.), the court wishes to be advised, or to consider the matter.

Advise. To give an opinion or counsel, or recommend a plan or course of action; also to give notice. To encourage, inform, or acquaint. It is different in meaning from "instruct" or "persuade." Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 497. Where a statute authorizes the trial court to advise the jury to acquit, the court has no power to instruct the jury to acquit. The court can only counsel, and the jury are not bound by the advice. "Advice" imports that it is discretionary or optional with the person addressed whether he will act on such advice or not.

Advised. Prepared to give judgment, after examination and deliberation. "The court took time to be advised."

Advisedly. With deliberation; intentionally.

Advisement. Consideration; deliberation; consultation. The consultation of a court, after the argument of a cause by counsel, and before delivering their opinion. In re Hohorst, 150 U.S. 653, 14 S.Ct. 221, 37 L.Ed. 1211.

Advisory. Counselling, suggesting, or advising, but not imperative or conclusive. A verdict on an issue out of chancery is advisory.

Advisory counsel. Attorney retained to give advice as contrasted with trial counsel.

Advisory jury. In actions in Federal Court in which there is no jury trial as of right, court may try case with an advisory jury and its verdict is not binding on court. Fed.R.Civ.P. 39(c). See also Jury.

Advisory opinion. Such may be rendered by a court at the request of the government or an interested party indicating how the court would rule on a matter should adversary litigation develop. An advisory opinion is thus an interpretation of the law without binding effect. While the International Court of Justice and some state courts will render advisory opinions the federal courts will not; their jurisdiction being restricted to cases or controversies. See, however, Declaratory Judgment.

Advisory trial. See Advisory jury.

Advisory verdict. See Advisory jury.

Ad vitam /åd váydam/. For life. In feodo, vel ad vitam; in fee, or for life.

Ad vitam aut culpam /åd váydam at kälpam/. For life or until fault. Words descriptive of a tenure of office "for life or good behavior," equivalent to quamdiu bene se gesserit.

Advocare /ådvákáríy/. Lat. To defend; to call to one's aid; to vouch; to warrant.

Advocassie /ådvákássíy/. L. Fr. The office of an advocate; advocacy.

Advocata /ådvákáydz/. In old English law, a patro-ness; a woman who had the right of presenting to a church.
Advocat /ədvəkət/. v. To speak in favor of or defend by argument. To support, vindicate, or recommend publicly.

Advocate /ədvəkət/, n. One who assists, defends, or pleads for another. One who renders legal advice and aid and pleads the cause of another before a court or a tribunal, a counselor. A person learned in the law, and duly admitted to practice, who assists his client with advice, and pleads for him in open court. An assistant; adviser; a pleader of causes.

Advocatī /ədvəkətĭd/, Lat. In Roman law, patrons; pleaders; speakers.

Advocatūs /ədvəkətʃ(ĭ)yəs/. In the civil law, the quality, function, privilege, or territorial jurisdiction of an advocate. The functions, duty, or privilege of an advocate.

Advocatī ecclesiæ /ədvəkətĭday skeliziyə/. Advocates of the church. A term used in the ecclesiastical law to denote the patrons of churches who presented to the living on an avoidance. This term was also applied to those who were retained to argue the cases of the church. There were of two sorts: those retained as pleaders to argue the cases of the church and attend to its law-matters; and advocates, or patrons of the advowson.

Advocatī fisic /ədvəkətĭday fisay/. In civil law, those chosen by the emperor to argue his cause whenever a question arose affecting his revenues. 3 Bl.Com. 27. Advocates of the fisc, or revenue; fiscal advocates (qui causam fisci egissent). Answering, in some measure, to the king’s counsel in English law.

Advocacione decimarum /ədvəkwəkshyəwənij dés-mərəm/. A writ which lay for tithes, demanding the fourth part or upwards, that belonged to any church.

Advocator /ədvəkwəkədər/. In old practice, one who called on or vouched another to warrant a title; a voucher. Advocatus; the person called on, or vouched; a vouchers.

Advocatus /ədvəkwəkədəs/. A pleader; a narrator. In the civil law, an advocate; one who managed or assisted in managing another’s cause before a judicial tribunal. Called also “patronus.” But distinguished from causidicus.

Advocatus diaboli /ədvəkwəkədəs dayə-baləy/. In ecclesiastical law, the devil’s advocate; the advocate who argues against the canonization of a saint.

Advocatus est, ad quem pertinet jus advertisementis aliquius ecclesiæ, ut ad ecclesiam, nomine proprio, non alieno, possess præsentare /ədvəkwəkədəs əst, əd kwəm párərán jəs ədvəkwəkəshyəwənəs skeliziyəwəs skeliziyə, ə əd skeliziyəm, nəməni pryəwprəwiyə, ən skeliziyəwən, pəst pryəzəntərəyə/. A patron is he to whom appertains the right of presentation to a church, in such a manner that he may present to such a church in his own name, and not in the name of another.

Ad voluntatem /əd vələntətəm/. At will. Ad voluntatem domini, at the will of the lord.

Advoutrer /ədvəvtrər/. In old English law, an adulterer.

Advoutry /ədvəvtrəy/. In old English law, adultery between parties both of whom were married. Or the offense by an adulteress of continuing to live with the man with whom she committed the adultery. Sometimes spelled “advortry.” See Advoutrer.

Advowee, or avowee /əd(v)əvwi/. The person or patron who has a right to present to a benefice.

Advowee paramount. The sovereign, or highest patron.

Advowson /ədvəwson/. In English ecclesiastical law, the right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice; the right of presenting a fit person to the bishop, to be by him admitted and instituted to a certain benefice within the diocese, which has become vacant. The person enjoying this right is called the “patron” (patronus) of the church, and was formerly termed “advocatus,” the advocate or defender, or in English, “advowee.” When there is no patron, or he neglects to exercise his right within six months, it is called a lapse, and a title is given to the ordinary to collate to a church: when a presentation is made by one who has no right, it is called a usurpation.

Advowsons are of different kinds:

Advowson appendant is an advowson annexed to a manor, and passing with it, as incident or appendant to it, by a grant of the manor only, without adding any other words. 2 Bl.Com. 23.

Advowson collative. Where the bishop happens himself to be the patron, in which case (presentation being impossible, or unnecessary) he does by one act, which is termed “collation,” or conferring the benefice, all that is usually done by the separate acts of presentation and institution. 2 Bl.Com. 22, 23.

Advowson donative exists where the patron has the right to put his clerk in possession by his mere gift, or deed of donation, without any presentation to the bishop, or institution by him. Donative benefices were converted into presentative by the Benefices Act of 1898.

Advowson in gross is an advowson separated from the manor, and annexed to the person. 2 Bl.Com. 22.

Advowson presentative is the usual kind of advowson, where the patron has the right of presentation to the bishop, or ordinary, and moreover to demand of him to institute his clerk, if he finds him canonically qualified. 2 Bl.Com. 22.

Advowtry /ədvəwtrəy/. See Advoutry.

Ad waractum /əd warəktəm/. To follow.

Ædes /ədiyz/. Lat. In the civil law, a house, dwelling, temple, place of habitation, whether in the city or country. In the country everything upon the surface of the soil passed under the term “ceedes.”

Ædificare /iˈdɪfɪkərɪ. Lat. In civil and old English law, to make or build a house; to erect a building.

Ædificare in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noccat /iˈdɪfɪkərɪ in t(ə)wəw prəwprəw səˈləʊ wən lääsat kwó děltaray nősíat/. To build upon your own land what may injure another is not lawful. A proprietor of land has no right to erect an edifice on his own ground, interfering with the due enjoyment of adjoining premises, as by overhanging them, or by throwing water from the roof and eaves upon them, or by obstructing ancient lights and windows.

Ædificatum solo solo cedit /lyðaféǩeydam sólwow sólow sýdat/. What is built upon land belongs to or goes with land.

Ædifica solo cedunt /lyðafísh(y)w sólwow sýydant/. Buildings belong to [go with] the soil.

Ædilitum edictum /lyðďadam ydíktam/. In the Roman law, the ædillitan ædict. An edict providing remedies for frauds in sales, the execution of which belonged to the curule ædiles. That provision by which the buyer of a diseased or imperfect slave, horse, or other animal was relieved at the expense of the vendor who had sold him as sound knowing him to be imperfect.

Æfesn. In old English law, the remuneration to the proprietor of a domain for the privilege of feeding swine under the oaks and beeches of his woods.

Ægroto /lygréwdow/. Lat. Being sick or indisposed. A term used in some of the older reports.

Ægyde. Uncompensated, unpaid for, unavauged. From the participle of exclusion, a, æ, or ex, (Goth.) and gild, payment, requital.

Æl /Éy/. A Norman French term signifying "grandfather." It is also spelled "sieux" and "ayle.""} Æqulor est dispositio legis quam hominé /lykwíyóy ëst dispaišiš(y)w sólias kwáim hámanas/. The disposition of the law is more equitable than that of man.

Æqultas /lykwatás/. In the civil law, equity, as opposed to strictum or summum jus (q.v.). Otherwise called Æquum, æquum bonum, æquum et justum. See Æquum and bonum is lex legum. Equity acts upon the person.

Æqultas agit in personam /lykwatás éjyt in parsowm/. Equity acts upon the person.

Æqultas est correctio legis generaliter latea, qua parte defici /lykwatás ëst karéksh(y)w sólias jenérə̂lady lédiy, kwéy párdiy défásat/. Equity is the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its generality, is deficient.

Æqultas est correctio quædam legi adhibita, qua ab ëh abest aliqüd proprii generali sine exceptione comprehensionem /lykwatás ëst karéksh(y)w sólias lìjjąy adh(y)hads kwìyada ëh fìyæ ëshët ñakwad proftér jenérə̂lady sàyniy ekspéshyóyúnyi kómprefânshyówýn/. Without an exception, something is absent from it.

Æqultas est perfeccta quædam ratio que suscriptum interpretatur et emendat; nulla scriptura comprehensa, sed solum in verà ratione consistens /lykwatás ëst pfáftka kwìyadam réşhyóy kwìy kwìy ësh ësh ësh qurúntérýdrâ ëd ñamëntâ; ñàš skríphûsà kýmàrâñíñas, sed sólwow in víra réşhyóyúñi kónsístêñ/. Equity is a certain perfect reason, which interprets and amends the written law, comprehended in no writing, but consisting in right reason alone.

Æqultas est quasi æqualitas /lykwatás ëst kwéyíy kwólatás/. Equity is as it were equality; equity is a species of equality or equalization.

Æqultas ignorantiae optulator, oscitantia non Item /lykwatás ignóranšišyiy ówpícháláyéydar, òshášišišyiy non ñýدم/. Equity assists ignorance, but not carelessness.

Æqultas non facti jus, sed juri auxiliatur /lykwatás non féysat jáš, sëd jüráy ógzhíyéydar/. Equity does not make law, but assists law.

Æqultas nunquam contravent legis /lykwatás nùnkwam kontráyñmat líyjas/. Equity never counteracts the laws.

Æqultas sequitur legem /lykwatás sëkwadar líyýam/. Equity follows the law.

Æqultas supervacua odl /lykwatás sùwparvakýuyw áwød/. Equity abhors superfluous things.

Æqultas uxoribus, liberes, creditoribus maxime favet /lykwatás akóryíbas, lîbaras, kredótyìbas mákšamíy féyvat/. Equity favors wives and children, creditors most of all.

Æquum et bonum est lex legum /lykwam unt bónnam ëst lëks líyýam/. What is equitable and good is the law of laws.

Æquus /lykwás/. Lat. Equal; even. A provision in a will for the division of the residuary estate ex æquus among the legatees means equally or evenly.

Æra, or era /Irà/. A fixed point of chronological time, whence any number of years is counted; thus, the Christian era began at the birth of Christ, and the Mohammedan era at the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina. The derivation of the word has been much contested.

Ærarium /Irériyam/. Lat. In the Roman law, the treasury (fiscus).

Æs /lyzy/. Lat. In the Roman law, money (literally, brass); metallic money in general, including gold.

Æs allenum /lyzy aliýýymam/. A civil law term signifying a debt. Literally translated, the money of another. The civil law considered borrowed money as the property of another, as distinguished from cas suum, one's own money.

Æsenclia /lyšnilysh(y)x/. In old English law, Esney; the right or privilege of the eldest born.

Æsenclus /lyšnilyshyýas/. See Aeneclus; Aesnecla.

Æs suum /lyys sùwom/. One's own money. In the Roman law, debt; a debt; that which others owe to us (quod aliís nobíss debent).

Aesthetic /asóđík/. Relating to that which is beautiful or in good taste.

Aesthetic value. The artistic worth of something as contrasted with its practical value.
Aestimatio capitis /ēstāmēsh(ı)yow kīpādas/. Lat. The value of a head. In Saxon law, the estimation or valuation of the head; the price or value of a man. The price to be paid for taking the life of a human being. By the laws of Athelstan, the life of every man not excepting that of the king himself was estimated at a certain price, which was called the were, or aestimatio capitis.

Aestimatio præteritī delicti ex postreōno facto nunquam crescit /ēstāmēsh(ı)yow prātērādāy dālīktāy ēks powstříjmow fēktow nākgwam křēsát/. The weight of a past offense is never increased by a subsequent fact.

Aetas /ıytās/. Lat. In the civil law, age.

Aetas infantīs (also written infantīli) proxima /ıytās infēnsišyi prōksma/. The age next to infancy; the first half of the period of childhood (pueritia), extending from seven years to ten and a half. 4 Bl.Comm. 22. See Age.

Aetas legītima /ıytās lajīdamā/. Lawful age. See Legal age; Majority.

Aetas perfecτa /ıytās pōrēktā/. Complete age; full age.

Aetas primā /ıytās prāyma/. The first age; infancy (infantīa).

Aetas pubertatī proxima /ıytās pyū́wbartērdāy prōksma/. The age next to puberty; the last half of the period of childhood (pueritia), extending from ten and a half years to fourteen, in which there might or might not be criminal responsibility according to natural capacity or incapacity. 4 Bl.Comm. 22. See Age.

Ætate probanda /ıytēdyi prōwbēnda/. A writ (now obsolete) which inquired whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry was of full age to receive his lands. It was directed to the escheater of the county.

Ætheling /ıyśolj/. In Saxon law, a noble; generally a prince of the blood.

A.F.D.C. Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

Affair. (Fr.). A law suit.

Affect. To act upon; influence; change; enlarge or abridge; often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon persons and things. To lay hold of or attack (as a disease does); to act, or produce an effect upon; to impress or influence (the mind or feelings); to touch.

AFFECTED with a public interest. Affirmatively, phrase means that a business or property must be such or be so employed as to justify the conclusion that it has been devoted to a public use, and its use thereby in effect granted to the public. Negatively, it does not mean that a business is affected with a public interest merely because it is large or because the public are warranted in having a feeling of concern in respect of its maintenance. H. Earl Clack Co. v. Public Service Commission of State of Montana, 94 Mont. 488, 22 P.2d 1056. Business affecting the community at large.

Affecting commerce. Any activity which touches or concerns business or industry, favorably or burden-somely; commonly used within context of Labor Management Relations Act regarding a labor dispute which burdens commerce. U. S. v. Ricciardi, C.A. N.Y., 357 F.2d 91, 95.

The term "affecting commerce" means in commerce, or burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce, or having led or tending to lead to a labor dispute burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(7).

The term "industry affecting commerce" means any industry or activity in commerce or in which a labor dispute would burden or obstruct commerce or tend to burden or obstruct commerce or the free flow of commerce. Labor Management Relations Act, § 501(1).

Affection. The making over, pawning, or mortgaging of a thing to assure the payment of a sum of money, or the discharge of some other duty or service. In a medical sense, an abnormal bodily condition.

Affectio tua nomen imponit operi tuo /sfēksh(ı)yow t(y)uwa nōwmān ēmpōnāt āwpāray t(y)īwōw/. Your disposition (or motive, intention) gives name (or character) to your work or act.

Afectus /sfēktas/. Disposition; intention, impulse or affection of the mind. One of the causes for a challenge of a juror is propter affectum, on account of a suspicion of bias or favor. 3 Bl.Comm. 363.

Afectus punitur licet non sequatur effectus /sfēktas pyūwnāydar lāysāt nōn sōkwēydar sfēktas/. The intention is punished although the intended result does not follow.

Afeer /sfir/. To assess, liquidate, appraise, fix in amount.

Afeerors /sfirarz/. In common law, persons who, in court-leets, upon oath, settled and moderated the fines and amercements imposed on those who had committed offenses arbitrarily punishable, or that had no express penalty appointed by statute. They were also appointed to moderate fines, etc., in court-baron.

Affermer /sfarmēy/. L. Fr. To let to farm. Also to make sure, to establish or confirm.

Affiance. To assure by pledge. An agreement by which a man and woman promise that they will marry each other.

Affiant /sfāyant/. The person who makes and subscribes an affidavit. The word is used, in this sense, interchangeably with "deponent." But the latter term should be reserved as the designation of one who makes a deposition.
AFFIDARE

Affidare /əˈfɪdiər-/ At common law, to swear faith to; to pledge one's faith or do fealty by making oath. Used of the mutual relation arising between landlord and tenant. 1 Bl.Comm. 367. Affidavit is of kindred meaning.

Affidari /əˈfɪdiər-/ To be mustered and enrolled for soldiers upon an oath of fidelity.

Affidatio /əˈfɪdəˈʃənə-/ At common law, a swearing of the oath of fidelity or of fealty to one's lord, under whose protection the quasi-vassal has voluntarily come.

Affidatio dominorum /əˈfɪdəˈʃənər ˈdɔməˈnɔrəm-/ An oath taken by the lords in parliament.

Affidatus /əˈfɪdətəs-/ At common law one who was not a vassal, but who for the sake of protection had connected himself with one more powerful.

Affidavit /əˈfɪdiəvət-/ A written or printed declaration or statement of facts, made voluntarily, and confirmed by the oath or affirmation of the party making it, taken before a person having authority to administer such oath or affirmation. State v. Knight, 219 Kan. 563, 549 P.2d 1397, 1401. See also Certification; Jurat; Verification.

Affidavit of defense. An affidavit stating that the defendant has a good defense to the plaintiff's action on the merits; e.g. affidavit filed with motion for summary judgment. Fed.R.Civil P. 56(e).

Affidavit of inquiry. By court rule in certain states, substituted service may be had on absent defendants if it appears by affidavit of plaintiff's attorney, or other person having knowledge of the facts, that defendant cannot, after diligent inquiry, be served within the state.

Affidavit of merits. One setting forth that the defendant has a meritorious defense (substantial and not technical) and stating the facts constituting the same. See Affidavit of defense.

Affidavit of notice. A sworn statement that affiant has given proper notice of hearing to other parties to action.

Affidavit of service. An affidavit intended to certify the service of a writ, notice, summons, or other document or process. In federal courts, if service is made by a person other than a United States Marshall or his deputy, he shall make affidavit thereof. Fed.R.Civil P. 4(g).

Affidavit to hold to bail. An affidavit required in many cases before the defendant in a civil action may be arrested. Such an affidavit must contain a statement, clearly and certainly expressed, by someone acquainted with the fact, of an indebtedness from the defendant to the plaintiff, and must show a distinct cause of action.

Affilare /əˈfɪlər-/ L. Lat. To put on record; to file or affile. Affiletur, let it be filed. De recordo affilatrum, affiled of record.

Affile /əˈfɪlə/- A term employed in old practice, signifying to put on file. In modern usage it is contracted to file.

Affiliate /əˈfɪliət-/ Signifies a condition of being united; being in close connection, allied, associated, or attached as a member or branch.

Affiliate company. Company effectively controlled by another company. Under Investment Company Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 80a–2), company in which there is ownership (direct or indirect) of 5 percent or more of the voting stock.

Affiliation. Act or condition of being affiliated, allied, or associated with another person, body, or organization. Imports less than membership in an organization, but more than sympathy, and a working alliance to bring to fruition the proscribed program of a proscribed organization, as distinguished from mere cooperation with a proscribed organization in lawful activities, is essential. Bridges v. Wixon, Cal., 326 U.S. 135, 65 S.Ct. 1443, 1447, 89 L.Ed. 2103. It includes an element of dependability upon which the organization can rely, which, though not equivalent to membership duty, rests upon course of conduct that could not be abruptly ended without giving at least reasonable cause for charge of breach of good faith. U. S. ex rel. Kettunen v. Reimer, C.C.A.N.Y., 79 F.2d 315, 317. See also Association.

The act of imputing or determining the paternity of a bastard child, and the obligation to maintain it.

Affines /əˈfɪniəz-/ In the civil law, connections by marriage, whether of the persons or their relatives. Neighbors, who own or occupy adjoining lands. From this word is derived affinity, denoting relationship by marriage. The singular, affinis, is used in a variety of related significations—a boundary; a partner or sharer, affinis culpa (an aider or one who has knowledge of a crime).

Affinitas /əˈfɪnɪtəs-/ Lat. In the civil law, affinity; relationship by marriage.

Affinitas affinitatis /əˈfɪnɪtəs əfɪˈniʃətəs-/ Remote relationship by marriage. That connection between parties arising from marriage which is neither consanguinity nor affinity. This term signifies the connection between the kinsmen of the two persons married, as, for example, the husband's brother and the wife's sister.

Affinity /əˈfɪnəti-/ A close agreement; relation; spiritual relation or attraction held to exist between certain persons. State ex inf. Norman v. Ellis, 325 Mo. 154, 28 S.W.2d 363, 367. Relation which one spouse because of marriage has to blood relatives of the other. State v. Hooper, 140 Kan. 481, 37 P.2d 52.

The connection existing, in consequence of marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other. Kest v. Lewis, 169 Ohio St. 317, 159 N.E.2d 449, 450.

Degrees of relationship by affinity are computed as are degrees of relationship by consanguinity. The doctrine of affinity grew out of the canonical maxim that marriage makes husband and wife one. The husband has the same relation, by affinity, to his wife's blood relatives as she has to them by consanguinity and vice versa. State v. Hooper, 140 Kan. 481, 37 P.2d 52.
Affirmation is distinguished into three kinds: (1) Direct, or that subsisting between the husband and his wife's relations by blood, or between the wife and the husband's relations by blood; (2) secondary, or that which subsists between the husband and his wife's relations by marriage; (3) collateral, or that which subsists between the husband and the relations of his wife's relations.

In a larger sense, consanguinity or kindred.

Quasi affinity. In the civil law, the affinity which exists between two persons, one of whom has been betrothed to a kinsman of the other, but who have never been married.

Affirm. To ratify, make firm, confirm, establish, reassert. To make affirmation; to make a solemn and formal declaration or asseveration that an affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc., this being substituted for an oath in certain cases. Also, to give testimony on affirmation. See Affidavit; Jurat; Verification.

Judgment. In the practice of appellate courts, to affirm a judgment, decree, or order, is to declare that it is valid and right and must stand as rendered below; to ratify and reassert it; to concur in its correctness and confirm its efficacy. If the appellate court remanded the case, it would be sending it back to the lower court with instructions to correct the irregularities specified in the appellate opinion. If the appellate court reversed the court below, it would have changed the result reached below.

Pleading. To allege or aver a matter of fact; to state it affirmatively. The opposite of deny or traverse.

Affirmance. The confirming, or ratifying of a former law, or judgment. The confirmation and ratification by an appellate court of a judgment, order, or decree of a lower court brought before it for review. See Affirm.

The ratification or confirmation of a voidable contract or act by the party who is to be bound thereby. The term is in accuracy to be distinguished from ratification, which is a recognition of the validity or binding force as against the party ratifying, of some act performed by another person; and from confirmation, which would seem to apply more properly to cases where a doubtful authority has been exercised by another in behalf of the person ratifying; but these distinctions are not generally observed.

Affirmance day general. In the English court of exchequer, a day appointed by the judges of the common pleas, and barons of the exchequer, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term for the general affirmation or reversal of judgments.

Affirmant /əfərmənt/. A person who testifies on affirmation, or who affirms instead of taking an oath. Used in affidavits and depositions which are affirmed, instead of sworn to in place of the word "deponent." See also Affirmation; Jurat; Verification.

Affirmantii, non neganti incumbit probatio /əfərmənti, nɔn nɛɡənti ɪnˈkɪmbɪt prɔbˈbɛʃ(ɪ)yəʊ/. The burden of proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon one who denies.

Affirmantis est probare /əfərməntiˌes ɛst prɔbˈbɛr/.

He who affirms must prove.

Affirmation. A solemn and formal declaration or asseveration that an affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc.; this being substituted for an oath in certain cases. A solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath. See also Confirmation; Jurat; Oath; Verification.

Affirmation of fact. A statement concerning a subject-matter of a transaction which might otherwise be only an expression of opinion but which is affirmed as an existing fact material to the transaction, and reasonably induces the other party to consider and rely upon it, as a fact.

Affirmatio unius excluso est alterius /əfərməˈʃiʊnjuː ɪnˈkjuːso ɛst ɔltəˈriːjʊs/. The affirmation of one thing is the exclusion of the other.

Affirmative. That which declares positively; that which avers a fact to be true; that which establishes; the opposite of negative.

As to affirmative Plea; Proof; Warranty, see those titles.

Affirmative action programs. Employment programs required by federal statutes and regulations designed to remedy discriminatory practices in hiring minority group members; i.e. designed to eliminate existing and continuing discrimination, to remedy lingering effects of past discrimination, and to create systems and procedures to prevent future discrimination; commonly based on population percentages of minority groups in a particular area. Factors considered are race, color, sex, creed and age. National Labor Relations Board v. Fansteel Metallurgical Corporation, 306 U.S. 240, 59 S.Ct. 490, 497, 83 L.Ed. 627; National Labor Relations Board v. Leviton Mfg. Co., C.C.A.2, 111 F.2d 619, 621. The "affirmative action" which the National Labor Relations Board is authorized to take to effectuate the policies of the National Labor Relations Act is action to make effective the redress of rights conferred upon employees by the act. National Labor Relations Board v. National Casket Co., C.C.A.2, 107 F.2d 992, 998.

Affirmative charge. The general "affirmative charge" is an instruction to the jury that, whatever the evidence may be, defendant cannot be convicted under the count in the indictment to which the charge is directed.

Affirmative defense. In pleading, matter constituting a defense; new matter which, assuming the complaint to be true, constitutes a defense to it. Under the Fed. Rules of Civil Procedure, and also under most state Rules, all affirmative defenses must be raised in the responsive pleading (answer); such defenses include accord and satisfaction, assumption of risk, contributory negligence, duress, estoppel, etc. See Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c).

Affirmative defenses in criminal cases include insanity, intoxication, self-defense, automatism, coercion, alibi, and duress.

Affirmative easement. An easement which gives to the owner of the dominant tenement the right to use the servient tenement, or to do some act thereon which would otherwise be unlawful. Clements v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App., 184 S.W.2d 485, 487.
Affirmative pregnant. In common law pleading, an affirmative allegation implying some negative in favor of the adverse party.

Affirmative proof. Such evidence of the truth of matters asserted as tends to establish them, regardless of character of evidence offered.

Affirmative relief. Relief, benefit, or compensation which may be due and granted to defendant. Relief for which defendant might maintain an action independently of plaintiff’s claim and on which he might proceed to recovery, although plaintiff abandoned his cause of action or failed to establish it. Specific performance (q.v.) is a type of affirmative relief that may be granted to plaintiff.

Affirmative statute. A statute couched in affirmative or mandatory terms. One which directs the doing of an act, or declares what shall be done; as a negative statute is one which prohibits a thing from being done, or declares what shall not be done.

Affirmative warranty. Affirms existence of a fact at time insurance policy is entered into, while promissory warranty requires that something be done or not done after policy has taken effect. Sentinel Life Ins. Co. v. Blackmer, C.C.A.Colo., 77 F.2d 347, 350. See also Warranty.

Affix. Fix or fasten in any way; to attach physically. To attach to, inscribe, or impress upon, as a signature, a seal, a trade-mark. To attach, add to, or fasten upon, permanently, as in the case of fixtures annexed to real estate. A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by the roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. See Fixture.

Affixing. Securely attached.

Affixus /afiksəs/. In the civil law, affixed, fixed, or fastened to.

Affliction. A distress of mind or body; that which causes continuing anguish or suffering.

Age. The length of time during which a person has lived. The time at which one attains full personal rights and capacities. In law the term signifies those periods in the lives of persons of both sexes which enable them to do certain acts which, before they had arrived at those periods, they were prohibited from doing. See e.g. Age of consent; Age of majority; Legal age; Majority.

As used in particular statutes, the term implies disability and, by definition, has been applied to all minors under a certain age and to others disabled by old age. Hampton v. Ewert, C.C.A.Okl., 22 F.2d 81, 87.

Aged person. One advanced in years; refers to his or her chronological, not mental age.

Agency. Relation in which one person acts for or represents another by latter's authority, either in the relationship of principal and agent, master and servant, or employer or proprietor and independent contractor. Gorton v. Doty, 57 Idaho 792, 69 P.2d 136, 139. It also designates a place at which business of company or individual is transacted by an agent. Johnson Freight Lines v. Davis, 170 Tenn. 177, 93 S.W.2d 637, 639. The relation created by express or implied contract or by law, whereby one party delegates the transaction of some lawful business with more or less discretionary power to another, who undertakes to manage the affair and render to him an account thereof. State ex rel. Cities Service Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission, 337 Mo. 809, 85 S.W.2d 890, 894. Or relationship where one confides the management of some affair, to be transacted on his account, to other party. Or where one party is authorized to do certain acts for, or in relation to the rights or property of the other. But means more than tacit permission, and involves request, instruction, or command. Klee v. U. S., C.C.A.Wash., 53 F.2d 58, 61. The consensual relation existing between two persons, by virtue of which one is subject to other's control. Tarver, Steele & Co. v. Pendleton Gin Co., Tex.Civ.App., 25 S.W.2d 158, 159.

Agency is the fiduciary relation which results from the manifestation of consent by one person to another that the other shall act on his behalf and subject to his control, and consent by the other so to act. Restatement, Second, Agency § 1.

See also Agent; Authority.

Actual agency. Exists where the agent is really employed by the principal.

Administrative agency. See Administrative agency.

Agency by estoppel. One created by operation of law and established by proof of such acts of the principal as reasonably lead to the conclusion of its existence. Arises where principal, by negligence in failing to supervise agent's affairs, allows agent to exercise powers not granted to him, thus justifying others in believing agent possesses requisite authority.

Deed of agency. A revocable and voluntary trust for payment of debts.

Del credere. Type of agency in which agent is entrusted with goods, documents or securities and in which he is given broad authority to collect from the buyer and in some cases has been held responsible for the buyer's solvency.

Exclusive agency. An agreement by owner that during life of contract he will not sell property to a purchaser procured by another agent, which agreement does not preclude owner himself from selling to a purchaser of his own procuring, while a contract giving a broker "exclusive sale" is more than such exclusive agency, and is an agreement by the owner that he will not sell the property during the life of the contract to any purchaser not procured by the broker in question. See also Exclusive agency.

Executive agency. See that title.

General agency. That which exists when there is a delegation to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business or employment. It implies authority on the part of the agent to act without restriction or qualification in all matters relating to the business of his principal.

Implied agency. One created by act of parties and deduced from proof of other facts. It is an actual agency, proved by deductions or inferences from other facts, and third party need have no knowledge of the principal's acts, nor have relied on them.

Intervening agency. See that title.

Ostensible agency. One which exists where the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. See also Agency by estoppel, supra.

A person is guilty of aggravated assault if he: attempts to cause serious bodily injury to another, or causes such injury purposely, knowingly or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life; or, attempts to cause or purposely or knowingly causes bodily injury to another with a deadly weapon. Model Penal Code, § 211.1(2). In all jurisdictions statutes punish such aggravated assaults as assault with intent to murder (or rob or kill or rape) and assault with a dangerous (or deadly) weapon more severely than "simple" assaults. See also Assault.

Aggravated battery. Unlawful application of force to another characterized by unusual or serious consequences or attending circumstances such as a dangerous weapon. This offense was unknown at common law. See Aggravated assault.

Aggravation. Any circumstance attending the commission of a crime or tort which increases its guilt or enormity or adds to its injurious consequences, but which is above and beyond the essential constituents of the crime or tort itself. See e.g. Aggravated assault.

Aggravation of the disability. Refers to the course or progress of the workman's condition resulting from the specific injury for which an award or arrangement of compensation has been made. Keefer v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 171 Or. 405, 135 P.2d 806, 809.

Aggregate. Entire number, sum, mass, or quantity of something; total amount; complete whole. One provision under will may be the aggregate if there are no more units to fall into that class. Composed of several; consisting of many persons united together; a combined whole.

Aggregate corporation. See Corporation.

Aggregate income. Total income of husband and wife who file a joint tax return.

Aggregate theory of partnership. A partnership is the totality of persons engaged in a business and not an entity in itself as in the case of a corporation.

Aggregatio mentium /agregaysh(y)ow mentshiyam/. The meeting of minds. The moment when a contract is complete. A supposed derivation of the word "agreement," (q.v.).

Aggregation /agregayshən/. The combination of two or more elements in patent claims, each of which is unrelated, and each of which performs separately and without cooperation, where combination does not define a composite integrated mechanism. Bowser, Inc. v. U. S., 368 F.2d 346, 351, 181 Ct.Cl. 834. Term means that the elements of a claimed combination are incapable of co-operation to produce a unitary result, and in its true sense does not need prior art patents to support it.

Aggressor. One who first employs hostile force. Penn v. Henderson, 174 Or. 1, 146 P.2d 760, 766. The party who first offers violence or offense. He who begins a quarrel or dispute, either by threatening or striking another.

The process of classifying accounts receivable by the time elapsed since the claim came into existence for the purpose of estimating the amount of uncollectible accounts receivable as of a given date.

Agio /ajíow/. In commercial law, a term used to express the difference in point of value between metal and paper money, or between one sort of metallic money and another.

Agiotage /ázh(i)yotázh/. A speculation on the rise and fall of the public debt, or the public funds. The speculator is called "agioteur."

Agist /ajíst/. An ancient law term meant to take in and give feed to the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to collect the money due for the same to the king's use.

There is also agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea; and terre agistate are lands whose owners must keep up the sea-banks.

In canon law, a composition or mean rate at which some right or due might be reckoned.

Tithe of agistment was a small tithe paid to the rector or vicar on cattle or other produce of grass lands. It was paid by the occupier of the land and not by the person who put in his cattle to graze.

Agistor /ajístar/. See Agister: Agistment.

Agitator /ajsteydar/. One who stirs up; excites; ruffles; perturbs. One who incessantly advocates a social change.

Agnates /agnéys/ /ágnéydiyz/. In the law of descents, relations by the father, or on the father's side. This word is used in the Scotch law, and by some writers as an English word, corresponding with the Latin agnati (q.v.).

Agnati /ágnéyday/. In Roman law, the term included all the cognates who trace their connection exclusively through males. A table of cognates is formed by taking each lineal ancestor in turn and including all his descendants of both sexes in the tabular view. If, then, in tracing the various branches of such a genealogical tree or tree, we stop whenever we come to the name of a female, and pursue that particular branch or ramification no further, all who remain after the descendants of women have been excluded are agnates, and their connection together is agnatic relationship. All persons are agnatically connected together who are under the same patri potestas, or who have been under it, or who might have been under it if their lineal ancestor had lived long enough to exercise his empire.

The agnate family consisted of all persons living at the same time, who would have been subject to the patris potentas of a common ancestor, if his life had been continued to their time.

Cognates were all persons who could trace their blood to a single ancestor or ancestress, and agnates were those cognates who traced their connection exclusively through males. Between agnati and cognati there is this difference: that, under the name of agnati, cognati are included, but not è converso; for instance, a father's brother, that is, a paternal uncle, is both agnatus and cognatus, but a mother's brother, that is, a maternal uncle, is a cognatus but not agnatus.

Agnatic /ágnédak/. [From agnati, q.v.] Derived from or through males. 2 Bl.Comm. 236.

Agnatio /ágnéysh(i)yow/. In the civil law, relationship on the fathers' side; the relationship of agnati; agnation. Agnatio a patre est.

Agnation /ágnéyshan/. Kinship by the father's side. See Agnates; Agnati.

Agnomen /ágnówan/. Lat. An additional name or title; a nickname. A name or title which a man gets by some action or peculiarity; the last of the four names sometimes given a Roman. Thus, Scipio Africanus (the African) from his African victories. See Nomen.

Agnomination /ágnómanéyshan/. A surname; an additional name or title; agnomen.

Agony. Extreme physical pain or mental distress.

Agraphia. See Aphasia.

Agrarian /agrééyshan/. Relating to land, or to a division or distribution of land; as an agrarian law.

Agrarian laws. In Roman law, laws for the distribution among the people, by public authority, of the lands constituting the public domain, usually territory conquered from an enemy. In common parlance the term is frequently applied to laws which have for their object the more equal division or distribution of landed property; laws for subdividing large properties and increasing the number of landholders.

Agrarium. A tax upon or tribute payable out of land.

A gratia /by gréysh(i)y/. By grace; not of right.

Agiamentum /ágríyáméntam/. In old English law, agreement; an agreement.
Agree. To concur; come into harmony; give mutual assent; unite in mental action; exchange promises; make an agreement; arrange; to settle. Concur or acquiesce in; approve or adopt. Agreed or agreed to, are frequently used (like accord), to show the concurrence or harmony of cases; e.g. Agreed per curiam. Usually implies some contractual undertaking. To grant or covenant, as when a grantor agrees that no building shall be erected on an adjoining lot; or a mortgagor agrees to cause all taxes to be paid. See Agreement; Contract.

Agreed. Settled or established by agreement. Commonly synonymous with "contracted."

Agreed amount clause. Provision in insurance policy that the insured will carry a stated amount of insurance coverage.

Agreed case. See Case agreed on under Case.

Agreed judgment. See Judgment.

Agreed price. The consideration for sale of goods arrived at by mutual agreement as contrasted with "open price". U.C.C. § 2–305.

Agreed statement of facts. A statement of facts, agreed on by the parties as true and correct, to be submitted to a court for a ruling on the law of the case. United States Trust Co. v. New Mexico, 183 U.S. 535, 22 S.Ct. 172, 46 L.Ed. 315. See Case agreed on under Case. See also Stipulation.

Agreed statement on appeal. Narrative statement of facts in case which may be filed on appeal in lieu of report of proceedings below. It is required that all parties agree to content of narrative.

Agreed value. The worth or value of property upon which persons agree beforehand as in a partnership contract in which the parties agree on the value of a partner's interest in a specified amount. Walraven v. Ramsay, 335 Mich. 331, 55 N.W.2d 853, 856.

Agreement. A coming together of minds; a coming together in opinion or determination; the coming together in accord of two minds on a given proposition. In law, a concord of understanding and intention between two or more parties with respect to the effect upon their relative rights and duties, of certain past or future facts or performances. The consent of two or more persons concurring respecting the transmission of some property, right, or benefits, with the view of contracting an obligation, a mutual obligation.

The act of two or more persons, who unite in expressing a mutual and common purpose, with the view of altering their rights and obligations. The union of two or more minds in a thing done or to be done; a mutual assent to do a thing. A compact between parties who are thereby subjected to the obligation or to whom the contemplated right is thereby secured.

Although often used as synonymous with "contract", agreement is a broader term; e.g. an agreement might lack an essential element of a contract. The bargain of the parties in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance. U.C.C. § 1–201(c); Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 1.301(3).

The writing or instrument which is evidence of an agreement.

See also Binding agreement; Compact; Consent; Contract; Covenant; International agreements; Meeting of minds.

Classification

Conditional agreements. The operation and effect of such depend upon the existence of a supposed state of facts, or the performance of a condition, or the happening of a contingency.

Executed agreements. Such have reference to past events, or which are at once closed and where nothing further remains to be done by the parties.

Executory agreements. Such agreements as are to be performed in the future. They are commonly preliminary to other more formal or important contracts or deeds, and are usually evidenced by memorandum, parol promises, etc.

Express agreements. Those in which the terms and stipulations are specifically declared and avowed by the parties at the time of making the agreement.

Implied agreement. (1) Implied in fact. One inferred from the acts or conduct of the parties, instead of being expressed by them in written or spoken words. Baltimore Mail S. S. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Md., 76 F.2d 582, 585. (2) Implied in law; more aptly termed a constructive or quasi contract. One where, by fiction of law, a promise is imputed to perform a legal duty, as to repay money obtained by fraud or duress. Baltimore Mail S. S. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Md., 76 F.2d 582, 585. One inferred by the law where the conduct of the parties with reference to the subject-matter is such as to induce the belief that they intended to do that which their acts indicate they have done. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. U. S., 281 U.S. 592, 43 S.Ct. 425, 67 L.Ed. 816.

Parol agreements. At common law, such as are either by word of mouth or are committed to writing, but are not under seal. The common law draws only one great line, between things under seal and not under seal.

Agreement for Insurance. An agreement often made in short terms preliminary to the filling out and delivery of a policy with specific stipulations. See also Binder.

Agreement not to be performed within a year. An agreement that necessarily must require more than year for performance. Incapable of performance within one year. Street v. Maddux, Marshall, Moss & Mallory, 58 App.D.C. 42, 24 F.2d 617, 619.

Agreement of sale; agreement to sell. An agreement of sale may imply not merely an obligation to sell, but an obligation on the part of the other party to purchase, while an agreement to sell is simply an obligation on the part of the vendor or promisor to complete his promise of sale. Treat v. White, 181 U.S. 264, 21 S.Ct. 611, 45 L.Ed. 853. It is a contract to be performed in future, and, if fulfilled, results in a sale; it is preliminary to sale and is not the sale.
Agreement to sell land. A contract to be performed in future which if fulfilled results in sale. In re Frayer's Estate, 401 Ill. 364, 82 N.E.2d 633, 638.

Aid. To support, help, assist or strengthen. Act in cooperation with; supplement the efforts of others. State v. Upton, Iowa, 167 N.W.2d 625, 628.

Distinguished from abet. "Aid" within aider and abettor statute means to help, to assist, or to strengthen while "abet" means to counsel, to encourage, to incite or to assist in commission of criminal act. State v. Trocodaro, 36 Ohio App.2d 1, 301 N.E.2d 898, 902.

Aid and abet. Help, assist, or facilitate the commission of a crime, promote the accomplishment thereof, help in advancing or bringing it about, or encourage, counsel, or incite as to its commission. State v. Fetters, Iowa, 202 N.W.2d 84, 90. It comprehends all assistance rendered by words, acts, encouragement, support, or presence, actual or constructive, to render assistance if necessary. See Abet; Abettor; Accessory; Accomplish; Aider and abettor.

Aid and comfort. Help; support; assistance; counsel; encouragement. As an element in the crime of treason (Constitution of the United States, Art. III, § 3), the giving of "aid and comfort" to the enemy may consist in a mere attempt. It is not essential to constitute the giving of aid and comfort that the enterprise commenced should be successful and actually render assistance. An act which intentionally strengthens or tends to strengthen enemies of the United States, or which weakens or tends to weaken power of the United States to resist and attack such enemies. United States v. Haupt, D.C.III., 47 F.Supp. 836, 839. Any intentional act furthering hostile designs of enemies of the United States. United States v. Haupt, D.C.III., 47 F.Supp. 836, 839.

Aid bond. See Bond.

Aider and abettor. One who assists another in the accomplishment of a common design or purpose; he must be aware of, and consent to, such design or purpose. Peats v. State, 213 Ind. 560, 12 N.E.2d 270, 277. One who advises, counsels, procures, or encourages another to commit a crime, himself being guilty of some overt act or advocacy or encouragement of his principal, actually or constructively present when crime is committed, and participating in commission thereof by some act, deed, word, or gesture, Turner v. Commonwealth, 268 Ky. 311, 104 S.W.2d 1085, and sharing the criminal intent of the principal. One who assists another to commit a crime; may be a principal, if present, or an accessory before or after fact of crime. The crime must usually be a felony because all parties to misdemeanor are generally principals.

Aider by verdict. The healing or remission, by a verdict rendered, of a defect or error in pleading which might have been objected to before verdict. The presumption of the proof of all facts necessary to the verdict as it stands, coming to the aid of a record in which such facts are not distinctly alleged. Amendment of pleadings to conform to the evidence is provided for by Fed.R.Civ. P. 15.
Aiding an escape. Any overt act, intended and useful to assist attempted custody before his discharge by due process of law. See Accessory (Accessory after the fact); Obstructing justice.

Aid of the king. In old English law, the king’s tenant prayed this, when rent was demanded of him by others.

Aid prayer. In English practice, a proceeding formerly made use of, by way of petition in court, praying in aid of the tenant for life, etc., from the reversioner or remainderman, when the title to the inheritance was in question. It was a plea in suspension of the action. 3 Bl.Comm. 300.

Alds. In feudal law, originally mere benevolences granted by a tenant to his lord, in times of distress; but at length the lords claimed them as of right. They were principally three: (1) To ransom the lord’s person, if taken prisoner; (2) to make the lord’s eldest son and heir apparent a knight; (3) to give a suitable portion to the lord’s eldest daughter on her marriage. A reasonable aid was a duty claimed by the lord of the fee of his tenants, holding by knight service, to marry his daughter, etc. Abolished by Tenures Abolition Act of 1660.

Also, extraordinary grants to the Crown by the house of commons, which were the origin of the modern system of taxation. 2 Bl.Comm. 63, 64.

Comes from Latin “alimonia” meaning sustenance, and means, therefore, the sustenance or support of the wife by her divorced husband and stems from the common-law right of the wife to support by her husband. Allowances which husband or wife by court order pays other spouse for maintenance while they are separated, or after they are divorced (permanent alimony), or temporarily, pending a suit for divorce (pendente lite). Generally, it is restricted to money unless otherwise authorized by statute. But it may be an allowance out of the spouse’s estate. LaChance v. LaChance, Md.App., 346 A.2d 676, 679, 680. State statutes which provide for payment of alimony only to the wife have been held to be unconstitutional. Orr v. Orr, 99 S.Ct. 1102. See also Gross alimony; Lump-sum alimony; Palimony; Periodic alimony; Permanent alimony; Trust (Alimony trust).

Alimony in gross, or in a lump sum, is in the nature of a final property settlement, and hence in some jurisdictions is not included in the term “alimony,” which in its strict or technical sense contemplates money payments at regular intervals. Refers to those alimony arrangements where entire award is a vested and determined amount and not subject to change. Imbrie v. Imbrie, 94 Ill.App.2d 60, 236 N.E.2d 381, 383.

Alimony pendente lite (temporary alimony). An allowance made pending a suit for divorce or separate maintenance including a reasonable allowance for preparation of the suit as well as for support. Davis v. Davis, 15 Wash.2d 297, 130 P.2d 355, 359. See also Allowance pendente lite.

Permanent alimony. A provision for the support and maintenance of a wife during her lifetime.

Tax treatment. Alimony and separate maintenance payments are includible in the gross income of the recipient and are deductible by the payor. The payments must be periodic and made in discharge of a legal obligation arising from a marital or family relationship. Child support and voluntary payments are not treated as alimony. I.R.C. § 71.

Alimony trust. See Trust.

Aliud est possidere, allud esse in possessione /āliya̱d ēst pōsidi̱r̩, ēliya̱d ēsiy ēn pāzēshiyōn̩i̱y/. It is one thing to possess; it is another to be in possession.

Aliud est vendere, allud vendenti consentire /āliya̱d ēst vēndar̩i, ēliya̱d vēndēntai̱ kōnsāntari̱y/. To sell is one thing; to consent to a sale (seller) is another thing.

Aliud examen /ēliya̱d aqēzyan̩/. A different or foreign mode of trial.

Allunde /ēliya̱ndiy/. Lat. From another source; from elsewhere; from outside.

Evidence allunde. Evidence from outside, from another source. In certain cases a written instrument may be explained by evidence allunde, that is, by evidence drawn from sources exterior to the instrument itself, e.g., the testimony of a witness to conversations, admissions, or preliminary negotiations. Evidence allunde (i.e., from outside the will) may be received to explain an ambiguity in a will. See Parol evidence.

Allunde rule /ēliya̱ndiy rūwl/. A verdict may not be impeached by evidence of juror unless foundation for introduction thereof is first made by competent evidence allunde, or from some other source. State v. Adams, 141 Ohio St. 423, 48 N.E.2d 861, 863.

Alius /āliyas/. Lat. Other. The neuter form is allud, something else; another thing.

Alive. As respects birth, it means that child shall have an independent life of its own for some period, even momentarily, after birth; evidenced by respiration or other indications of life, such as beating of heart and pulsation of arteries (Hydrostatic test); or heart tones in response to artificial respiration, or pulsation of umbilical cord after being severed. See also Born alive; Child; Life; Live; Viable child.

In respect of estate matters, a child en ventre sa mere is “born” and “alive” for all purposes for his benefit. In re Holthousean’s Will, 175 Misc. 1022, 26 N.Y.S.2d 140, 143.

All. Means the whole of—used with a singular noun or pronoun, and referring to amount, quantity, extent, duration, quality, or degree. The whole number or sum of—used collectively, with a plural noun or pronoun expressing an aggregate. Every member of individual component of; each one of—used with a plural noun. In this sense, all is used generically and distributively. “All” refers rather to the aggregate under which the individuals are subsumed than to the individuals themselves. State v. Hallenberg-Wagner Motor Co., 341 Mo. 771, 108 S.W.2d 398, 401. See Both.

All and singular. All without exception. A comprehensive term often employed in conveyances, wills, and the like, which includes the aggregate or whole and also each of the separate items or components.

All cases at law. Within constitutional guaranty of jury trial, refers to common law actions as distinguished from causes in equity and certain other proceedings. Breimhorst v. Beckman, 239 Minn. 409, 35 N.W.2d 719, 734.

Alleged. Stated; recited; claimed; asserted; charged.

Acquired allegiance, is that binding a naturalized citizen.

Local or actual allegiance, is that measure of obedience due from a subject of one government to another government, within whose territory he is temporarily resident. From this are excepted foreign sovereigns and their representatives, naval and armed forces when permitted to remain in or pass through the country or its waters.

Natural allegiance. In English law, that kind of allegiance which is due from all men born within the king's dominions, immediately upon their birth, which is intrinsic and perpetual, and cannot be divested by any act of the law. In American law, the allegiance due from citizens of the United States to their native country, and also from naturalized citizens, and which cannot be renounced without the permission of government, to be declared by law.

Allegiare /æliɪdʒiˈeɪr/. To defend and clear one's self; to wage one's own law. An archaic word which simply means to define or justify by due course of law.

Alleging diminution /ælɪdʒɪn dɪm(ə)n(ə)wɪʃən/. The allegation in an appellate court, of some error in a subordinate part of the nisi prius record. See Diminution.

Allen charge. An instruction advising jurors to have deference for each other's views, that they should listen, with a disposition to be convinced, to each other's argument; deriving its name from the case of Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed. 528, wherein the instruction was approved. Cooper v. United States, 72 App.D.C. 86, 113 F.2d 145, 149; Green v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 309 F.2d 852. Variously called dynamite charge, shotgun instruction, third degree instruction. The Allen charge is prohibited in certain states; e.g. California, People v. Gainer, 19 Cal.3d 835, 566 P.2d 997, 139 Cal.Rptr. 861.

All events test. For accrual method taxpayers, income is earned when: (1) all the events have occurred which fix the right to receive the income and (2) the amount can be determined with reasonable accuracy. Accrual of income cannot be postponed simply because a portion of the income may have to be returned in a subsequent period.

Alleviare /æliˈvɪər/. L. Lat. In old records, to levy or pay an accustomed fine or composition; to redeem by such payment.

All faults. A sale of goods with "all faults" covers, in the absence of fraud on the part of the vendor, all such faults and defects as are not inconsistent with the identity of the goods as the goods described. U.C.C. § 2-316. See As Is.

All fours. Two cases or decisions which are alike in all material respects, and precisely similar in all the circumstances affecting their determination, are said to be or to run on "all fours."

Alliance. The relation or union between persons or families contracted by intermarriage; affinity. State of being allied.

In international law, a union, association or confederation of two or more states or nations, formed by league or treaty, for the joint prosecution of a war (offensive alliance), or for their mutual assistance and protection in repelling hostile attacks (defensive alliance). The league or treaty by which the association is formed. The act of confederating, by league or treaty, for the purposes mentioned.

The term is also used in a wider sense, embracing unions for objects of common interest to the contracting parties, as the "Holy Alliance" entered into in 1815 by Prussia, Austria and Russia for the purpose of counteracting the revolutionary movement in the interest of political liberalism.

Allision. The running of one vessel into or against another, as distinguished from a collision, i.e., the running of two vessels against each other. But this distinction is not very carefully observed.

Allocable /æləˈkəbl/. Synonymous with "distributable". In analyzing accounts, the breaking down of a lump sum charged or credited to one account into several parts to be charged or credited to other accounts.

Allocatione facienda /æลəkˈɛʃənˈeɪnə tiˈfæʃiˈjʊndə/. In old English practice, a writ for allowing to an accountant such sums of money as he hath lawfully expended in his office; directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the exchequer upon application made.

Allocation of dividends. In trust accounting, cash dividends are credited or allocated to income; whereas, generally, stock dividends are credited to principal and the basis of the stock on which the dividend has been paid is changed in the portfolio. If the cash dividend is a liquidating dividend, it is commonly allocated to principal.

Allocation of income. When two or more businesses are controlled by the same interests, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may allocate or distribute income to prevent tax evasion. I.R.C. § 482. In trust accounting, the process by which income is distributed as between principal and income.

Allocation of principal and income. See Allocation of dividends; Allocation of income.

Allocatur /æləˈkətər/. Lat. It is allowed. A word formerly used to denote that a writ or order was allowed. A word denoting the allowance by a master or prothonotary of a bill referred for his consideration, whether touching costs, damages, or matter of account. A special allocatur is the special allowance of a writ (particularly a writ of error) which is required in some particular cases.
Allocatur exigit /èlakéydar ègzaajant/. A species of writanciently issued in outlawry proceedings, on the return of the original writ of exigit. See Exigit.

Allocution /èlakỳúwshan/. Formality of court’s inquiry of prisoner as to whether he has any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him on verdict of conviction. State v. Pruitt, Mo., 169 S.W.2d 399, 400.

Allocutus /èlakỳúwdas/. See Allocution.

Allodarł /èlédìriyay/. Owners of allotodial lands. Owners of estates as large as a subject may have.

Alodial /slòwdyyl/. Free; not holden of any lord or superior; owned without obligation of vassalage or fealty; the opposite of feudal.

Allodium /slòwdiyim/. Land held absolutely in one’s own right, and not of any lord or superior; land not subject to feudal duties or burdens. An estate held by absolute ownership, without recognizing any superior to whom any duty is due on account thereof.

Allograph /èlìgraf/. A writing or signature made for a person by another; opposed to autograph.

Allonge /èlònį/. A piece of paper annexed to a bill of exchange or promissory note, on which to write endorsements for which there is no room on the instrument itself. Such must be so firmly affixed thereto as to become a part thereof. U.C.C. § 3–202(2).

Allot /slòl/. To apportion, distribute; to divide property previously held in common among those entitled, assigning to each his ratable portion, to be held in severalty. To set apart specific property, a share of a fund, etc., to a distinct party. In the law of corporations, to allot shares, debentures, etc., to appropri-ate them to the applicants or persons who have applied for them.

Allotment. A share or portion; that which is allotted; apportionment, division; the distribution of shares in a public undertaking or corporation. Partition; the distribution of land under an inclosure act. The term ordinarily and commonly used to describe land held by Indians after allotment, and before the issuance of the patent in fee that deprives the land of its character as Indian country. See Allottee.

Allotment certificate. A document issued to an applicant for shares in a company or public loan announcing the number of shares allotted or assigned and the amounts and due dates of the calls or different payments to be made on the same.

Allotment note. In English law, a writing by a seaman, made on an approved form, whereby he makes an assignment of part of his wages in favor of his wife, father or mother, grandfather or grandmother, brother or sister.

Allotment system. Designates the practice in England of dividing land in small portions for cultivation by agricultural laborers, gardeners and others.

Allotment warden. By the English general inclosure act, 1845, § 108, when an allotment for the laboring poor of a district had been made on an inclosure under the act, the land so allotted was to be under the management of the incumbent and church warden of the parish, and two other persons elected by the parish, and they were to be styled “the allotment wardens” of the parish.

Allottee. One to whom an allotment is made; who receives a ratable share under an allotment. A person to whom land under an inclosure act or shares in a corporation or public undertaking are allotted.

Allow. The word has no rigid or precise meaning, its import varying according to circumstances or context in connection with which it is used. It may mean to bestow or assign to any one as his right or due. To approve of, accept as true, admit, concede, adopt, or fix. To grant something as a deduction or an addition; to abate or deduct; as, to allow a sum for leakage. Pittsburgh Brewing Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 107 F.2d 155, 156. To sanction, either directly or indirectly, as opposed to merely suffering a thing to be done; to acquiesce in; to suffer; to tolerate. See also Acquiescence; Consent.

Allowance. A deduction, an average payment, a portion assigned or allowed; the act of allowing. For “Family,” see that title.

Allowance pendente lite /slawans pendéntiya ládíyi/. The court ordered provision for a spouse and children during the pendency of a divorce or separate support proceeding. See also Alimony.

Allowed claim. Against an estate it is a debt or charge which is valid in law and entitled to enforcement. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lyne, C.C.A.1, 90 F.2d 745, 747.

All the estate. The name given in England to the short clause in a conveyance or other assurance which purports to convey “all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand” of the grantor, lessor, etc., in the property dealt with.

Alluvio maris /slỳùwviyow màrès/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, the washing up of the sea; the soil thus formed; formation of soil or land from the sea; maritime increase.

Alluvion /slỳùwviyian/. That increase of the earth on a shore or bank of a stream or the sea, by the force of the water, as by a current or by waves, which is so gradual that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time. Garrett v. State, 118 N.J.Sup. 594, 289 A.2d 542, 545. “Accretion” denotes the act. However, the terms are frequently used synonymously. Avulsion is sudden and perceptible. See Accretion; Avulsion.

All Writs Act. See Writ.

Ally. A nation which has entered into an alliance with another nation. A citizen or subject of one of two or more allied nations.

Almarii /semlìriyə/. The archives, or, as they are sometimes styled, muniments of a church or library.

Almesefoh /slỳmzfyl/. In Saxon law, alms-fee; almاسmoney. Otherwise called “Peter-pence.”
Almoine /ælmóyn/. Alms; a tenure of lands by divine service. See Frank-almoigne.

Almoner /ælmanər/. One charged with the distribution of alms. The office was first instituted in religious houses and although formerly one of importance is now in England almost a sinecure.

Alms. Charitable donations. Any species of relief bestowed upon the poor. That which is given by public authority for the relief of the poor.

Alms fee. Peter-pence (or Peter's pence), which see.

Alms house. A house for the publicly or privately supported paupers of a city or county; may also be termed a "mission". In England an almshouse is not synonymous with a workhouse or poorhouse, being supported by private endowment.

Alnager /ælnəjər/ or ulnager /əlnəjər/. A sworn officer of the king whose duty it was to look to the assise of woolen cloth made throughout the land, and to putting on the seals for that purpose ordained, for which he collected a duty called "alnage."

Alod, alode, alodes, alodis /ələd/. L. Lat. In feudal law, old forms of alodium or allodium (q.v.). A term used in opposition to feodum or fief, which means property, the use of which was bestowed upon another by the proprietor, on condition that the grantee should perform certain services for the grantor, and upon the failure of which the property should revert to the original possessor.

Alodiaril. See Alloiaril.

Alone. Apart from others; singly; sole.

Along. Lengthwise of, implying motion or at or near, distinguished from across. By, on, up to, or over, according to the subject-matter and context. The term does not necessarily mean touching at all points; nor does it necessarily imply contact.

A louy foy /ə lɔː fiwə/. In their allegiance.

Also. Besides; as well; in addition; likewise; in like manner; similarly; too; withal. Some other thing; including; further; furthermore; in the same manner; moreover; nearly the same as the word "and" or "like wise."

Alta via /æltə väə/. L. Lat. In old English law, a highway; the highway. Alta via regia; the king's highway; "the king's high street."

Alter. To make a change in; to modify; to vary in some degree; to change some of the elements or ingredients or details without substituting an entirely new thing or destroying the identity of the thing affected. To change partially. To change in one or more respects, but without destruction of existence or identity of the thing changed; to increase or diminish. See Alteration; Amend; Change.

Alteration. Variation; changing; making different. A change of a thing from one form or state to another; making a thing different from what it was without destroying its identity. See Alter.

An act done upon an instrument by which its meaning or language is changed. Language different in legal effect, or change in rights, interests, or obligations of parties. It introduces some change into instrument's terms, meaning, language, or details. The term is not properly applied to any change which involves the substitution of a practically new document. An alteration is said to be material when it affects, or may possibly affect, the rights of the persons interested in the document. U.C.C. § 3-407. See Material alteration; Mutilation; Spoliation.

Alteration of contract. A change in the provisions of a contract. If alteration is material, it extinguishes the right of the party who alters it and discharges the other party. The test of whether it is material is whether the rights of the obligee would be varied as to the party making the alteration or to a third party. Restatement of Contracts, § 434.

Alteration of trust. An act by settlor of trust changing the terms of the trust, generally pursuant to a power to alter and amend within the original trust instrument.

Altercation. Warm contentions in words. Dispute or controversy carried on with heat or anger. Ivy v. State, 128 Tex.Cr.R. 408, 81 S.W.2d 696, 698.

Alter ego /ɔltər ˈiːɡəʊ/. Second self. Under doctrine of "alter ego", court merely disregards corporate entity and holds individual responsible for acts knowingly and intentionally done in the name of corporation. Ivy v. Plyler, 246 Cal.App.2d 678, 54 Cal.Rptr. 894, 897. To establish the "alter ego" doctrine, it must be shown that the stockholders disregarded the entity of the corporation, made corporation a mere conduit for the transaction of their own private business, and that the separate individualities of the corporation and its stockholders in fact ceased to exist. Sefton v. San Diego Trust & Savings Bank, Cal.App., 106 P.2d 974, 984. The doctrine of "alter ego" does not create assets for or in corporation, but it simply fastens liability on the individual who uses the corporation merely as an instrumentality in conducting his own personal business, and that liability springs from fraud perpetrated not on the corporation, but on third persons dealing with corporation. Garvin v. Matthews, 193 Wash. 152, 74 P.2d 890, 892. See also Instrumentality rule.

Alterius circumventio all non præbet actionem /æltəriəs kərməntəviəl ðəkərəd /ələyəv nən prəbed əkʃiəviənməm/. The deceiving of one person does not afford an action to another.

Alternat /əltərnət/. A usage among diplomats by which the rank and places of different powers, who have the same right and pretensions to precedence, are changed from time to time, either in a certain regular order or one determined by lot. In drawing up treaties and conventions, for example, it is the usage of certain powers to alternate, both in the preamble and the signatures, so that each power occupies, in the copy intended to be delivered to it, the first place.

Alternate legacy. See Legacy.

Alternate valuation date. Property passing from a person by death may be valued for death tax purposes as of the date of death or the alternate valuation date. The alternate valuation date is six months from the date of death or the date the property is disposed of by the estate, whichever comes first. The use of the alternate valuation date requires an affirmative election on the part of the executor or administrator of the estate.

Alternativam /Òltarnéydam/. Lat. Interchangeably.

Alternativa petitio non est audienda /òltarnátàyva patísh(ï)wòw nòn est ðiýènèd/. An alternative petition or demand is not to be heard.

Alternative. One or the other of two things; giving an option or choice; allowing a choice between two or more things or acts to be done.

Alternative contract. A contract whose terms allow of performance by the doing of either one of several acts at the election of the party from whom performance is due.

Alternative judgment. See Judgment.

Alternative obligation. An obligation allowing the obligor to choose which of two things he will do, the performance of either of which will satisfy the instrument. A promise to deliver a certain thing or to pay a specified sum of money is an example of this kind of obligation.

Alternative pleading. A form of pleading which was formerly prohibited but now recognized under Federal and state Rules of Civ.Proc. by which the pleader sets forth two or more statements by way of claim or defense which are not necessarily consistent with each other. When two or more statements are made in the alternative and one of them if made independently would be sufficient, the pleading is not made insufficient by the insufficiency of one or more of the alternative statements. See Fed.R.Civil P. 8(e)(2).

Alternative relief. Under Fed.Rules Civ.Proc. 8(a) the party seeking a judgment may demand it in the alternative, or in various forms, e.g. demand for a money judgment and for equitable relief.

Alternative remainders. Remainders in which disposition of property is made in alternative, one to take effect only in case the other does not, and in substitution of it.

Alternative remedies. See Alternative relief.

Alternative tax. An option allowed taxpayers in computing the tax on net long-term capital gains.

Alternative writ. A common law writ commanding the person against whom it is issued to do a specified thing, or show cause to the court why he should not be compelled to do it. Under the common-law practice, the first mandamus is an alternative writ; but in modern practice this writ is often dispensed with and its place is taken by an order to show cause. See Mandamus.

Alterum non iadere /òltaram nòn ðiýènèd/. Not to injure another. This maxim, and two others, honeste vivere, and suum cuique tribuere, (q.v.) are considered by Justinian as fundamental principles upon which all the rules of law are based.

Alterutum /òltaryúwda/. Lat. One of two; either.

Altius non tollendi /òlsh(i)yòs nòn tòlèndèy/. In the civil law, a servitude due by the owner of a house, by which he is restrained from building beyond a certain height.

Altius tollendi /òlsh(i)yòs tòlèndèy/. In the civil law, a servitude which consists in the right, to him who is entitled to it, to build his house as high as he may think proper. In general, however, every one enjoys this privilege, unless he is restrained by some contrary title.

Alto et basso /òltòwòt bòswò/. High and low. This phrase is applied to an agreement made between two contending parties to submit all matters in dispute, alto et basso, to arbitration.

Altum mare /òltòm màrèy/. L. Lat. In old English law, the high sea, or seas. The deep sea. Super altum mare, on the high seas.

A lui et a ses heritiers pour toujours. To him and to his heirs forever.

Alveus /òlvìwòs/. The bed or channel through which the stream flows when it runs within its ordinary channel. Alveus derelictus, a deserted channel.

A.M. Ante meridiem, before noon. Only the abbreviation is ordinarily used. Also artium magister, master of arts. Also annus mirabilis, the wonderful year—1666, the year of the defeat of the Dutch fleet and of the great London fire. Also anno mundi, in the year of the world; that is, when the creation of the world is said to have taken place, 4004 B. C.

A.M.A. American Medical Association.

A ma intent. On my action.

Amalgamation /amælægæmæyshin/. Union of different races, or diverse elements, societies, unions, associations, or corporations, so as to form a homogeneous whole or new body; interfusion; intermarriage; consolidation; merger; coalescence; as, the amalgamation of stock.

Amalphiian code or table /amælftònd kòwòd/*tòbòw/. A collection of sea-laws, compiled about the end of the eleventh century, by the people of Amalphi. It consists of the laws on maritime subjects, which were or had been in force in countries bordering on the Mediterranean; and was for a long time received as authority in those countries. It became a part of the law of the sea. See Code.

A manibus /èy mànèbòs/. Lat. Royal scribe. See Amanuensis.

Amanuensis /amænỳuwyènsìs/. One who writes on behalf of another that which he dictates.
A manu servus /ēy mēnuw sārvas/. Lat. A handservant; a scribe; a secretary.

Ambactus /āmbektas/. A messenger; a servant sent about; one whose services his master hired out.

Ambasciatore /āmbeʃ-shiːj-dar/. A person sent about in the service of another; a person sent on a service. A word of frequent occurrence in the writers of the middle ages.

Ambassador. A public officer clothed with high diplomatic powers, commissioned by a government to transact the international business of his government with a foreign government.

An Ambassador of the United States is the personal representative of the President and reports to the President through the Secretary of State. Ambassadors have full responsibility for implementing the U.S. foreign policy by any and all U.S. Government personnel within their country of assignment, except those under military commands. Their responsibilities include negotiating agreements between the United States and the host country, explaining and disseminating official U.S. policy, and maintaining cordial relations with that country’s government and people.

A distinction was formerly made between Ambassadors Extraordinary, who were sent to conduct special business or to remain for an indeterminate period, and Ambassadors Ordinary, who were sent on permanent missions; but this distinction is no longer observed.

See also Diplomatic agent.

Ambidexter /āmbeʃ-dex-tar/. Skillful with both hands; one who plays on both sides. Applied originally to an attorney who took pay from both sides, and subsequently to a juror guilty of the same offense.

Ambigua responsio contra proferentem est acippienda /āmbeʃ-gyuwa rəspōnsh(iy)ōw kōntra prófarentam ēst aksiπiēnda/. An ambiguous answer is to be taken against (is not to be construed in favor of) him who offers it.

Ambigua casibus semper presumitur pro rege /āmbeʃ-gyuwa sēmpar prīyz(y)uwmādār pōw rījīy/. In doubtful cases, the presumption always is in behalf of the crown.

Ambiguitas latens, a latent ambiguity; ambiguitas patens, a patent ambiguity. See Ambiguity.

Ambiguitas contra stipulatorem est /āmbeʃ-gyuwaːtəs kōntra stipypletɔɾɔm ēst/. Doubtful words will be construed most strongly against the party using them.

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto ortur ambiguous verificatione facti tollitur /āmbeʃ-gyuwaːtəs varbōrɔm lēydzən vēhrfakēʃiːj운بي səpliːdər, nām kwōd ēks fakty(y)uwm əhrθar āmbigyuwaːm vēhrfakēʃiːj운비 fəktət tələdər/. A latent ambiguity in the language may be removed by evidence; for whatever ambiguity arises from an extrinsic fact may be explained by extrinsic evidence. Said to be “an unprofitable subtlety; inadequate and un instructive.”

Ambiguitas verborum patens nulla verificatione excluditur /āmbeʃ-gyuwaːtəs varbōrɔm pētənə rəvərfrakēʃiːj운비 ekluːwɔdər/. A patent ambiguity cannot be cleared up by extrinsic evidence (or is never holpen by averment).

Ambiguity /āmbeʃ-gyuwaːdɪ/. Doubtfulness; doubleness of meaning. Duplicity, indistinctness, or uncertainty of meaning of an expression used in a written instrument. Want of clearness or definiteness; difficult to comprehend or distinguish; of doubtful import. For “Extrinsic Ambiguity,” see that title.

Language in contract is “ambiguous” when it is reasonably capable of being understood in more than one sense. City of Sioux Falls v. Henry Carlson Co., Inc., S.D., 258 N.W.2d 676, 679. Test for determining whether a contract is “ambiguous” is whether reasonable persons would find the contract subject to more than one interpretation. Tastee-Freez Leasing Corp. v. Milwid, Ind.App., 365 N.E.2d 1388, 1390.

Ambiguity of language is to be distinguished from unintelligibility and inaccuracy, for words cannot be said to be ambiguous unless their signification seems doubtful and uncertain to persons of competent skill and knowledge to understand them. It does not include uncertainty arising from the use of peculiar words, or of common words in a peculiar sense. It is latent where the language employed is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic fact or extraneous evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice among two or more possible meanings, as where a description apparently plain and unambiguous is shown to fit different pieces of property. Logue v. Von Almen, 379 Ill. 208, 40 N.E.2d 73, 82. A patent ambiguity is that which appears on the face of the instrument, and arises from the defective, obscure, or insensible language used.

Ambiguity upon the factum. An ambiguity in relation to the very foundation of the instrument itself, as distinguished from an ambiguity in regard to the construction of its terms. The term is applied, for instance, to a doubt as to whether a testator meant a particular clause to be a part of the will, or whether it was introduced with his knowledge, or whether a codicil was meant to republish a former will, or whether the residuary clause was accidentally omitted.

Ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est /āmbeʃ-gyuwaːm pəktəm kōntra vənʃtɔɾɔm intərprətəndam ēst/. An ambiguous contract is to be interpreted against the seller.

Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem /āmbeʃ-gyuwaːm pələsdəm intərprətərə debət kōntra prófarentam/. An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it.

Ambit. A boundary line, as going around a place; an exterior or inclosing line or limit. The limits or circumference of a power or jurisdiction; the line circumscribing any subject-matter.

Ambitus /āmbeʃ-das/. The procuring of a public office by money or gifts; the unlawful buying and selling of a public office.
Amblotic /əmˈblɔtɪk/. Having the power to cause abortion; anything used to produce abortion.

Ambulance chaser. A popular name for one who solicits negligence cases for an attorney. One seeking out persons and directing them to an attorney in consideration of a percentage of the recovery. A term descriptive of the practice of some attorneys, on hearing of a personal injury which may have been caused by the negligence or wrongful act of another, of at once seeking out the injured person with a view to securing authority to bring action on account of the injury. Laymen's acquainting themselves with occurrence of accidents and approaching injured persons or their representatives with a view toward soliciting employment for an attorney in the litigation arising from the accident. See also Runner.

Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitæ supremum exitum /æmbıˈlətərіəs eʃ vɔləntəs ˈdeʃfʌŋktɪ ˈæskwɪv æd ˈvɪte ˈsuːprɪməm ˈɛkʃtʊm/ Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitæ supremum exitum. The will of a deceased person is ambulatory until the latest moment of life.

Ambulatory. Lat. ambulare, to walk about. Movable; revocable; subject to change; capable of alteration. Ambulatoria voluntas (a changeable will) denotes the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his life-time.

Courts. The court of king's bench in England was formerly called an ambulatory court, because it followed the king's person, and was held sometimes in one place and sometimes in another. So, in France, the supreme court or parliament was originally ambulatory. 3 Bl.Comm. 38, 39, 41.

Ambulatory disposition. A judgment, decree, or sentence which is subject to change, amendment or revocation.

Ambush. To lie in wait, to surprise, to place in ambush.

A me /ˈmiː/ Lat. ego, I. A term in feudal grants denoting direct tenure of the superior lord. Unjustly detaining from me. He is said to withhold a me (from me) who has obtained possession of my property unjustly. To pay a me, is to pay from my money.

Ameliorating waste /əmiˈlərɪŋ wɛst/. An act of lessee, though technically constituting waste, yet in fact resulting in improving instead of doing injury to land. Generally, equity will not enjoin such waste.

Ameliorations /əmiˈlərəʃənz/. Betterments; improvements.

Amenable /əˈmiːnəbəl/ "mén"/. Subject to answer to the law; accountable; responsible; liable to punishment.

Also means tractable, that may be easily led or governed; formerly applied to a wife who is governable by her husband.

Amend. To improve. To change for the better by removing defects or faults. To change, correct, revise. Texas Co. v. Fort, 168 Tenn. 679, 80 S.W.2d 658, 660. See Amendment.

Amende honorable /əˈmɒnd ənərəbəl/. An apology. In old English law, it was a penalty imposed upon a person by way of disgrace or infamy, as a punishment for any offense, or for the purpose of making reparation for any injury done to another, as the walking into church in a white sheet, with a rope about the neck and a torch in the hand, and begging the pardon of God, or the king, or any private individual, for some delinquency. A punishment somewhat similar to this, which bore the same name, was common in France for offenses against public decency or morality. It was abolished by the law of the 25th of September, 1791. In 1826 it was re-introduced in cases of sacrilege and was finally abolished in 1830.

Amendment. To change or modify for the better. To alter by modification, deletion, or addition.

Practice and pleading. The correction of an error committed in any process, pleading, or proceeding at law, or in equity, and which is done either as of course, or by the consent of parties, or upon motion to the court in which the proceeding is pending. Under Fed.R.Civ.P., any change in pleadings, though not necessarily a correction, which a party may accomplish once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading has been served. Such amendment may be necessary to cause pleadings to conform to evidence. Rule 15(a), (b). The amendment relates back to the original pleading if the subject of it arose out of the transaction set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading. Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(c). Compare Supplemental pleadings.

Amendment of judgment. Under Fed.R.Civ.P., Rule 59(e), a judgment may be altered or amended by motion served not later than 10 days after entry of judgment.

Amendment of trust. An addition which alters the original terms of a trust, the power to accomplish which may be reserved by the settlor in the original trust instrument.

Amendment on court's own motion. A change or addition to a pleading or other document accomplished by the judge without a prior motion of a party.

Amends. A satisfaction given by a wrongdoer to the party injured, for a wrong committed.

Amenity /əˈmɪnəti/ In real property law, such circumstances, in regard to situation, view, location, access to a water course, or the like, as enhance the pleasantness or desirability of the property for purposes of residence, or contribute to the pleasure and enjoyment of the occupants, rather than to their indispensable needs. Extras or intangible items often associated with property. They may be tangible. Often amenities in a condominium include swimming pools, landscaping, and tennis courts.

In the law of easements, an “amenity” consists in restraining the owner from doing that on his property which, but for the grant or covenant, he might otherwise lawfully have done. Sometimes called a “negative easement” as distinguished from that class of easements which compel the owner to suffer something to be done on his property by another. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brennan, 30 Abb.N.C. 260, 24

Amens /ə'mɛnz/. See Demens.

A mensa et thoro /ˌɛməsə ət θɔrəʊ/. Lat. From table and bed, but more commonly translated, from bed and board. A kind of divorce, which is rather a separation of the parties by law, than a dissolution of the marriage.

Amentia. Insanity; idiocy. See Insanity.

Amerce /ˈɑːmərs/. To impose an amercement or fine; to publish by a fine or penalty.

Amercement /ˈɑːmərsment/. A money penalty in the nature of a fine imposed upon an officer for some misconduct or neglect of duty. Sherman v. Upton, Inc., S.D., 242 N.W.2d 666, 667. At common law, it was assessed by the peers of the delinquent, or the affereors, or imposed arbitrarily at the discretion of the court or the lord.

American. Of or pertaining to the United States.

American Arbitration Association. National organization of arbitrators from whose panel arbitrators are selected for labor and civil disputes. The Association has produced a Code of Ethics and Procedural Standards for use and guidance of arbitrators.

American Bar Association. A national association of lawyers, a primary purpose of which is the improvement of lawyers and the administration of justice. Membership in the ABA is open to any lawyer who is in good standing in his or her state.

American Bar Foundation. An outgrowth of the American Bar Association given to sponsoring and funding projects in legal research, education and social studies.

American clause. In marine insurance, a proviso in a policy to the effect that, in case of any subsequent insurance, the insurer shall nevertheless be answerable for the full extent of the sum subscribed by him, without right to claim contribution from subsequent underwriters.

American experience table of mortality. A series of tables dealing with life insurance, costs and values, varying according to the age of the insured, the period during which the policy has been in force, and the term of the particular policy.

American Federation of Labor. An affiliation of labor unions.

American Law Institute. Group of American legal scholars who are responsible for the Restatements in the various disciplines of the law and who, jointly with the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, prepare some of the Uniform State Laws, e.g. Uniform Commercial Code. See Restatement of Law.

American rule. The traditional “American Rule” is that attorney fees are not awardable to the winning party unless statutorily or contractually authorized; however exceptions exist in that an award may be made to successful party if the opponent has acted in bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly or for oppressive reasons or if the litigation confers a substantial benefit on the members of an ascertainable class and the court’s subject matter jurisdiction makes possible an award that will operate to spread the costs proportionately among them. Huecker v. Milburn, C.A.Ky., 538 F.2d 1241, 1245. In addition a court may in its discretion award attorney fees in civil rights actions to the prevailing defendant if the action was frivolous, unreasonable or without foundation. Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412, 98 S.Ct. 694.

Ameublisement /ɑ̃mewbliˈzɑ̃m/. In French law, a species of agreement which by a fiction gives to immovable goods the quality of movable.

Ami; amy. A friend; as alien ami, an alien belonging to a nation at peace with us; prochein ami, a next friend suing or defending for an infant, married woman, etc.

Amites composites. See Amicable compounders.

Amicable. Friendly; mutually forbearing. Agreed or assented to by parties having conflicting interests or a dispute; as opposed to hostile or adversary.

Amicable action. An action brought and carried on by the mutual consent and arrangement of the parties, to obtain judgment of court on a doubtful question of law, the facts being usually settled by agreement. See Case (Case agreed on).

Amicable compounders. In Louisiana law and practice, amicable compounders are arbitrators authorized to abate something of the strictness of the law in favor of natural equity.

Amicable scire facias to revive a judgment /əməˈkeɪblɪ ˈsɛəri feɪʃiəs/. A written agreement, signed by the person to be bound by the revival, in the nature of a writ of scire facias with a confession of judgment thereon, which must be duly docketed, but which requires no judicial action on the part of the court, and which has the force and effect of a judgment rendered upon an adverse or contested writ of scire facias.

Amicus curiae /əˈmɪkəs kəˈriːə/ /əˈmɪkəs kəˈriːə/. Means, literally, friend of the court. A person with strong interest in or views on the subject matter of an action may petition the court for permission to file a brief, ostensibly on behalf of a party but actually to suggest a rationale consistent with its own views. Such amicus curiae briefs are commonly filed in appeals concerning matters of a broad public interest, e.g. civil rights cases. Such may be filed by private persons or the government. In appeals to the U.S. courts of appeals, such brief may be filed only if accompanied by written consent of all parties, or by leave of court granted on motion or at the request of the court, except that consent or leave shall not be required when the brief is presented by the United States or an officer or agency thereof. Fed.R.App.P. 29.

Amity

Amity /əˈmætɪərɪ/ Lat. In the city and old English law, to lose. Hence the old Scotch "amit."

Amity curiam /əˈmætɪərɪ kəˈriəm/. To lose the court; to be deprived of the privilege of attending the court.

Amity legem terre /əˈmætɪərɪ lɪˈjɛm tɛˈri/. To lose the protection afforded by the law of the land.

Amity liberam legem /əˈmætɪərɪ lɪˈbɛrəm lɪˈjɛm/. In old English law, to lose one's frank-law. A term having the same meaning as amit terre. (q.v.). He who lost his law lost the protection extended by the law to a free man, and became subject to the same law as thralls or serfs attached to the land. To lose the privilege of giving evidence under oath in any court; to become infamous, and incapable of giving evidence. If either party in a wager of battle cried "craven" he was condemned amit terre; 3 Bl.Comm. 340.

Amnesia. Loss of memory as a result of organic trauma, delirium lesions of the diencephalon area of the brain, hysteria or epilepsy. Functionally, identity loss can represent a means of coping with neurotic conflict. Three types of amnesia are: anterograde (inability to retain new impressions; may be a feature of senility); retrograde (failure to recall prior experiences); lacunar (loss of memory for certain periods of life). Such condition is not generally sufficient for lack of competency to stand trial. U.S. ex rel. Parsons v. Anderson, 354 F.Supp. 1060, 1071-1072, aff'd 481 F.2d 94.

Amnesty /əˈmænstɪə/ A sovereign act of oblivion for past acts, granted by a government to all persons (or to certain persons) who have been guilty of crime or delict, generally political offenses,—treason, sedition, rebellion,—and often conditioned upon their return to obedience and duty within a prescribed time.

A general pardon or proclamation of such pardon from subjects' offenses against the government; while usually exerted in behalf of certain classes of persons, subject to trial, but not convicted, it is not confined to such cases.

A declaration of the person or persons who have newly acquired or recovered the sovereign power in a nation, by which they pardon all persons who composed, supported, or obeyed the government which has been overthrown.

Amnesty is the abolition and forgetfulness of the offense; pardon is forgiveness. Knote v. U.S., 95 U.S. 149, 152, 24 L.Ed. 442. The first is usually addressed to crimes against the sovereignty of the nation, to political offenses; the second condones infractions of the peace of the nation. Burdick v. United States, 236 U.S. 79, 35 S.Ct. 267, 271, 59 L.Ed. 476.

Compare Pardon; Parole.

Amobartital /ˌɛməˈbɑrtɪtəl/. Nonproprietary name for isomanyl-ethylbarbituric acid.

Among. Mingled with or in the same group or class. Intermingled with. In company or association with. In shares to each of, e.g. divided "among" the heirs. In or through the midst of.

Amortization /əˈmɔrətɪzəʃən/. The allocation (and charge to expense) of the cost or other basis of an intangible asset over its estimated useful life. Intangible assets which have an indefinite life (e.g., goodwill) are not amortizable. Examples of amortizable intangibles include patents, copyrights and leasehold interests. A reduction in a debt or fund by periodic payments covering interest and part of principal, distinguished from: (1) depreciation, which is an allocation of the original cost of an asset computed from physical wear and tear as well as the passage of time, and (2) depletion, which is a reduction in the book value of a resource (such as minerals) resulting from conversion into a salable product. The operation of paying off bonds, stock, a mortgage, or other indebtedness, commonly of a state or corporation, by installments, or by a sinking fund. An "amortization plan" for the payment of an indebtedness is one where there are partial payments of the principal, and accrued interest, at stated periods for a definite time, at the expiration of which the entire indebtedness will be extinguished.

Amortization reserve. An account created for bookkeeping purposes to extinguish an obligation gradually over a period of time.

Amortized mortgage. Repayment of a mortgage over regular specified time intervals, with equal payments. This would reduce the principal, after any monies owing for interest are applied.

Amotio /ˌəˈmɒtwəʃ(ɪ)əʊ/ In the civil law, a moving or taking away. "The slightest amotio is sufficient to constitute theft, if the animus furandi be clearly established." See Amotion.

Amotion /əˈmɔtwəʃən/. A putting or turning out, as the eviction of a tenant or a removal from office. Dispossession of lands. Ouster is an amotion of possession. A moving or carrying away; the wrongful taking of personal chattels.

In corporation law, the act of removing an officer, or official representative, of a corporation from his office or official station, before the end of the term for which he was elected or appointed, but without depriving him of membership in the body corporate. In this last respect the term differs from "disfranchisement," or expulsion.

Amount. The whole effect, substance, import, result, or significance. The sum of principal and interest. See also Sum certain.

Amount covered. In insurance, the amount that is insured, and for which underwriters are liable for loss under a policy of insurance.

Amount of loss. In insurance, the diminution, destruction, or defeat of the value of, or of the charge upon, the insured subject to the assured, by the direct consequence of the operation of the risk insured against, according to its value in the policy, or in contribution for loss, so far as its value is covered by the insurance.

Amount realized. The amount received by a taxpayer upon the sale or exchange of property. The measure of the amount received is the sum of the cash and the fair market value of any property or services received. Determining the amount realized is the starting point for arriving at realized gain or loss. I.R.C. § 1001(b). See Realized gain or loss; Recognized gain or loss.

Amount to. To reach in the aggregate, to rise to or reach by accumulation of particular sums or quantities.

Amovable. To remove from a post or station.

Amoves manus /əˈməʊvəs maːnəs/. Lat. That you remove your hands. In Old English law, after office found, the king was entitled to the things forfeited, either lands or personal property; the remedy for a person aggrieved was by "petition," or "monstrans de droit," or "traverses," to establish his superior right. Thereupon a writ issued, quod manus dominii regis amoveatur.

Amparo /æmˈpærəʊ/. In Spanish-American law, a document issued to a claimant of land as a protection to him, until a survey can be ordered, and the title of possession issued by an authorized commissioner.

Ampliation /æmpliˈeɪʃən/. In civil law, a deferring of judgment until a cause be further examined. An order for the rehearing of a cause on a day appointed, for the sake of more ample information.

In French law, a duplicate of an acquittance or other instrument. A notary's copy of acts passed before him, delivered to the parties.

Amplus /æmpliˈəʊs/. In the Roman law, more; further; more time. A word which the praeceptor pronounced in cases where there was any obscurity in a cause, and the judices were uncertain whether to condemn or acquit; by which the case was deferred to a day named.

Amputation of right hand. An ancient punishment for a blow given in a superior court; or for assaulting a judge sitting in the court.

A multo fortiori /ˈeɪ məltəʊ fɔrʃɪˈɔrə/ɪ. By far the stronger reason.

Amusement. Pastime; diversion; enjoyment. A pleasurable occupation of the senses, or that which furnishes it. Young v. Board of Trustees of Broadwater County High School, 90 Mont. 576, 4 P.2d 725, 726.

Amusement tax. A government levy imposed on tickets sold to places of amusement, sporting events, etc.; expressed as a percentage of the price of the ticket. See also Luxury tax.

Amy. See Ami; Prochein aml.

An. The English indefinite article, equivalent to "one" or "any"; seldom used to denote plurality.

Anacrasis /əˈnækɹəsɪs/. In the civil law, an investigation of truth, interrogation of witnesses, and inquiry made into any fact, especially by torture.

Analogous /ænəˈlægəs/. Derived from the Greek ana, up, and logos, ratio. Means bearing some resemblance or likeness that permits one to draw an analogy.

Analogy. Identity or similarity of proportion, where there is no precedent in point. In cases on the same subject, lawyers have recourse to cases on a different subject-matter, but governed by the same general principle. This is reasoning by analogy. The similarity of relations which exist between things compared.

Analytical jurisprudence. A theory and system of jurisprudence wrought out neither by inquiring for ethical principles or the dictates of the sentiments of justice nor by the rules which may be actually in force, but by analyzing, classifying and comparing various legal conceptions. See Jurisprudence.

Anaphrodisia /əˈnæfrəˌdiz(h)iə/. Impotence coæundi; frigidity; incapacity for sexual intercourse existing in either man or woman, and in the latter case sometimes called "dyspareunia."

Anarchist. One who professes and advocates the doctrines of anarchy, q.v. In the immigration statutes, it includes, not only persons who advocate the overthrow of organized government by force, but also those who believe in the absence of government as a political ideal, and seek the same end through propaganda.

Anarchy. Absence of government; state of society where there is no law or supreme power; lawlessness or political disorder; destructive of and confusion in government. At its best it pertains to a society made orderly by good manners rather than law, in which each person produces according to his powers and receives according to his needs, and at its worst, the word pertains to a terrorist resistance of all present government and social order. For "criminal anarchy," see Criminal.

Anathema /əˈnæθəmə/. An ecclesiastical punishment by which a person is separated from the body of the church, and forbidden all intercourse with the members of the same. It differs from excommunication, which simply forbids the person excommunicated from going into the church and taking the communion with the faithful.

Anathematize /əˈnæθəmatʌɪz/ɪ. To pronounce anathema upon; to pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority; to excommunicate. See Anathema.
Anatocism /àná′dásìzám/. In the civil law, repeated or doubled interest; compound interest; usury.

Anatomical gift. Testamentary donation of a vital organ, generally for purpose of medical research. Most states have adopted the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act which authorizes the gift of all or part of a human body after death for specified purposes.

Ancestor. One from whom a person lineally descended or may be descended; a progenitor. A former possessor; the person last seised. A deceased person from whom another has inherited land. Embraces both collaterals and lineals. Correlative of "heir."

Ancestral /ənˈsɛstrəl/. Relating to ancestors, or to what has been done by them; as homage ancestral (q.v.). Derived from ancestors.

Ancestral estates are such as are transmitted by descent, and not by purchase; or such as are acquired either by descent or by operation of law. Reality which came to the intestate by descent or devise from a dead ancestor or by deed of actual gift from a living one, there being no other consideration than that of blood. Real estate coming to distributee by descent, gift, or devise from any kinsman. Allotments to members of Indian tribes or their heirs have been treated as an ancestral estate. McDougal v. McKay, 237 U.S. 372, 35 S.Ct. 605, 607, 59 L.Ed. 1001.

Ancestry. Line of descent; persons comprising such. Term which embraces the study of the antecedents of humans and animals; pedigree. May be proved by general reputation.

Anchorage. In English law, a duty paid by the owners of ships for the use of the port or harbor where they cast anchor.

Ancient. Old; that which has existed from an indefinitely early period, or which by age alone has acquired certain rights or privileges accorded in view of long continuance.

Ancient deed. A deed 30 [or 20] years old and shown to come from a proper custodian and having nothing suspicious about it. See Ancient writings.

Ancient demesne. Manors which in the time of William the Conqueror were in the hands of the crown, and are so recorded in the Domeday Book. Also, in old English law, a species of copyhold, which differs, however, from common copyholds in certain privileges, but yet must be conveyed by surrender, according to the custom of the manor. There are three sorts: (1) Where the lands are held freely by the king's grace; (2) customary freeholds, which are held of a manor in ancient demesne, but not at the lord's will, although they are conveyed by surrender, or deed and admittance; (3) lands held by copy of court-rol at the lord's will, denominated copyholds of base tenure.

Ancient documents. See Ancient writings.

Ancient lights. See Lights, ancient.

Ancient readings. Readings or lectures upon the ancient English statutes, formerly regarded as of great authority in law.

Ancient records. See Ancient writings.

Ancient rent. The rent reserved at the time the lease was made, if the building was not then under lease.

Ancients /′eɪnʃəntz/. In English law, gentlemen of the inns of court and chancery. In Gray's Inn the society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, those who had passed their readings used to be termed "ancients." The Inns of Chancery consist of ancients and students or clerks; from the ancients a principal or treasurer is chosen yearly.

Ancient serjeant. In English law, the eldest of the queen's serjeants.

Ancient street. The doctrine is not based upon fact that streets have existed for a long time, but is invoked when it appears that common grantor owning land comprising street in question as well as property in question and other lots has given deeds to lots bounding them by street, thereby not only dedicating the street to public use but at same time creating private easements in the street, which cannot be taken without compensation. Dwornick v. State, 251 A.D. 675, 297 N.Y.S. 409, 411.

Ancient wall. A wall built to be used, and in fact used, as a party-wall, for more than twenty years, by the express permission and continuous acquiescence of the owners of the land on which it stands. Schneider v. 44-84 Realty Corporation, 169 Misc. 249, 7 N.Y. S.2d 305, 309.

Ancient water course. A water course is "ancient" if the channel through which it naturally runs has existed from time immemorial independent of the quantity of water which it discharges. Earl v. De Hart, 12 N.J.Eq. 280.

Ancient writings. Documents bearing on their face every evidence of age and authenticity, of age of 30 [or 20] years, and coming from a natural and reasonable official custody. Hartzell v. U., S., C.C.A.Iowa, 72 F.2d 569, 579. These are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody.

Under Federal Rules of Evidence, a document is admissible if it is in such condition as to create no suspicion as to its authenticity, was in a place where it, if authentic, would likely be, and has been in existence 20 years or more at the time it is offered. Fed.Evid.R. 901(b)(8).

Anciency /′eɪnʃənti/. Eidership; seniority. Used in the statute of Ireland, 14 Hen. VIII.

Ancilla /ənˈsilə/. Lat. A handmaid, an auxiliary, a subordinate.

Ancillary /ənˈsələri/. Aiding; attendant upon; describing a proceeding attendant upon or which aids another proceeding considered as principal. Auxiliar- ry or subordinate.

Ancillary administration. Administration in state where decedent has property and which is other than where decedent was domiciled. First Nat. Bank v. Blessing, 231 Mo.App. 288, 98 S.W.2d 149, 151. Administration or probate taken out in a second or subsequent jurisdiction to collect assets or to commence litigation on behalf of the estate in that jurisdiction.
Ancillary attachment. One sued out in aid of an action already brought; its only office being to hold the property attached under it for the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand.

Ancillary bill or suit. One growing out of and auxiliary to another action or suit, either at law or in equity, such as a bill for discovery, or a proceeding for the enforcement of a judgment, or to set aside fraudulent transfers of property. One growing out of a prior suit in the same court, dependent upon and instituted for the purpose either of impeaching or enforcing the judgment or decree in a prior suit. Caspers v. Watson, C.C.A.III., 132 F.2d 614, 615.

Ancillary claim. Term "ancillary" denotes any claim that reasonably may be said to be collateral to, dependent upon, or otherwise auxiliary to a claim asserted within federal jurisdiction in action. Hartley Pen Co. v. Lindy Pen Co., D.C.Cal., 16 F.R.D. 141, 154. Claim is "ancillary" when it bears a logical relationship to the aggregate core of operative facts which constitutes main claim over which court had independent basis of federal jurisdiction. Nishimatsu Const. Co., Ltd. v. Houston Nat. Bank, C.A.Tex., 515 F.2d 1200, 1205.

Ancillary jurisdiction. Power of court to adjudicate and determine matters incidental to the exercise of its primary jurisdiction of an action.

Under "ancillary jurisdiction doctrine" federal district court acquires jurisdiction of case or controversy as an entirety and may, as incident to disposition of matter properly before it, possess jurisdiction to decide other matters raised by case, though district court could not have taken cognizance of them if they had been independently presented. Ortman v. Stanton Corp., C.A.III., 371 F.2d 154, 157. "Ancillary jurisdiction" of federal court generally involves either proceedings which are concerned with pleadings, processes, records or judgments of court in principal case or proceedings which affect property already in court's custody. Cooperative Transit Co. v. West Penn. Electric Co., C.C.A.W.Va., 152 F.2d 720, 723.

Ancillary legislation. Legislative enactment which is auxiliary to or in aid of other and principal legislation.

Ancillary proceeding. One growing out of or auxiliary to another action or suit, or which is subordinate to or in aid of a primary action, either at law or in equity. Register v. Stone's Independent Oil Distributors, 122 Ga.App. 335, 177 S.E.2d 92, 94. In state courts, a procedural undertaking in aid of the principal action; for example, a bill for discovery in aid of a lawsuit or a garnishment proceeding.

Ancillary process. Any process which is in aid of or incidental to the principal suit or action; e.g. attachment. See Ancillary proceeding.

Ancillary receiver. One appointed in aid of, and in subordination to, a foreign receiver for purpose of collecting and taking charge of assets, as of insolvent corporation, in the jurisdiction where he is appointed.

Anciplitus usus /ensipados yzwzas/. Lat. In international law, of doubtful use; the use of which is doubtful; that may be used for a civil or peaceful, as well as military or warlike, purpose.

And. A conjunction connecting words or phrases expressing the idea that the latter is to be added to or taken along with the first. Added to; together with; joined with; as well as; including. Sometimes construed as "or." Land & Lake Ass'n v. Conklin, 182 A.D. 546, 170 N.Y.S. 427, 428.

It expresses a general relation or connection, a participation or accomplishment in sequence, having no inherent meaning standing alone but deriving force from what comes before and after. In its conjunctive sense the word is used to conjoin words, clauses, or sentences, expressing the relation of addition or connection, and signifying that something is to follow in addition to that which proceeds and its use implies that the connected elements must be grammatically co-ordinate, as where the elements preceding and succeeding the use of the words refer to the same subject matter. While it is said that there is no exact synonym of the word in English, it has been defined to mean "along with", "also", "and also", "as well as", "besides", "together with". Oliver v. Oliver, 286 Ky. 6, 149 S.W.2d 540, 542.

When expression "and/or" is used, that word may be taken as will best effect the purpose of the parties as gathered from the contract taken as a whole, or, in other words, as will best accord with the equity of the situation. Bobrow v. U. S. Casualty Co., 231 A.D. 91, 246 N.Y.S. 383, 387.

Androgynus /andrójnas/. A hermaphrodite.

Androlepsy /androllépsi/. The taking by one nation of the citizens or subjects of another, in order to compel the latter to do justice to the former.

Andromania /androméniyas/. Nymphomania.

Androphonomania /androwfonaméniyas/. Homicidal insanity.

Anecius /anys(ıy)as/. Lat. Spelled also cœ necius, enitus, cœ nas, eny us, Fr. aise. The eldest-born; the first-born; senior, as contrasted with the puis-né (younger).

An et jour /ön ey zhür/. Fr. Year and day; a year and a day.

Aneurism, or aneurysm. A sac formed by the dilatation of the weakened walls of an artery, usually resulting in a soft pulsating tumor.

Anew. To try a case or issue "aneaw" or "de novo" implies that the case or issue has been heard before. See De novo.

Angaria /angāriya/. A term used in the Roman law to denote a forced or compulsory service exacted by the government for public purposes; as a forced rendition of labor or goods for the public service; in particular, the right of a public officer to require the service of vehicles or ships.

In feudal law, any troublesome or vexatious personal service paid by the tenant or villein to his lord.

In maritime law, a forced service (onus) imposed on a vessel for public purposes; an impressment of a vessel. See Angary, right of.

Angary, right of. In international law, formerly the right (jus angarice) claimed by a belligerent to seize merchant vessels in the harbors of the belligerent and to compel them, on payment of freight, to transport troops and supplies to a designated port.

The right of a belligerent to appropriate, either for use, or for destruction in case of necessity, neutral property temporarily located in his own territory or in that of the other belligerent. The property may be of any description whatever, provided the appropriation of it be for military or naval purposes.

Angel. An ancient English coin, of the value of ten shillings sterling.

Angild /æŋgild/. In Saxon law, the single value of a man or other thing; a single weregild (q.v.); the compensation of a thing according to its single value or estimation. The double gild or compensation was called "twigild," the triple, "tragild," etc. See Angyld.

When a crime was committed, before the Conquest, the angild was the money compensation that the person who had been wronged was entitled to receive.

Anglescheria /æŋgleshiriya/. In old English law, Englishery; the fact of being an Englishman.

Anglie jura in omni casu libertatis dant favorem /æŋglivi júra in ómnii kézyuyw libértédas dánt favóram/. The laws of England in every case of liberty are favorable (favor liberty in all cases).

Anglice /æŋglasli/. In English, a term formerly used in pleading when a thing is described both in Latin and English, inserted immediately after the Latin and as an introduction of the English translation.

Anglo-Indian. An Englishman domiciled in the Indian territory of the British crown.

Anglo-Saxon law. English law derived from those people who conquered Britain in the 5th and 6th centuries and who dominated England until the Norman Conquest.

Anguish. Extreme pain of body or mind; excruciating distress. Carson v. Thompson, Mo.App., 161 S.W.2d 995, 1000. Agony, but, as used in law, particularly mental suffering or distress of great intensity. It is not synonymous with inconvenience, annoyance, or harassment.

Angylde. In Saxon law, the rate fixed by law at which certain injuries to person or property were to be paid for; in injuries to the person, it seems to be equivalent to the "were," i.e., the price at which every man was valued. It seems also to have been the fixed price at which cattle and other goods were received as currency, and to have been much higher than the market price, or ceagpild. See Angild.

Anhlotle. In old English law, a single tribute or tax, paid according to the custom of the country as scot and lot.

Aniens, or anient. Null, void, of no force or effect. See Anniented.

Domestic animals are tame as distinguished from wild; living in or near the habitations of man or by habit or special training in association with man. Domitis are those which have been tamed by man; domestic. Fera naturae are those which still retain their wild nature. Mansuetae naturae are those gentle or tame by nature, such as sheep and cows. Wild animals are those whose habitat is generally the woods; undomesticated; untamed.

Animals of a base nature. Animals in which a right of property may be acquired by reclaiming them from wildness, but which, at common law, by reason of their base nature, are not regarded as possible subjects of a larceny. Some animals which are now usually tamed come within this class, as dogs and cats; and others which, though wild by nature and often reclaimed by art and industry, clearly fall within the same rule, as bears, foxes, apes, monkeys, ferrets, and the like.

Animo /ænəmow/. Lat. With intention, disposition, design, will. Quo animo, with what intention. Animo cancellandi, with intention to cancel. Furandi, with intention to steal. 4 Bl.Comm. 230. Animus testandi /ánëmas téstánday/. The intention or purpose to make will. Also expressed as animo testandi.

An, jour, et waste. In feudal law, year, day, and waste. A forfeiture of the lands to the crown incurred by the felony of the tenant, after which time the land escheats to the lord. See Year (Year, day, and waste).

Annates /ánëytis/ánëtis/. In ecclesiastical law, first-fruits paid out of spiritual benefices to the Pope, so called because the value of one year's profit was taken as their rate.

Annex /ánëks/. Derived from the Latin "annectere," meaning to tie or bind to. To attach, and often, specifically, to subjoin. To add to; to unite. The word expresses the idea of joining a smaller or subordinate thing with another, larger, or of higher importance. To consolidate, as school districts. To make an integral part of something larger.

It implies physical connection or physically joined to, yet physical connection may be dispensed with, and things may be annexed without being in actual contact, when reasonably practicable. Elliott Common School Dist. No. 48 v. County Board of School Trustees, Tex.Civ.App., 76 S.W.2d 786, 789. Something appended to, as a supplementary structure or wing. See also Appendant.

Annexion. The act of attaching, adding, joining, or uniting one thing to another; generally spoken of the combination of a smaller or subordinate thing with a larger or principal thing. Term is usually applied with respect to land or fixtures, as: the acquisition of territory or land by a nation, state or municipality; the legal incorporation of a town or city into another town or city.

The attaching an illustrative or auxiliary document to a deposition, pleading, deed, etc., may be called "annexing" it.

In the law relating to fixtures, actual annexation includes every movement by which a chattel is joined or united to the property; constructive annexation is the union of such things as have been helden parcel of the realty, but which are not actually annexed, fixed, or fastened to the property.

See also Fixture.

Anniented /ánjı́nyentad/. Made null, abrogated, frustrated, or brought to nothing.

Anniversary. An annual day, recurring each year on the same date; commonly to commemorate an important event. In old-eclesiastical law, a day set apart in memory of a deceased person. Also called "year day" or "mind day."

Anniversary date. As applied to insurance policy, means yearly recurring date of the initial issuance date.

Anno domini /ánnow dömanay/. In the year of the Lord. Commonly abbreviated A.D. The computation of time, according to the Christian era, dates from the birth of Christ.

Annonce civilles /ánnowsn sívallyz/. A species of yearly rents issuing out of certain lands, and payable to certain monasteries.

Annotatio /ánnowtätýsh(ı)yow/. In the civil law, the sign-manual of the emperor; a rescript of the emperor, signed with his own hand. It is distinguished both from a rescript and pragmatic sanction.

Annotation /ánnowtätýshan/. A remark, note, case summary, or commentary on some passage of a book, statutory provision, or the like, intended to illustrate or explain its meaning. See also Digest; Headnote.
Civil law. An imperial rescript (see Rescript) signed by the emperor. The answers of the prince to questions put to him by private persons respecting some doubtful point of law. Also summoning an absentee, and, as well the designation of a place of deportation.

Statutory. Brief summaries of the law and facts of cases interpreting or applying statutes passed by Congress or state legislatures which are included (normally following text of statute) in annotated statutes or codes.

Announced. A decision is "announced," preventing nuncup, when court's conclusion on issue tried is made known from bench or by any publication, oral or written, even if judgment has not been rendered.

Annoyance. Discomfort; vexation. Not generally synonymous with anguish, inconvenience, or harassment. Such may result from either physical or mental conditions. It includes feeling of imposition and oppression. See also Harassment; Nuisance.

Annual /ˈænjuəl/. Of or pertaining to year; returning every year; coming or happening yearly. Occurring or recurring once in each year; continuing for the period of a year; accruing within the space of a year; relating to or covering the events or affairs of a year. Once a year, without signifying what time in year. See Annually.

Annual accounting period. In determining a taxpayer's income tax liability, only those transactions taking place during a particular tax year are taken into consideration. For reporting and payment purposes, therefore, the tax life of taxpayers is divided into equal annual accounting periods. See Accounting period.

Annual assay. An annual trial of the gold and silver coins of the United States, to ascertain whether the standard fineness and weight of the coinage is maintained. 31 U.S.C.A. § 363.

Annual average earnings. Term used in worker's compensation law to describe a claimant's income both from seasonal and nonseasonal employment, but for inclusion the nonseasonal income is limited to employment of the same class as the seasonal.

Annual depreciation. The annual loss, not restored by current maintenance, which is due to all the factors causing the ultimate retirement of the property. These factors embrace wear and tear, decay, inadequacy, and obsolescence. The annual loss in service value not restored by current maintenance and incurred in connection with the consumption or prospective retirement of property in the course of service from causes known to be in current operation, and whose effect can be forecast with a reasonable approach to accuracy. State v. Hampton Water Works Co., 91 N.H. 278, 18 A.2d 765, 770. See Depreciation.

Annual exclusion. The amount each year which can be excluded in computing the gift tax on the donor without using the lifetime exemption.

Annually. In annual order or succession: yearly, every year, year by year. At end of each and every year during a period of time. Imposed once a year, computed by the year. Yearly or once a year but does not in itself signify what time in year. Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Harnly, Tex.Civ.App., 348 S.W.2d 856, 860.

Annual percentage rate. The actual cost of borrowing money, expressed in form of annual rate to make it easy for one to compare cost of borrowing money among several lenders or sellers on credit. Full disclosure of such is required by the Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). Commonly abbreviated APR.

Annual permit. Yearly requirement in certain states for domestic corporations to do business in state. The fee is set according to the capitalization of the corporation.

Annual report. A report for stockholders and other interested parties prepared once a year; includes a balance sheet, an income statement, a statement of changes in financial position, a reconciliation of changes in owners' equity accounts, a summary of significant accounting principles, other explanatory notes, the auditor's report, and often comments from management about the year's business and prospects for the next year. By law, any public corporation that holds an annual stockholders meeting is required to issue an annual report.

Annual statement. See Annual report.

Annual value. The net yearly income derivable from a given piece of property. Its fair rental value for one year, deducting costs and expenses; the value of its use for a year.

Annae nec debitum judex non separat ipsum /ˈænjuə nɛk dɛbɪdəm jʊdɛks nɔn sɛpəræt ɪp慢/. A judge (or court) does not divide annuities nor debt. Debt and annuity cannot be divided or apportioned by a court.

Annae pensioen /ˈænjuə pɛnʃiˈɔn/. An ancient writ to provide the king's chaplain, if he had no preferment, with a pension.

Annuity /ˈæn(y)uədɪ/. A right to receive fixed, periodic payments, either for life or for a term of years. Moore v. O'Cheskey, App., 87 N.M. 579, 529 P.2d 292, 293. A fixed sum payable to a person at specified intervals for a specific period of time or for life. Payments represent a partial return of capital and a return (interest) on the capital investment. Therefore, an exclusion ratio must generally be used to compute the amount of taxable income. Special rules apply to employee retirement plan annuities.

Annuity bond. A bond without a maturity date, that is, perpetually paying interest.

Annuity certain. Payable for specified period; no matter the time of death of the annuitant.

Annuity trust. See that title.

Cash refund annuity. Policy which provides for the lump sum payment at the death of the annuitant of the difference between the total received and the price paid.

Contingent annuity. Funded annuity with payments to commence on the happening of an uncertain event; e.g. death of named person other than annuitant. An Annuity whose number of payments depends upon the outcome of an event whose timing is uncertain at the time the annuity is set up.

Deferred annuity. Payments begin at some specified future date provided the beneficiary is alive at such date.

Group annuity contract. A contract to make periodic payments to a member of a group covered by such contract. The usual type is a pension plan providing annuities upon retirement for individual employees under a master contract.

Joint and survivorship annuity. An annuity which is payable to the named annuitants during the period of their joint lives, with the annuity to continue to the survivor when the first annuitant dies.

Joint annuity. An annuity which is paid to the two named persons until the first one dies, at which time the annuity ceases.

Life annuity. Provides for payment of income to annuitant only during his lifetime; even though death is premature.

Private annuity. A contract for periodic payments to the annuitant from private as distinguished from public or life insurance company.

Refund annuity. Annuitant is assured a specified annual sum during his life, with the further assurance that in the event of his premature death there will be paid to his estate an additional amount which represents the difference between the purchase price and the amount paid out during annuitant’s life. See also Refund annuity contract.

Retirement annuity. Policy in which payments to annuitant commence at some future date; e.g. after retirement. If annuitant dies in interval or surrender is desired, an agreed upon amount is refunded to annuitant’s estate.

Straight annuity. A contract usually by an insurance company to make periodic payments at monthly or yearly intervals; distinguishable from life insurance contract which looks to longevity, while annuity looks to transiency. Helvering v. LeGierse, 312 U.S. 531, 541, 61 S.Ct. 646, 85 L.Ed. 996. Straight annuity contract calls for a fixed amount of payment as distinguished from the variable annuity.

Straight life annuity. See Life annuity; Straight annuity, supra.

Survivorship annuity. See Joint and survivorship annuity, supra.

Variable annuity. A contract calling for payments to the annuitant in varying amounts depending on the success of the investment policy of the insurance company; unlike a straight annuity which requires the payment of a fixed amount. Purpose of this type of annuity is to offset deflated value of dollar caused by inflation.

Annuity policy. An insurance policy providing for monthly payments to insured to begin at fixed date and continue through insured’s life. Hamilton v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 196 Miss. 345, 17 So.2d 278, 280.

Annuity trust. A form of trust calling for payment of a fixed amount of income regardless of the amount of principal. In re McQueen’s Will, 65 N.Y.S.2d 201, 205.

Annul /ānul/. To reduce to nothing; annihilate; obliterate; to make void or of no effect; to nullify; to abolish; to do away with. To cancel; destroy; abrogate. To annul a judgment or judicial proceeding is to deprive it of all force and operation, either ab initio or prospectively as to future transactions.

Annun. Year.

Annun, diem, et vastum /ānæm, dāyam, at vēyťam/. See Year, day, and waste.

Annus /ānūs/. Lat. In civil and old English law, a year; the period of three hundred and sixty-five days. See Annual.

Annus, dies, et vastum /ānūs, dāyiż, at vēyťam/. In old English law, year, day, and waste. See Year, day, and waste.

Annus est mora motus quo suum planetam pervolvat circulum /ānūs ēst môro mōvdas khowv s(y)yōwam plānēyda pervasplāt sērk(y)yēl/. A year is the duration of the motion by which a planet revolves through its orbit.

Annus et dies /ānūs at dāyiż/. A year and a day.

Annus inceptus pro completo habetur /ānūs anśeptās prō kəmplēydiow hābiydar/. A year begun is held as completed.

Annus luctus /ānūs lāwktas/. The year of mourning. It was a rule among the Romans, and also the Danes and Saxons, that widows should not marry infra annum luctūs (within the year of mourning).

Annus utilis /ānūs yūwldías/. A year made up of available or serviceable days. In the plural, anni utilis signifies the years during which a right can be exercised or a prescription grow. In prescription, the period of incapacity of a minor, etc., was not counted; it was no part of the anni utilis.

Annusus redditus /ānūs réddatas/. A yearly rent; annuity. 2 Bl.Comm. 41.

Anomalous /ānŏm̩aləs/. Deviating from common rule, method, or type. Irregular; exceptional; abnormal; unusual.

Anomalous indorser /ānŏm̩aləs ţndŏr̩sər/. A stranger to a note, who indorses it after its execution and delivery but before maturity, and before it has been indorsed by the payee.

Anomalous plea /ānŏm̩aləs pľə/. One which is partly affirmative and partly negative.

Anon., An., A /ānŏn/. Abbreviations for anonymous.
A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessarii negative, licet non affirmativum /é/ non posli ad non esti sekwadar aĘgya mencam neEasEyiyiy nega-taEyiv, laĘst naEfarmataEyiv/. A literal translation—From impossibility to non-existence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative—is as ambiguous as the original. It could be translated thus: The negative inference of non-existence necessarily follows from impossibility of existence, but the affirmative inference of existence cannot be drawn from mere possibility.

Anonymous. Nameless; lacking a name or names; e.g., a publication, article, or the like, without any designation of authorship; an unsigned letter; a tip from an unknown service.

Another. Additional. Distinct or different.

Another action pending. See Autre action pendent.

Annoyance /aÉndyzans/. Annoyance; nuisance.

Anselm, ansul, or auncel /Énans/. In old English law, an ancient mode of weighing by hanging scales or hooks at either end of a beam or staff, which, being lifted with one's finger or hand by the middle, showed the equality or difference between the weight at one end and the thing weighed at the other.

Answer. As a verb, the word denotes an assumption of liability, as to "answer" for the debt or default of another. See also Affirmative defense; Defense; Denial; Supplemental answer.

Discovery. A person who fails to answer, or answers evasively or incompletely, deposition or interrogatory questions, may be compelled to do so under Fed.R. Civil P. 37.

Frivolous answer. See Sham answer, infra.

Irrelevant answer. One that has no substantial relation to the controversy; distinguishable from a sham answer. Such may be ordered stricken under Fed.R. Civil P. 12(f).

Pleading. A pleading by which defendant endeavors to resist the plaintiff's demand by an allegation of facts, either denying allegations of plaintiff's complaint or confessing them and alleging new matter in avoidance, which defendant alleges should prevent recovery on facts alleged by plaintiff. In pleading under the Codes and Rules of Civil Procedure, the answer is the formal written statement made by a defendant setting forth the grounds of his defense; corresponding to what in actions under the common-law practice is called the "plea." See Fed.R. Civil P. 8 and 12.

Under Fed.R.Civil P. 12, a person may use an answer to set up all defenses, but he also has the option to use a motion to assert certain defenses.

In chancery pleading, the term denotes a defense in writing, made by a defendant to the allegations contained in a bill or information filed by the plaintiff against him.

Sham answer. One sufficient on its face but so clearly false that it presents no real issue to be tried. One good in form, but false in fact and not pleaded in good faith. A frivolous answer, on the other hand, is one which on its face sets up no defense, although it may be true in fact.

Antapochi /ÉntEpok/. In the Roman law, a transcript or counterpart of the instrument called "apochi" (q.v.), signed by the debtor and delivered to the creditor.

Ante. Lat. Before. Usually employed in old pleadings as expressive of time, as prae (before) was of place, and coram (before) of person.

Occurring in a report or a text-book, it is used to refer the reader to a previous part of the book. Synonymous to "supra"; opposite of "post" or "infra."

Antea /ÉntIa/. Lat. Formerly; heretofore.

Antecedent /Éntasiyant/. Prior in point of time.

Antecedent claim. In law of negotiable instruments, a holder takes for value if he takes the instrument for an antecedent claim against any person whether or not the claim is due. U.C.C. § 3-303(b).

Antecedent creditors. Those whose debts are created before the debtor makes a transfer not lodged for record.

Antecedent debt. In contract law, that which may or may not furnish consideration for a new contract to pay. A negotiable instrument given for an antecedent debt is supported by adequate consideration. U.C.C. § 3-408.

In bankruptcy law, a debt which is incurred before four months prior to filing of bankruptcy petition and hence is not a preference. Bankruptcy Act (1898), § 60a.

Antecessor /ÉntasEsor/. An ancestor (q.v.).

Antedate. To affix an earlier date; to date an instrument as of a time before the time it was written. Such does not affect the negotiability of the instrument. U.C.C. § 3-114.

Ante-factum /ÉntEyiféktau/ or ante-gestum /ÉntEy-jëstau/. Done before. A Roman law term for a previous act, or thing done before.

Antejuramentum /ÉntEyjuromEntau/. In Saxon law, a preliminary or preparatory oath (called also "praerumamentum," and "juramentum calunies," (q.v.), which both the accuser and accused were required to make before any trial or purgation; the accuser swearing that he would prosecute the criminal, and the accused making oath on the very day that he was to undergo the ordeal that he was innocent of the crime with which he was charged.

Ante litum motam /ÉntEyEyadóm mówdwa/. At time when declarant had no motive to distort truth. Before suit brought, before controversy instituted. Also, before the controversy arose.

Ante mortem interest /ÉntEyEyomdróm intorast/. Interests existing only prior to, and not after, transferor's death.

Antenat /ÉntEylnEyday/. See Ante natus.

Ante natus /ÉntEyEyud/. Born before. A person born before another person or before a particular event. The term is particularly applied to one born in a country before a revolution, change of government or dynasty, or other political event, such that the question of his rights, status, or allegiance will depend upon his date of birth with reference to such event. In England, the term commonly denotes one born before the act of union with Scotland; in America, one born before the declaration of independence.
Its opposite is post natus, one born after the event.

Antenuptial /əntɪnʌptʃəl/. Made or done before a marriage.

Antenuptial agreement. A contract between spouses made in contemplation of marriage. Antenuptial agreements are generally entered into by people about to enter marriage in an attempt to resolve issues of support, distribution of wealth and division of property in the event of the death of either or the failure of the proposed marriage resulting in either separation or divorce. Commonly, within the statute of frauds which requires a writing and signing to be enforceable, the consideration must be adequate.
Kosik v. George, 253 Or. 15, 452 P.2d 560. See also Antenuptial settlements.

Antenuptial gift. A transfer of property from one party to the marriage to the other before the marriage without consideration.

Antenuptial settlements. Contracts or agreements between a man and woman before marriage, but in contemplation and generally in consideration of marriage, whereby the property rights and interests of either the prospective husband or wife, or both of them, are determined, or where property is secured to either or both of them, or to their children. In re Carnevale's Will, 248 A.D. 62, 289 N.Y.S. 185, 188.
See Antenuptial agreement; Palimony.

Antenuptial will. A will executed by a person prior to his marriage. Such will is generally deemed revoked unless it appears on the face of the will that it is in contemplation of marriage.

Anthropometry /ænθrəpɒmətriə/. In criminal law and medical jurisprudence, the measurement of the human body. A system of measuring the dimensions of the human body, both absolutely and in their proportion to each other, the facial, cranial, and other angles, the shape and size of the skull, etc., for purposes of comparison with corresponding measurements of other individuals, and serving for the identification of the subject in cases of doubtful or disputed identity.
It was largely adopted after its introduction in France in 1883, but fell into disfavor as being costly and as liable to error. It has given place to the "finger print" system devised by Francis Galton. See Bertil-Ion System.

Antichresis /æntɪkriəzəs/. In the civil law, a species of mortgage, or pledge of immovables. An agreement by which the debtor gives to the creditor the income from the property which he has pledged, in lieu of the interest on his debt. In the French law, if the income was more than the interest, the debtor was entitled to demand an account of the income, and might claim any excess.

By the law of Louisiana, there are two kinds of pledges,—the pawn and the antichresis. A pawn relates to movables, and the antichresis to immova-les. The antichresis must be reduced to writing; and the creditor thereby acquires the right to the fruits, etc., of the immovables, deducting yearly their proceeds from the interest, in the first place, and afterwards from the principal of his debt. He is bound to pay taxes on the property, and keep it in repair, unless the contrary is agreed. The creditor does not become the proprietor of the property by failure to pay at the agreed time, and any clause to that effect is void. He can only sue the debtor, and obtain sentence for sale of the property. The possession of the property is, however, by the contract, transferred to the creditor. La.Civil Code Arts. 3176– 3181. The "antichresis" is an antiquated contract, and has been resorted to in Louisiana in but a few instances.

Anticipation. Act of doing or taking a thing before its proper time. To do, take up, or deal with, before another; to preclude or prevent by prior action; to be before in doing.

In conveyancing, the act of assigning, charging, or otherwise dealing with income before it becomes due.

In patent law, a person is said to have been anticipated when he patents a contrivance already known within the limits of the country granting the patent.
Topliff v. Topliff, 145 U.S. 156, 12 S.Ct. 825, 36 L.Ed.
658. Defense of "anticipation" in suit for patent infringement is made out when, except for insubstantial differences, the prior patent contains all of the same elements operating in the same fashion to perform an identical function. Ropat Corp. v. West Bend Co., D.C.III., 382 F.Supp. 1030, 1036. Unless all of same elements are found in exactly same situation and are united in same way to perform identical function in a single prior art reference, there is no
"anticipation" which will invalidate that patent. Ceramic Tilers Supply, Inc. v. Tile Council of America, Inc., C.A.Cal., 378 F.2d 283, 284.

In law of negligence, "anticipation" is not confined to expectation. It means probability, not possibility, as applied to duty to anticipate consequences of conduct attacked as negligent. Empire Dist. Electric Co.
v. Harris, C.C.A.Mo., 82 F.2d 48, 52.

Anticipation note. Discount or rebate for prepayment.

Anticipatory breach of contract. Such occurs when the promisor without justification and before he has committed a breach makes a positive statement to prom-issee indicating he will not or cannot perform his contractual duties. Daum v. Superior Court, Sutter County, 228 C.A.2d 283, 39 Cal.Rptr. 443, 446.

The right of one party to a contract to sue for breach before the date set for performance when the other party conveys his intention not to perform (U.C.C. § 2–610), though the repudiating party may retract his repudiation prior to date for performance if the other party has not acted on the repudiation (U.C.C. § 2–611). Some jurisdictions require the aggrieved party to wait for the date for performance before commencing suit.

Anticipatory nuisance. The right in equity to prevent a condition from becoming a nuisance by injunction or other order of the court.
ANTICIPATORY OFFENSE

Anticipatory offense. A crime which has as its object a further crime, such as an attempt, a conspiracy, a solicitation, all of which are crimes in themselves.

Anticipatory repudiation. See Anticipatory breach of contract.

Anti-deficiency legislation. Statutes which are enacted to provide revenue when a budget deficiency is created.

Anti-dumping duty. Tariff, purpose of which is to prevent imports of goods for sale at a lower price than that charged in the country of origin. See Dumping Act.

Antigraphus /æntɪɡrɑːfəs/. In Roman law, an officer whose duty it was to take care of tax money. A comptroller.

Antigraphy. A copy or counterpart of a deed.

Anti-lapse statute. Legislation enacted in most jurisdictions to provide for the testamentary passing of property to heirs and next of kin of the designated legatee or devisee if he dies before the testator, thus preventing a lapse of the legacy and the passing of such property through intestacy to the heirs and next of kin of the testator.

Anti manifesto. A term used in international law to denote a proclamation or manifesto published by one of two belligerent powers, alleging reasons why the war is defensive on its part.

Antinomia /æntɪnɒmɪə/. In Roman law, a real or apparent contradiction or inconsistency in the laws. Conflicting laws or provisions of law; inconsistent or conflicting decisions or cases.

Antinomy /æntɪnəmɪə/. A term used in logic and law to denote a real or apparent inconsistency or conflict between two authorities or propositions; same as antinomia (q.v.).

Antiqua custuma /æntɪˈækswə kʌstə mə/. In old English law, an export duty on wool, woolfellers, and leather, imposed during the reign of Edw. I. It was so called by way of distinction from an increased duty on the same articles, payable by foreign merchants, which was imposed at a later period of the same reign and was called "custuma nova."

Antiquare /æntɪˈkwɛri/. In Roman law, to restore a former law or practice; to reject or vote against a new law; to prefer the old law. Those who voted against a proposed law wrote on their ballots the letter "A," the initial of antiquo, I am for the old law.

Antiqua statuta /æntɪˈækswə stætʊtə/. Also called "Vetera Statuta." English statutes from the time of Richard I to Edward III. See Nova statuta.

Antiquum dominicum /æntɪˈækswəm dəˈmɪnɪkəm/. In old English law, ancient demesne.

Antithetarius /æntɪˈθɛtəriəs/. In old English law, a man who endeavors to discharge himself of the crime of which he is accused, by retorting the charge on the accuser. He differs from an approver in this: that the latter does not charge the accuser, but others.

Antitrust acts. Federal and state statutes to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints, price discriminations, price fixing, and monopolies. Most states have mini-antitrust acts patterned on the federal acts. The principal federal antitrust acts are: Sherman Act (1890); Clayton Act (1914); Federal Trade Commission Act (1914); Robinson-Patman Act (1936). See Boycott; Combination in restraint of trade; Price fixing; Restraint of trade; Rule (Rule of reason).

Anxiety. An unpleasant affective state with the expectation but not the certainty of something happening; sometimes manifested as a sense of fear, poorly understood by the subject, which arises without justifiable cause; anxious state may have overtones of "impending" danger rather than present danger. See Phobia.

Any. Some; one out of many; an indefinite number. One indiscriminately of whatever kind or quantity. Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v. Winton, C.C.A. Tenn., 131 F.2d 780, 782. One or some (indefinitely). Siegel v. Siegel, 135 N.J.Eq. 5, 37 A.2d 57, 58. "Any" does not necessarily mean only one person, but may have reference to more than one or to many. Doerrty v. King, Tex.Civ.App., 183 S.W.2d 1004, 1007.

Word "any" has a diversity of meaning and may be employed to indicate "all" or "every" as well as "some" or "one" and its meaning in a given statute depends upon the context and the subject matter of the statute. Donohue v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Norwalk, 155 Conn. 550, 235 A.2d 643, 646, 647.

It is often synonymous with "either", "every", or "all". Its generality may be restricted by the context; thus, the giving of a right to do some act "at any time" is commonly construed as meaning within a reasonable time; and the words "any other" following the enumeration of particular classes are to be read as "other such like," and include only others of like kind or character.

A.O.C. Anno orbis conditi, the year of the creation of the world.

A.P.A. Administrative Procedure Act.

A país. To the country; at issue.

Apanage /apəˈnædʒ/. In old French law, a provision of lands or feudal superiorities assigned by the kings of France for the maintenance of their younger sons. An allowance assigned to a prince of the reigning house for his proper maintenance out of the public treasury.

Apartment house. A building arranged in several suites of connecting rooms, each suite designed for independent housekeeping, but with certain mechanical conveniences, such as heat, light, or elevator services, in common to all families occupying the building. Sometimes called a flat or flat house.

Apatissatio /apədæzéysh(iy)ow/. An agreement or contract.

A.P.C. Alien Property Custodian.

A.P.C.N. Anno post Christum natum, the year after the birth of Christ.

Aperta brevía /apərdə bɾiˈviə/. Open, unsealed writs.

Apertum factum /apərdəm fækˈtəm/. An overt act.

Apertura testamenti /apaɾtəˈɾə tɛstəmənti/. In the civil law, a form of proving a will, by the witnesses acknowledging before a magistrate their having sealed it.

Apex juris /apaˈɾɛks jʊrəs/. The summit of the law; a legal subtlety; a nice or cunning point of law; close technicality; a rule of law carried to an extreme point, either of severity or refinement. A term used to denote a stricter application of the rules of law than is indicated by the phrase summun jus (q.v.).

Apex rule. In mining law, the mineral laws of the United States give to the locator of a mining claim on the public domain the whole of every vein the apex of which lies within its surface exterior boundaries, or within perpendicular planes drawn downward indefinitely on the planes of those boundaries; and he may follow a vein which thus apexes within his boundaries, on its dip, although it may so far depart from the perpendicular in its course downward as to extend outside the vertical side-lines of his location; but he may not go beyond his end-lines or vertical planes drawn downward therefrom. This is called the apex rule. 30 U.S.C.A. § 29.

Aphasia /əˈfeɪʒə/; Loss of the faculty or power of articulate speech; a condition in which the patient, while retaining intelligence and understanding and with the organs of speech unimpaired, is unable (in “motor aphasia”) to utter articulate words, or unable to vocalize the particular word which is in his mind and which he wishes to use, or utters words different from those he believes himself to be speaking, or (in “sensory aphasia” or apraxia) is unable to understand spoken or written language. Sensory aphasia includes word blindness and word deafness, visual and auditory aphasia. Motor aphasia often includes agraphia, or the inability to write words of the desired meaning. The seat of the disease is in the brain, but it is not a form of insanity.

Aphonia /əˈfɒn.iə/; Loss of the power of articulate speech in consequence of defective conditions of some of the vocal organs. It may be incomplete, in which case the patient can whisper. It is to be distinguished from congenital inability to speak, and from temporary loss of voice through extreme hoarseness or minor affections of the vocal cords, as also from aphasia, the latter being a disease of the brain without impairment of the organs of speech.

Aplices juris non sunt jura [jus] /eˈpaʃisɪʒ jʊrəs nʊn ˈsənt ˈʃʊrə ("ʃʌs"). Extremities, or mere subtleties of law are not rules of law [are not law]. Legal principles must not be carried to their extreme consequences, without regard for equity and good sense. See Apex juris.

Aplices litigandi /eˈpaʃisɪʒ lɪtɪɡənˈdæj/; Extremely fine points, or subtleties of litigation. Nearly equivalent to the modern phrase “sharp practice.” “It is unconscionable in a defendant to take advantage of the apices litigandi, to turn a plaintiff around and make him pay costs when his demand is just.” Per Lord Mansfield, in 3 Burr. 1243.

A piratis aut latronibus capti liberis permanent /eˈpaɾɪtɪs aut lɑtˈroʊnɪbʊs kɑptɪ ˈlɪbərɪs pɜrˈmənt/. Persons taken by pirates or robbers remain free.

A piratis et latronibus capta dominum non mutant /eˈpaɾɪtɪs ət lɑtˈroʊnɪbʊs kɑptə dəˈmɪnɪm nʊn mətənt/. Capture by pirates and robbers does not change title. No right to booty vests in piratical captors; no right can be derived from them by re captors to the prejudice of the original owners.

Apoena /əˈpoʊniə/. Want of breath; difficulty in breathing; partial or temporary suspension of respiration; specifically, such difficulty of respiration resulting from over-oxygenation of the blood, and in this distinguished from “asphyxia” (q.v.), which is a condition resulting from a deficiency of oxygen in the blood due to suffocation or any serious interference with normal respiration. The two terms were formerly (but improperly) used synonymously.

Apocha (also Apoca) /əˈpoʊka/. Lat. In the civil law, a writing acknowledging payments; acquittance. It differs from acceptance in this: that acceptance imports a complete discharge of the former obligation whether payment be made or not; apocah, discharge only upon payment being made. See Antapocah.

Apoche oneratoria /əˈpoʊki ənɒreɪtəˈriə/. In old commercial law, bills of lading.

Apocrisarius /əˈpoʊkrɪsəˈriəs/. In civil law, a messenger; an ambassador.

In ecclesiastical law, one who answers for another. An officer whose duty was to carry to the emperor messages relating to ecclesiastical matters, and to take back his answer to the petitioners. An officer who gave advice on questions of ecclesiastical law. An ambassador or legate of a pope or bishop. A messenger sent to transact ecclesiastical business and report to his superior; an officer who had charge of the treasury of a monastic edifice; an officer who took charge of opening and closing the doors.

Apocrisarius cancellarius /əˈpoʊkrɪsəˈriəs kənˈsələriəs/. In the civil law, an officer who took charge of the royal seal and signed royal dispatches. Called, also, secretarius, consiliarius (from his giving advice); referendarius; a consiliis (from his acting as counsellor); a responsis, or responsalis.

Apographia /ἀπογραφία/. In civil law, an examination and enumeration of things possessed; an inventory.

Apoplexy /ἀποπλήκσις/. The failure of consciousness and suspension of voluntary motion from suspension of the functions of the cerebrum. The group of symptoms arising from rupture of a minute artery and consequent hemorrhage into the substance of the brain or from the lodgment of a minute clot in one of the cerebral arteries.

Apostacy (also spelled Apostasy). The total renunciation of Christianity, by embracing either a false religion or no religion at all. In old English law, this offense could take place only in such as had once professed the Christian religion. 4 Bl.Comm. 43.

Apostata /ἀπόστατος/. In civil and old English law, an apostate; a deserter from the faith; one who has renounced the Christian faith.

Apostata capiendo /ἀπόστατα καταλαμβάνοντες/. An obsolete English writ which issued against an apostate, or one who had violated the rules of his religious order. It was addressed to the sheriff, and commanded him to deliver the defendant into the custody of the abbot or prior.

A posteriori /απότελος/. Lat. From the effect to the cause; from what comes after. A term used in logic to denote an argument founded on experiment or observation, or one which, taking ascertained facts as an effect, proceeds by synthesis and induction to demonstrate their cause.

Apostille, or appostille /ἀπόσταλη/. L. Fr. An addition; a marginal note or observation.

Apostles. In English admiralty practice, a term borrowed from the civil law, denoting brief dissmisitory letters granted to a party who appeals from an inferior to a superior court, embodying a statement of the case and a declaration that the record will be transmitted.

Apostoli /ἀπόστολοι/. In civil law, certificates of the inferior judge from whom a cause is removed, directed to the superior. See Apostles.

Apostolus /ἀπόστολος/. A messenger; an ambassador, legate, or nuncio.

Apotheca /ἀποθήκα/. In the civil law, a repository; a place of deposit, as of wine, oil, books, etc.

Apparator /ἀπαράδικος/. A furnisher or provider. Formerly the sheriff, in England, had charge of certain county affairs and disbursements, in which capacity he was called "apparator comitatus" (apparator for the county), and received therefor a considerable emolument.

Apparent. That which is obvious, evident, or manifest; what appears, or has been made manifest. That which appears to the eye or mind; open to view; plain; patent. In respect to facts involved in an appeal or writ of error, that which is stated in the record. See also Appear on face.

Apparent agency. See Agency.

Apparent authority. In the law of agency, such authority as the principal knowingly or negligently permits the agent to assume, or which he holds the agent out as possessing. Such authority as he appears to have by reason of the actual authority which he has. Such authority as a reasonably prudent man, using diligence and discretion, in view of the principal's conduct, would naturally suppose the agent to possess. Finnegan Constr. Co. v. Robin-Ladd Co., 354 A.2d 142, 144. Such authority as a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows third person to believe that agent possesses. Lewis v. Michigan Milers Mut. Ins. Co., 154 Conn. 660, 228 A.2d 803, 806. It includes the power to do whatever is usually done and necessary to be done in order to carry into effect the principal power conferred.

The power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons. Restatement, Second, Agency § 8.

Apparent danger. As used with reference to the doctrine of self-defense in homicide, means such overt actual demonstration, by conduct and acts, of a design to take life or do some great personal injury, as would make the killing apparently necessary to self-preservation.

Apparent defects. Those defects in goods which can be discovered by simple inspection; see U.C.C. § 2–605. Also, may refer to title defects which appear on the record. See Patent (Patent defect).

Apparent easement. See Easement.

Apparent heir. One whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlives the ancestor. To be contrasted with presumptive heir whose claim to inheritance is defeated on the birth of an heir closer in relationship to the ancestor, though at a given point in time the heir presumptive is entitled to the inheritance.

Apparent necessity. See Apparent danger.

Apparitor /ἀπαράδικος/. In old English law, an officer or messenger employed to serve the process of the spiritual courts and summon offenders.

In the civil law, an officer who waited upon a magistrate or superior officer, and executed his commands.

Apparlement /ἀπαράγματα/. In old English law, resemblance; likelihood; as apparlement of war.

Apparura /ἀπαρύρα/. In old English law, the apparura were furniture, implements, tackle, or apparel.

App. Ct. Appellate Court.

Appeal. Resort to a superior (i.e. appellate) court to review the decision of an inferior (i.e. trial) court or administrative agency. There are two stages of appeal in the federal and many state court systems: to wit, appeal from trial court to intermediate appellate court and then to Supreme Court. There may also be several levels of appeal within an administrative agency; e.g. appeal from decision of Administrative Law Judge to Appeals Council in social security case. In addition, an appeal may be taken from an administrative agency to a trial court (e.g. from Appeals Council in social security case to U.S. district court). Also, an appeal may be as of right (e.g. from trial court to intermediate appellate court) or only at the discretion of the appellate court (e.g. by writ of certiorari to U.S. Supreme Court). Provision may also exist for joint or consolidated appeals (e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 3) and for cross appeals (where both parties to a judgment appeal therefrom).

Appeal was also the name formerly given to the proceeding in English law where a person, indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed, or accused others, his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. In this case he was called an "approver" or "prover," and the party appealed or accused, the "appeellee."

See also Consolidated appeal; Courts of Appeals, U.S.; Cross appeal; Interlocutory appeal; Interlocutory Appeals Act; Limited appeal.

Appealable order. A decree or order which is sufficiently final to be entitled to appellate review, as contrasted with an interlocutory order which generally is not appealable until the case has been tried and judgment entered, e.g. a denial of motion for summary judgment is not appealable but the allowance of such motion is a final judgment and hence appealable. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56.

Appeal bond. The bond given on taking an appeal, by which the appellant and his sureties are bound to pay costs if he fails to prosecute the appeal with effect. See e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 7.

Appeal in forma pauperis /spî'yəl in fôrmə póparəs/. A privilege given indigent person to prosecute an appeal, otherwise and independently allowable, without payment of fees and costs incident to such prosecution. See e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 24.

Appeal record. See Record (Record on appeal).

Appeals council. Body to which appeal is taken from finding and ruling of administrative law judge in social security matters. 42 U.S.C.A. § 405(b).

Appeals courts. See Appellate court; Court of Appeals, U.S.; Court of Customs and Patent Appeals; Court of Military Appeals; Supreme Court

Appears. To be properly before a court; as a fact or matter of which it can take notice. To be in evidence; to be proved. Coming into court by a party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. See Appearance.

Appearance. A coming into court as party to a suit, either in person or by attorney, whether as plaintiff or defendant. The formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. The voluntary submission to a court's jurisdiction.

In civil actions the parties do not normally actually appear in person, but rather through their attorneys. Also, at many stages of criminal proceedings, particularly involving minor offenses, the defendant's attorney appears on his behalf. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 43.

An appearance may be either general or special; the former is a simple and unqualified or unrestricted submission to the jurisdiction of the court, the latter a submission to the jurisdiction for some specific purpose only, not for all the purposes of the suit. A special appearance is for the purpose of testing the sufficiency of service or the jurisdiction of the court; a general appearance is made where the defendant waives defects of service and submits to the jurisdiction. Insurance Co. of North America v. Kunin, 175 Neb. 260, 121 N.W.2d 372, 375, 376.

See also General appearance; Notice to appear.

Appearance by attorney. An act of an attorney in prosecuting an action on behalf of his client. Document filed in court in which attorney sets forth fact that he is representing a party to the action.

Appearance docket. A docket kept by the clerk of the court in which appearances are entered, containing also a brief abstract of all the proceedings in the cause.

Common law classifications. At common law an appearance could be either compulsory or voluntary, the former where it was compelled by process served on the party, the latter where it was entered by his own will or consent, without the service of process, though process may be outstanding. Also, optional when entered by a person who intervened in the action to protect his own interests, though not joined as a party; conditional, when coupled with conditions as to its becoming or being taken as a general appearance; gratis, when made by a party to the action, but before the service of any process or legal notice to appear; de bene esse, when made provisionally or to remain good only upon a future contingency; or when designed to permit a party to a proceeding to refuse to submit his person to the jurisdiction of the court unless it was finally determined that he had forever waived that right; subsequent, when made by a defendant after an appearance had already been entered for him by the plaintiff; corporal, when the person was physically present in court.

Initial appearance. A court proceeding for a defendant charged with a felony, during which the judge advises the defendant of the charges against him and of his rights, decides upon bail and/or other conditions of release, and sets the date for a preliminary hearing. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.

Notice of appearance. A notice given by defendant to a plaintiff that he appears in the action in person or by attorney.

Appear on face. That which is clear and apparent from a reading of the document. A defect in process or venue which can be gleaned from examining the pleadings and which does not require going outside the record. See also Apparent.

Appellant. The party who takes an appeal from one court or jurisdiction to another. Used broadly or nontechnically, the term includes one who sues out a writ of error.

Appellate. Pertaining to or having cognizance of appeals and other proceedings for the judicial review of adjudications. Word "appellate" has a general meaning, and it has a specific meaning indicating the
APPELLATE

Appellate court. A court having jurisdiction of appeal and review; a court to which causes are removable by appeal, certiorari, error or report. A reviewing court, and, except in special cases where original jurisdiction is conferred, not a "trial court" or court of first instance. See e.g. Court of Appeals; Court of Customs and Patent Appeals; Court of Military Appeals; Supreme Court.

Appellate jurisdiction. The power vested in an appellate court to review and revise the judicial action of an inferior court, evidenced by an appealable order or an appealable judgment rendered by such court. Trengen v. Mongeon, N.D., 200 N.W.2d 50, 53. The power and authority to take cognizance of a cause and proceed to its determination, not in its initial stages (i.e. original jurisdiction) but only after it has been finally decided by an inferior court, i.e., the power of review and determination on appeal, writ of error, certiorari, or other similar process. Jurisdiction on appeal; jurisdiction to revise or correct the proceedings in a cause already instituted and acted upon by an inferior court, or by a tribunal having the attributes of a court. Limits of appellate jurisdiction are governed by statutes (e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291 et seq.) or constitutions.

Appellate review. Examination of lower court proceeding by an appellate court brought about by appeal, bill of exceptions, report or certiorari. Such may also embrace review of administrative board's decision by an inferior court; e.g. review by federal district court of social security administration decision.

Appellatio /æpələˈʃɪʃ(ɪ)əʊ/ Lat. An appeal.

Appellator /æpələˈtɔr/ An old law term having the same meaning as "appellant" (q.v.).

In the civil law, the term was applied to the judge ad quem, or to whom an appeal was taken.

Appellee. The party in a cause against whom an appeal is taken; that is, the party who has an interest adverse to setting aside or reversing the judgment. Sometimes also called the "respondent." It should be noted that a party's status as appellant or appellee does not necessarily bear any relation to his status as plaintiff or defendant in the lower court.

Appello /æpəˈloʊ/ Lat. In the civil law, "I appeal." The form of making an appeal apud acta.

Appellor /æpəˈlɔr/ In old English law, a criminal who accused his accomplices, or who challenged a jury. See Approver.

Append. To add or attach.

Appendage. Something added as an accessory to or the subordinate part of another thing. See Appendant; Appendix.

Appendant. A thing annexed to or belonging to another thing and passing with it. Something added or attached.

At common law, a thing of inheritance belonging to another inheritance which is more worthy; as an advowson, common, etc., which may be appendant to a manor, common of fishing to a freehold, a seat in a church to a house, etc. It differs from appurtenance, in that appendant must ever be by prescription, i.e., a personal usage for a considerable time, while an appurtenance may be created at this day; for if a grant be made to a man and his heirs, of common in such a moor for his beasts levant orouchant upon his moor, the commons are appurtenant to the moor, and the grant will pass them.

See also Appendix; Appurtenance; Appurtenant.

Appenditia /æpəndɪʃ(ɪ)ə/ The appendages or appurtenances of an estate or house, dwelling, etc.; thus, penthouses are the appenditia domus.

Appendix. Supplementary materials added to appellate brief; i.e. record on appeal. In federal appellate procedure, the appellant is required to file an appendix to the briefs which shall contain the following: (1) the relevant portions of the pleadings, charge, findings or opinion; (2) the judgment, order or decision in question; and (3) any other parts of the record to which the parties wish to direct the particular attention of the court. Fed.R.App.P. 30.

Appensura /æpəns(ɜː)rə/ Payment of money by weight instead of by count.

Appertain. To belong to; to have relation to; to be appurtenant to. See Appurtenance; Appurtenant.

Appertaining. Connected with in use or occupancy.

Applicable. Fit, suitable, pertinent, or appropriate.

Applicable local law. Term used to determine the persons who come within the term heirs and is the law which would be used to ascertain the heirs of the designated ancestor if he had owned the property and had died intestate. Restatement of Law of Property, § 305, Comment e.

Applicant. An applicant, as for letters of administration, is one who is entitled thereto, and who files a petition asking that letters be granted.

Applicare /æplɪˈkɛrɪə/ Lat. In old English law, to fasten to; to moor (a vessel). Anciently rendered, "to apply."

Applicatio est vita regula /æplɪˈkæsɪˈʃɪʃ(ɪ)əʊ ɛst vəɪdə rɛˈɡələ/ Application is the life of a rule.

Application. A putting to, placing before, preferring a request or petition to or before a person. The act of making a request for something. A petition. The use or disposition made of a thing. A bringing together, in order to ascertain some relation or establish some connection; as the application of a rule or principle to a case or fact. See also Apply; Petition.

Insurance. The preliminary request, declaration, or statement made by a party applying for an insurance policy, such as one on his life, or against fire.
Payments. Appropriation of a payment to some particular debt; or the determination to which of several demands a general payment made by a debtor to his creditor shall be applied.

Purchase money. The disposition made of the funds received by a trustee on a sale of real estate held under the trust.

Application of rules. Refers to area of practice governed by rules of procedure and not left to common law or statutory law.

Apply. To make a formal request or petition, usually in writing, to a court, officer, board, or company, for the granting of some favor, or of some rule or order, which is within his or her power or discretion. For example, to apply for an injunction, for a pardon, for a policy of insurance, or for a receiver. See Application; Petition.

To put, use, or refer, as suitable or relative; to co-ordinate language with a particular subject-matter; as to apply the words of a statute to a particular state of facts.

The word "apply" is used in connection with statutes in two senses. When construing a statute, in describing the class of persons, things, or functions which are within its scope; as that the statute does not "apply" to transactions in interstate commerce. When discussing the use made of a statute, in referring to the process by which the statute is made operative; as where the jury is told to "apply" the statute of limitation if they find that the cause of action arose before a given date.

Appoint. To designate, ordain, prescribe, constitute, or nominate. To allot or set apart. To assign authority to a particular use, task, position, or office.

Term is used where exclusive power and authority is given to one person, officer, or body to name persons to hold certain offices. It is usually distinguished from "elect," meaning to choose by a vote of the qualified voters of the city; though this distinction is not invariably observed.

See also Appointment.

Appointee. A person who is appointed or selected for a particular purpose; as the appointee under a power of appointment is the person who is to receive the benefit of the power.

Appointment. The designation of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to discharge the duties of some office or trust. In re Nicholson's Estate, 104 Colo. 561, 93 P.2d 880, 884. See Illusory appointment; Power of appointment.

The exercise of a right to designate the person or persons who are to take the use of real estate. The act of a person in directing the disposition of property, by limiting a use, or by substituting a new use for a former one, in pursuance of a power granted to him for that purpose by a preceding deed, called a "power of appointment"; also the deed or other instrument by which he so conveys. Where the power embraces several permitted objects, and the appointment is made to one or more of them, excluding others, it is called "exclusive."

Appointment may signify an appropriation of money to a specific purpose. It may also mean the arranging of a meeting.

Office or public function. The selection or designation of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to fill an office or public function and discharge the duties of the same. The term "appointment" is to be distinguished from "election." "Election" to office usually refers to vote of people, whereas "appointment" relates to designation by some individual or group. Board of Education of Boyle County v. McChesney, 235 Ky. 692, 32 S.W.2d 26, 27.

Appointment, power of. See Power of appointment.

Appointor. The person who appoints, or executes a power of appointment; as appointee is the person to whom or in whose favor an appointment is made. One authorized by the donor, under the statute of uses, to execute a power.

Apport. L. Fr. In old English law, tax; tallage; tribute; imposition; payment; charge; expenses.

Apportion. To divide and distribute proportionally.

Apportionment /əpˈɔrˌʃənmənt/. Determination of the number of representatives which a State, county, or other subdivision may send to a legislative body. The U.S. Constitution provides for a census every ten years, on the basis of which Congress apportions representatives according to population; but each State must have at least one representative. "Districting" is the establishment of the precise geographical boundaries of each such unit or constituency. Seaman v. Fedourich, 16 N.Y.2d 94, 262 N.Y.S.2d 444, 209 N.E.2d 778, 779. Apportionment by state statute which denies the rule of one-man, one-vote is violative of equal protection of laws. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. See also Legislative apportionment; Reapportionment.

The allocation of a charge or cost such as real estate taxes between two parties, often in the same ratio as the respective times that the parties are in possession or ownership of property during the fiscal period for which the charge is made or assessed.

Contracts. The allowance, in case of a severable contract, partially performed, of a part of the entire consideration proportioned to the degree in which the contract was carried out.

Corporate shares. The pro tanto division among the subscribers of the shares allowed to be issued by the charter, where more than the limited number have been subscribed for.

Estate taxes. Unless the will otherwise provides, taxes shall be apportioned among all persons interested in the estate. The apportionment is to be made in the proportion that the value of the interest of each person interested in the estate bears to the total value of the interests of all persons interested in the estate. The values used in determining the tax are to be used for that purpose. If the decedent's will directs a method of apportionment of tax different from the method described in the Probate Code, the method described in the will controls. Uniform Probate Code, § 3–916(b).

Incumbrances. Where several persons are interested in an estate, apportionment, as between them, is the determination of the respective amounts which they shall contribute towards the removal of the incumbrance.

Liability. Legal responsibility of parties to a transaction or tort may be distributed or apportioned among them by statute or by agreement. See Comparative negligence; Contribution.

Rent. The allotment of shares in a rent to each of several parties owning it. The determination of the amount of rent to be paid when the tenancy is terminated at some period other than one of the regular intervals for the payment of rent.

Representatives. The determination upon each decennial census of the number of representatives in congress which each state shall elect, the calculation being based upon the population. See U.S.Const., Art. 1, § 2; Amend. 14, § 2.

Taxes. The apportionment of a tax consists in a selection of the subjects to be taxed, and in laying down the rule by which to measure the contribution which each of these subjects shall make to the tax.

Apportionment clause. Insurance policy clause which distributes insurance in proportion to the total coverage.

Apports en nature /a理工 tɔ̃ naʔyʁ/. In French law, that which a partner brings into the partnership other than cash; for instance, securities, realty or personality, cattle, stock, or even his personal ability and knowledge.

Apportum /a理工 dam/. In old English law, the revenue, profit, or emolument which a thing brings to the owner. Commonly applied to a corody or pension.

Apposer /a理工 oˈsɛːr/. In old English law, an officer in the exchequer, clothed with the duty of examining the sheriffs in respect of their accounts. Usually called the "foreign apposer." The office is now abolished.

Appostille, or apostille /a理工 sɛːl/. In French law, an addition or annotation made in the margin of a writing.

Appraisal. A valuation or an estimation of value of property by disinterested persons of suitable qualifications. The process of ascertaining a value of an asset or liability that involves expert opinion rather than explicit market transactions. See also Appraise.

Appraisal clause. Clause in insurance policy providing that the insurer has the right to demand an appraisal of the loss or damage.

Appraisal remedy. The dissenting shareholder’s appraisal remedy is essentially a statutory creation to enable shareholders who object to certain extraordinary matters to dissent and to require the corporation to buy their shares at the value immediately prior to the approval of such matter and thus to withdraw from the corporation. In different jurisdictions, the appraisal remedy often applies to sales of substantially all corporate assets other than in the regular course of business, mergers, and consolidations, more rarely to certain amendments of the articles of incorporation or miscellaneous matters, but usually not to dissolution. The appraisal remedy is often limited to shareholders of record entitled to vote on the matter.

Appraisal rights. See Appraisal remedy.

Appraise. To fix or set a price or value upon; to fix and state the true value of a thing, and, usually, in writing. To value property at what it is worth. To "appraise" money means to count. See also Appraisal.

Appraisement. A just and true valuation of property. A valuation set upon property under judicial or legislative authority. A valuation or estimation of the value of property. See also Appraisal.

Appraiser. A person selected or appointed by competent authority or interested party to make an appraisal; to ascertain and state the true value of goods or real estate. Frequently appointed in probate and condemnation proceedings; also used by condemnation authorities, banks and real estate companies to ascertain market value of real property.

Appreciable. Capable of being estimated, weighed, judged of, or recognized by the mind. Capable of being perceived or recognized by the senses. Perceptible but not a synonym of substantial.

Appreciate. To estimate justly; to set a price or value on. When used with reference to the nature and effect of an act, "appreciate" may be synonymous with "know" or "understand" or "realize."

Appreciation in value. Increase in the market value of an asset over its value at some earlier time. May be due from inflation and/or increased demand for asset.

Apprehend. To take hold of, whether with the mind (as to conceive, believe, fear, dread, understand, be conscious or sensible of), or actually and bodily (as to seize or arrest a person).

Apprehension /əˈprɛhnʃən/ (jʌ)ˈnʌv/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a taking hold of a person or thing; apprehension; the seizure or capture of a person.

One of the varieties or subordinate forms of occupatio, or the mode of acquiring title to things not belonging to any one.

Apprehension. The seizure, taking, or arrest of a person on a criminal charge.

Civil law. A physical or corporal act (corpus), on the part of one who intends to acquire possession of a thing, by which he brings himself into such a relation to the thing that he may subject it to his exclusive control; or by which he obtains the physical ability to exercise his power over the thing whenever he pleases. One of the requisites to the acquisition of judicial possession, and by which, when accompanied by intention, (animus) possession is acquired.

Apprendre. A fee or profit taken or received.

Apprentice en la ley /a理工 próˈnʃəs oˈn la léy/. An ancient name for students at law, and afterwards applied to counsellors, apprentici ad barras, from which comes the more modern word “barrister.” In some of the ancient law-writers the terms apprentice and barrister are synonymous.

Apprenticeship. An apprentice is a person who agrees to work for an employer for a specified time for the purpose of learning the craft, trade or profession in which the employer agrees to instruct him. In a more popular sense the term is used to convey the idea of a learner in any field of employment or business. The requirements of an apprenticeship contract both as to contents and manner of execution are prescribed by statute in a number of states. See also Articles of apprenticeship.

The term during which an apprentice is to serve; the status of an apprentice; the relation subsisting between an apprentice and his master.

Apprenticius ad legem /æprentʃɪʃɪəs æd lɪˈjæm/. An apprentice to the law; a law student; a counsellor below the degree of serjeant. See Apprentice en lay.

Approach. To come nearer in place or time.

Approaches. A way, passage, street, or avenue by which a place or building can be approached; an access.

Approach, right of. In international maritime law, the right of a ship of war, upon the high sea, to draw near to another vessel for the purpose of ascertaining the nationality of the latter. The Marianna Flora, 24 U.S. 1, 11 Wheat. 1, 6 L.Ed. 405. At present the right of approach has no existence apart from the right of visit.

Probation /æprəˈbeɪʃən/. Denotes approval and generally includes commendation. Application of N. Y. Soul Clinic, 208 Misc. 612, 144 N.Y.S.2d 543, 545.

Appropriate. To make a thing one’s own; to make a thing the subject of property; to exercise dominion over an object to the extent, and for the purpose, of making it subservive one’s own proper use or pleasure. To prescribe a particular use for particular moneys; to designate or destined a fund or property for a distinct use, or for the payment of a particular demand. Also used in the sense of distribute. In this sense it may denote the act of an executor or administrator who distributes the estate of his decedent among the legatees, heirs, or others entitled, in pursuance of his duties and according to their respective rights. See Appropriation; Expropriation.

Appropriated surplus. In accounting, portion of surplus set aside for specific purpose other than for existing liability.

Appropriation. The act of appropriating or setting apart; prescribing the destination of a thing; designating the use or application of a fund. McKenzie Const. Co. v. City of San Antonio, Tex.Civ.App., 50 S.W.2d 349, 352.

In government accounting, an expenditure authorized for a specified amount, purpose, and time.

See also Appropriate; Misappropriation.

Appropriation of land. The act of selecting, devoting, or setting apart land for a particular use or purpose, as where land is appropriated for public buildings, military reservations, or other public uses. Taking of private property for public use in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. In this sense it may refer merely to physical occupation and contemplate payment prior thereto, in contra-distinction to “taking,” referring to a legal taking and presupposing payment after damages are due. See Condemnation; Eminent domain; Expropriation.

Appropriation of payments. The application of a payment to the discharge of a particular debt. Thus, if a creditor has two distinct debts due to him from his debtor, and the latter makes a general payment on account, without specifying at the time to which debt he intends the payment to apply, it is optional for the creditor to appropriate (apply) the payment to either of the two debts he pleases.

Appropriation of water. An appropriation of water flowing on the public domain consists in the capture, impounding, or diversion of it from its natural course or channel and its actual application to some beneficial use private or personal to the appropriator, to the entire exclusion (or exclusion to the extent of the water appropriated) of all other persons. To constitute a valid appropriation, there must be an intent to apply the water to some beneficial use existing at the time or contemplated in the future, a diversion from the natural channel by means of a ditch or canal, or some other open physical act of taking possession of the water, and an actual application of it within a reasonable time to some useful or beneficial purpose. In re Manse Spring and Its Tributaries, Nye County, 60 Nev. 262, 108 P.2d 311, 314; State of Neb. v. State of Wyo., 325 U.S. 589, 65 S.Ct. 1332, 1349, 89 L.Ed. 1815. It follows water to its original source whether through surface or subterranean streams or through percolation, Justesen v. Olsen, 86 Utah 158, 40 P.2d 802, 809; and entitles appropriator to continuing right to use water to extent of appropriation, but not beyond that reasonably required and actually used. State of Arizona v. State of California, Ariz. & Cal.; 298 U.S. 558, 56 S.Ct. 848, 852, 80 L.Ed. 1331.

Public law. The act by which the legislative department of government designates a particular fund, or sets apart a specified portion of the public revenue or of the money in the public treasury, to be applied to some general object of governmental expenditure, or to some individual purchase or expense. Authority given by legislature to proper officers to apply distinctively specified sum from designated fund out of treasury in given year for specified object or demand against state. State ex rel. Murray v. Carter, 167 Okl. 473, 30 P.2d 700, 702.

A specific appropriation is an act of the legislature by which a named sum of money has been set apart in the treasury, and devoted to the payment of a particular demand.

Appropriation bill. A measure before a legislative body authorizing the expenditure of public moneys and stipulating the amount, manner, and purpose of the various items of expenditure. Appropriation bills in Congress must originate in the House. U.S.Const. Art. I, Sec. 7. See also Appropriation (Public law).

Appropriator. One who makes an appropriation; as, an appropriator of water.
Approval. The act of confirming, ratifying, assenting, sanctioning, or consenting to some act or thing done by another. “Approval” implies knowledge and exercise of discretion after knowledge. McCarten v. Sanderson, 111 Mont. 407, 109 P.2d 1108, 1112. The act of a judge or magistrate in sanctioning and accepting as satisfactory a bond, security, or other instrument which is required by law to pass his inspection and receive his approval before it becomes operative. See Affirm; Approve; Assent; Condonation; Confirmation; Connivance; Consent; Ratification. For “sale on approval”, see Sale.

Approval sales. A buyer may, by agreement, accept goods on approval, and title does not pass until he has indicated his approval. Approval is a condition precedent to passing of title and risk. U.C.C. § 2–326.

Approve. To be satisfied with; to confirm, ratify, sanction, or consent to some act or thing done by another. To sanction officially; to ratify; to confirm; to pronounce good; think or judge well of; admit the propriety or excellence of; be pleased with. Distinguishable from “authorize,” meaning to permit a thing to be done in future. To take to one’s proper and separate use. To improve; to enhance the value or profits of anything. To inclose and cultivate common or waste land. See also Approval; Confirmation; Ratification.

Approved indorsed notes. Notes indorsed by another person than the maker, for additional security, the indorsor being satisfactory to the payee. See Accommodation paper; Accommodation party.

Approval. In English law, the improvement or partial inclosure of a common. The profits arising from the improvement of land approved.

In old English law, a practice of criminal prosecutions by which a person accused of treason or felony was permitted to exonerate himself by accusing others and escaping prosecution himself. The custom existed only in capital cases, and consisted in the accused, at his request, calling “approval” being arraigned and permitted to confess before plea and appeal or accuse another as his accomplice of the same crime in order to obtain his pardon. See Approver.

Approver. L. Fr. To approve or prove; to vouch.

In old English law, an accomplice in crime who accused others of the same offense, and was admitted as a witness at the discretion of the court to give evidence against his companions in guilt. He was vulgarly called “King’s Evidence.” One who confessed himself guilty of felony and accused others of the same crime to save himself from punishment. If he failed to convict those he accused he was at once hung. See also Antithetarius.

In old English law, certain men sent into the several counties to increase the farms (rents) of hundreds and wapentakes, which formerly were let at a certain value to the sheriff.

Approximate. Used in the sense of an estimate merely, meaning more or less, but about and near the amount, quantity, or distance specified. Near to; about; a little more or less; close. “Approximately” is very nearly synonymous with “proximately”, meaning very nearly, but not absolutely.

Approximation. Equitable doctrine by which precise terms of charitable trust can be varied under certain circumstances. Applicable to charitable trusts and employed only where on failure of trust the court finds a general charitable intent. Under this doctrine, the general intent of the donor is carried out as nearly as may be even if the particular method pointed out by him cannot be followed. Harris v. Attorney General, 31 Conn.Sup. 93, 324 A.2d 279, 283. See Cypres.

Appraiser /əprəˈwɪriə/ To take to one’s use or profit.

Appurtenance /əˈpɜːrtrənəns/ That which belongs to something else; an adjunct; an appendage. Something annexed to another thing more worthy as principal, and which passes as incident to it, as a right of way or other easement to land; an outhouse, barn, garden, or orchard, to a house or messuage. Joplin Waterworks Co. v. Jasper County, 327 Mo. 964, 38 S.W.2d 1068, 1076. An article adapted to the use of the property to which it is connected, and which was intended to be a permanent accession to the freehold. A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way, or watercourse, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another. See also Appendant.

Appurtenant. Belonging to; accessory or incident to; adjunct, appended, or annexed to; answering to accessorium in the civil law. Employed in leases for the purpose of including any easements or servitudes used or enjoyed with the demise premises. A thing is “appurtenant” to something else when it stands in relation of an incident to a principal and is necessarily connected with the use and enjoyment of the latter. A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way, or water-courses, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another.

Arbitrary power. Power to act according to one's own will; especially applicable to power conferred on an administrative officer, who is not furnished any adequate determining principle. Fox Film Corporation v. Trumbull, D.C.Conn., 7 F.2d 715, 727.

Arbitrary punishment. That punishment which is left to the decision of the judge, in distinction from those defined by statute. See Sentence.

Arbitration /'arbtrɪəʃən/. The reference of a dispute to an impartial (third) person chosen by the parties to the dispute who agree in advance to abide by the arbitrator's award issued after a hearing at which both parties have an opportunity to be heard.

An arrangement for taking and abiding by the judgment of selected persons in some disputed matter, instead of carrying it to established tribunals of justice, and is intended to avoid the formalities, the delay, the expense and vexation of ordinary litigation. Wauregan Mills Inc. v. Textile Workers Union of America, A.F.L.—C.I.O., 21 Conn.Sup. 134, 146 A.2d 592, 595. Such arbitration provisions are common in union collective bargaining agreements.

The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Arbitration Act.

A major body offering arbitration services is the American Arbitration Association (q.v.).

See also Conciliation; Mediation; Reference.

Compulsory arbitration is that which occurs when the consent of one of the parties is enforced by statutory provisions. Examples of such are state statutes requiring compulsory arbitration of labor disputes involving public employees.

Interest and grievance arbitration distinguished. Interest arbitration involves settlement of terms of a contract between the parties as contrasted with grievance arbitration which concerns the violation or interpretation of an existing contract. School Committee of Boston et al. v. Boston Teachers Union etc., 363 N.E.2d 485.

Voluntary arbitration is by mutual and free consent of the parties.

Arbitration Acts. Federal and state laws which provide for submission of disputes to process of arbitration, including labor grievances and disputes of public employees. An example of a federal Act is Title 9, U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. which governs settlement of disputes involved in maritime transactions and commerce under federal statutes. Most states have arbitration acts, many of which are patterned on the Uniform Arbitration Act. The purpose of such acts, in general, is to validate arbitration agreements, make the arbitration process effective, provide necessary safeguards, and provide an efficient procedure when judicial assistance is necessary.

Arbitration and award. An affirmative defense to the effect that the subject matter of the action has been settled by a prior arbitration. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c).

Arbitration board. A panel of arbitrators appointed to hear and decide a dispute according to rules of arbitration. Such services are offered by the American Arbitration Association.

Arbitration clause. A clause inserted in a contract providing for compulsory arbitration in case of dispute as to rights or liabilities under such contract; e.g., disputes arising under union collective bargaining agreement, or disputes between consumer and retailer or manufacturer.

Arbitration of exchange. This takes place where a merchant pays his debts in one country by a bill of exchange upon another. The business of buying and selling exchange (bills of exchange) between two or more countries or markets, and particularly where the profits of such business are to be derived from a calculation of the relative value of exchange in the two countries or markets, and by taking advantage of the fact that the rate of exchange may be higher in the one place than in the other at the same time. See Arbitrage.

Arbitrator. A private, disinterested person, chosen by the parties to a disputed question, for the purpose of hearing their contention, and giving judgment between them; to whose decision (award) the litigants submit themselves either voluntarily, or, in some cases, compulsorily. See Referee; Umpire.

Arbitrium /'arbtriəm/. The decision of an arbiter, or arbitrator; an award; a judgment.
Arbitrium est judicium / arbitrēyam ēst jūwdishyam/. An award is a judgment.

Arbitrium est judicium boni viri, secundum aquam et bonum / arbitrēyam ēst jūwdishyam bōnīy vīrāy, sakāndam ĭykam at bōnām/. An award is the judgment of a good man, according to justice.

Arbor civillis /ārbar sīvalas/. A genealogical tree.

Arbor consangunitalis /ārbar kōnsangwiniytēydās/. A table, formed in the shape of a tree, showing the genealogy of a family; e.g. the arbor civillis of the civilians and canonists.

Arbor flâilis /ārbar fānēylas/. In old English law, a boundary tree; a tree used for making a boundary line.

Arcana imperil /ārkēyna ĭmpirīyā/. State secrets. 1 Bl.Comm. 337.

Arcarius /ārkēriyas/. In civil and old English law, a treasurer; a keeper of public money.

Archlalonomla /ārkeyanōwmiya/. A collection of Saxon laws, published during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in the Saxon language, with a Latin version by Lambard.

Archdeacon's court. In English ecclesiastical law, a court held before a judge appointed by the archdeacon, and called his official. Its jurisdiction comprised the granting of probates and administrations, and ecclesiastical causes in general, arising within the archdeaconry. It was the most inferior court in the whole ecclesiastical polity of England.

Archery. In feudal law, a service of keeping a bow for the lord's use in the defense of his castle.

Arches Court /ārchz kōr/. In English ecclesiastical law, a court of appeal belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the judge of which is called the "Dean of the Archers", because his court was anciently held in the church of Saint Mary-le-Bow (Sancta Maria de Arcubus), so named from the steeple, which is raised upon pillars built archedwise. The court was afterwards held in the hall belonging to the College of Civilians, commonly called "Doctors' Commons". It is now held in Westminster Hall. Its proper jurisdiction is only over the thirteen peculiar parishes belonging to the archbishop in London, but, the office of Dean of the Archers having been for a long time united with that of the archbishop's principal official, the Judge of the Archers, in right of such added office, it receives and determines appeals from the sentences of all inferior ecclesiastical courts within the province. Many original suits are also brought before him from which the inferior judge has waived jurisdiction. From the Court of Archers an appeal lies to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Archetype /ārkatāyp/. The original from which a copy is made.

Archiepallanus /ārkiyēpallēynas/. L. Lat. In old European law, a chief or high chancellor (summus cancellarius).

Architect. One who makes plans and specifications for a building and superintends its construction. Stephens County v. J. N. McCommon, Inc., 122 Tex. 148, 52 S.W.2d 53. Also one who plans and constructs landscape work. State v. McIlhenny, 201 La. 78, 9 So.2d 467, 470.

Architect's lien. A lien on real estate created by statute in favor of the architect who drew the plans and supervised the construction of the real estate for purpose of insuring payment of his fee.

Archives. Place where old books, manuscripts, records, etc. are kept.

Archivist /ārkavist/. Custodian of archives.

Arcilinious /ārśśinīyas/. (Lat. arcifinius or arcifinalis; Fr. arcifinie). Pertaining to landed estates having natural boundaries, such as woods, mountains, or rivers. The owners of such estates, unlike the owners of "agri limitati" (q.v.), have the right of alluvion. Also, having a frontier forming a natural defense.

Arceta et salva custodia /ārktē et sālva kastōwdyia/. Lat. In strict (or close) and safe custody or keeping. When a defendant is arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum (ca.sz.), he is to be kept arcta et salva custodi. 3 Bl.Comm. 415.

Ardent spirits. Synonymous with distilled or spirituous liquors and, sometimes, with intoxicating liquors generally, though the term is properly applied only to liquors obtained by distillation, such as rum, whiskey, brandy, and gin. Sarills v. U. S., 152 U.S. 570, 572, 14 S.Ct. 720, 38 L.Ed. 556.

Ardour /ārdar/. In old English law, an incendiary; a house burner. An arsonist.

Area. A surface, a territory, a region. Fleming v. Farmers Peanut Co., C.C.A.Ga., 128 F.2d 404, 406. Any plane surface, also the inclosed space on which a building stands. A particular extent of space or surface or one serving a special purpose. In the civil law, a vacant space in a city; a place not built upon. For "common area", see Common.

Area bargaining. Negotiation of collective bargaining agreement between a union and more than one employer within a given geographical area.

Area variance. Such variance authorizes deviations from restrictions upon construction and placement of buildings and structures which are employed to serve permitted statutory use. Bienz v. City of Dayton, 29 Or.App. 761, 566 P.2d 904, 919.

A remenaunt /ā râmenantwort/. Forever.

A rendre /ā rōndar/. Fr. To render, to yield. That which is to be rendered, yielded, or paid. Profits à rendre comprehend rents and services.

Arentare /ārântēriy/. Lat. To rent; to let out at a certain rent. Arentatio. A renting.

Areopagit /ārēyô pagaray/. In ancient Greek law, a lawyer or chief judge of the Areopagus in capital matters in Athens; a tribunal so called after a hill or slight eminence, in a street of that city dedicated to Mars, where the court was held in which those judges were wont to sit.
ARERE

Arg. An abbreviation of arguendo.

Argent. In heraldry, silver.

Argentarius /árjantériyas/ (pl., argentarii /árjantériyáyi/). In the Roman law, a money lender or broker; an agent in money; a banker. Argentarium, the instrument of the loan, similar to the modern word "bond" or "note."

Argentarius miles /árjantériyas málylyyz/. A money porter in the English exchequer, who carried the money from the lower to the upper exchequer to be examined and tested.

Argenteus /árjentíyas/. An old French coin, similar to the English shilling.

Argentum /árjéntam/. Silver; money.

Argentum album /árjéntam álbum/. Bullion; uncoined silver; common silver coin; silver coin worn smooth.

Argentum del /árjéntam diýay/. God's money; God's penny; money given as earnest in making a bargain.

Arguendo /árgyuwéndow/. In arguing; in the course of the argument. A statement or observation made by a judge as a matter of argument or hypothetical illustration, is said to be made arguendo, or in the abbreviated form, arg.

Argument. An effort to establish belief by a course of reasoning. In rhetoric and logic, an inference drawn from premises, the truth of which is indisputable, or at least highly probable. See also Oral argument.

Argument by counsel. Remarks addressed by attorney to judge or jury on the merits of case or on points of law. Oral presentation to appellate court in which attorney's brief is argued; generally limited in time, order, and content by court rule (see e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 34). See Opening statement.

Argument to jury. Closing remarks of attorney to jury in which he strives to persuade jury of merits of case; generally limited in time by rules of court. The argument is not evidence. See also Closing argument.

Argumentative. Characterized by argument; controversial; given to debate or dispute. A pleading is so called in which the statement on which the pleader relies is implied instead of being expressed, or where it contains, in addition to proper statements of facts, reasoning or arguments upon those facts and their relation to the matter in dispute, such as should be reserved for presentation at the trial.

Argumentative instruction. A jury instruction which singles out or unduly emphasizes a particular issue, theory, or defense, or one which tends to invade the province of the jury with regard to the weight, probative effect, or sufficiency of the evidence or the inferences to be drawn therefrom.

Argumentative question. A faulty form of examination of witness by propounding a question which suggests answer in a manner favorable to party who advances the question or which contains a statement in place of a question. See Leading question.

Argumentum ab auctoritate est fortissimum in lege /árjyaméntam ab októratóydi äst fortissam in lìyyiy/. An argument from authority is the strongest in the law. "The book cases are the best proof of what the law is."

Argumentum ab impossibili valet in lege /árjyaméntam ab ímpózíbály vélad in lìyyiy/. An argument drawn from an impossibility is forcible in law.

Argumentum ab inconvenienti /árjyaméntam ab íkkanvínlyéntay/. An argument arising from the inconvenience which the proposed construction of the law would create.

Where the constitutionality of a statute is concerned, it is only when the question is close and doubtful that this doctrine will be applied and consideration taken of the consequences of declaring the statute unconstitutional. Calhoun County v. Early County, 205 Ga. 169, 52 S.E.2d 854; Smith v. City Council of Augusta, 203 Ga. 511, 47 S.E.2d 582, 587.

Argumentum ab inconveniendi est validum in lege; quia lex non permettít alliquid inconveniens /árjyaméntam ab íkkanvínlyéntay ést véladám in lìyyiy; kwáya léks non parmaid álakwed íkkanvínlyényz/. An argument drawn from what is inconvenient is good in law. Because the law will not permit any inconvenience.

Argumentum ab inconveniendi plurimum valet [est vallidum] in lege /árjyaméntam ab íkkanvínlyéntay pl(y)yúrem véladam in lìyyiy/. An argument drawn from inconvenience is of the greatest weight [is forcible] in law. If there be in any deed or instrument equivocal expressions, and great inconvenience must necessarily follow from one construction, it is strong to show that such construction is not according to the true intention of the grantor; but where there is no equivocal expression in the instrument, and the words used admit only of one meaning, arguments of inconvenience prove only want of foresight in the grantor.

Argumentum a communiuer accidentibus in jure frequens est /árjyaméntam éy kamyúwNDAR àkkadéntaabas in júryi fríykwenz ést/. An argument drawn from things commonly happening is frequent in law.

Argumentum a divisione est fortissimum in jure /árjyaméntam éy divizhíyówniy ést fortissam in júryi/. An argument from division [of the subject] is of the greatest force in law.

Argumentum a majori ad minus negative non valet; valet e converso /árjyaméntam éy mjórár ëd máyunas negáthyvñ non véld; véld íy konvársw/. An argument from the greater to the less is of no force negatively; affirmatively (or conversely) it is.

Argumentum a similii valet in lege */árgyuvméntám éy simulay vásñad in fiýiy/-. An argument from a like case (from analogy) is good in law.

Aribannum */aerabénam/-. In feudal law, a fine for not setting out to join the army in obedience to the summons of the king.

Arikerban, or arriere-ban) */ásrii)yé bán/-. An edict of the ancient kings of France and Germany, commanding all their vassalls, the noblesse, and the vassalls' vassalls, to enter the army, or forfeit their estates on refusal. See Arrier ban.

Arimanni */áramánay/-. A medieaval term for a class of agricultural owners of small alodial farms, which they cultivated in connection with larger farms belonging to their lords, paying rent and service for the latter, and being under the protection of their superiors. Military tenants holding lands from the emperor.

Arise. To spring up, originate, to come into being or notice; to become operative, sensible, visible, or audible; to present itself. Bergin v. Temple, 111 Mont. 839, 111 P.2d 286, 288, 290.

A case "arises" under the Constitution or a law of the United States, so as to be within the jurisdiction of a federal court, whenever its correct decision depends on the construction of either. Bleece v. Safety Transit Co., C.C.A.S.C., 50 F.2d 852, 854.

A cause of action or suit "arises", so as to start running of limitation, when party has a right to apply to proper tribunal for relief, Washington Security Co. v. State, 9 Wash.2d 197, 114 P.2d 965, 967; and it arises at time when and place where act is unlawfully omitted or committed. State ex rel. Birnamwood Oil Co. v. Shaughnessy, 243 Wis. 306, 10 N.W.2d 292, 295. See limitation (Statute of limitation).

Arising out of and in the course of own employment. Workmen's Compensation Acts provide for compensating an employee whose injury is one "arising out of and in the course of the employment." These words describe an injury directly and naturally resulting in a risk reasonably incident to the employment. Thomas v. Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co., 104 Kan. 432, 179 P. 372, 374; Trudenich v. Marshall, D.C.Wash., 34 F.Supp. 486, 488. They mean that there must be some causal connection between the conditions under which the employee worked and the injury which he received.

The words "arising out of employment" refer to the origin of the cause of the injury, while "course of employment" refers to the time, place, and circumstances under which the injury occurred. An injury arises "out of" employment if it arises out of nature, conditions, obligations and incidents of the employment. Newman v. Bennett, 212 Kan. 562, 512 P.2d 497, 501.

Aristocracy. A government in which a class of men, believed to be superior, rules supreme. A form of government which is lodged in a minority consisting of those believed to be best qualified; a privileged class of the people; nobles, dignitaries, people of wealth and station.

Aristo-democracy. A form of government where the power is divided between the nobles (or the more powerful) and the people.

Arma*/árma/-. Lat. Arms; weapons, offensive and defensive; armor; arms or cognizances of families.

Arma dare*/árma dériy/-. To dub or make a knight.

Arma in armatos sumere jura sinunt*/árma in armédydos s(y)úwmariy júrú sáyman/-. The laws permit the taking up of arms against armed persons.

Arma moluta*/árma mal(y)úwa/-. Sharp weapons that cut, in contradistinction to such as are blunt, which only break or bruise.

Arma reversata*/árma ravárseýda/-. Reversed arms, a punishment for a traitor or felon.

Armat a vis*/armýda vis/-. In the civil law, armed force.

Armed. Furnished or equipped with weapons of offense or defense. People ex rel. Griffin v. Hunt, 150 Misc. 163, 270 N.Y.S. 248, 254.

Armed neutrality. An attitude of neutrality between belligerents which the neutral state is prepared to maintain by armed force if necessary.

Armed peace. A situation in which two or more nations, while actually at peace with each other, are armed for possible or probable hostilities.

Armed robbery. An aggravated form of robbery in which the defendant is armed with a dangerous weapon, though it is not necessary to prove that he used the weapon to effectuate the robbery. The taking of property from person or presence of another by use of force or by threatening use of force while armed with a dangerous weapon. People v. Redding, 43 Ill.App. 1024, 2 Ill.Dec. 784, 357 N.E.2d 1227, 1230.

Armiger*/ármaýjar/-. An armor-bearer; an esquire. A title in old English law of dignity belonging to gentlemen authorized to bear arms. In its earlier meaning, a servant who carried the arms of a knight. A tenant by scutage; a servant or valet; applied, also, to the higher servants in convents.

Arming one's self. Equipping one's self with a weapon or weapons.

Armíscara*/ámaskéra/-. An ancient mode of punishment, which was to carry a saddle at the back as a token of subjection.

Armistice. A suspending or cessation of hostilities between belligerent nations or forces for a considerable time. An armistice differs from a mere "suspension of arms" (q.v.) in that the latter is concluded for very brief periods and for local military purposes only, whereas an armistice not only covers a longer period, but is agreed upon for political purposes. It is said to be general if it relates to the whole area of the war, and partial if it relates to only a portion of that area. Partial armistices are sometimes called truces (q.v.) but there is no hard and fast distinction.

Arm of the sea. A portion of the sea projecting inland, in which the tide ebbs and flows. It is considered as extending as far into the interior of a country as the water of fresh rivers is propelled backwards by the ingress of the tide. See Fauces terrae.

Armorial bearings /ərmɔrɪəl bɛrɪŋ/. In English law, a device depicted on the (now imaginary) shield of one of the nobility, of which gentry is the lowest degree. The criterion of nobility is the bearing of arms, or armorial bearings, received from ancestry.

Armorum appellatione, non solum scuta et gladii et galeæ, sed et fugites et lapides continentur /ərmɔrərm əpələtʃənəli, nɔn sɔlum sk(y)ʊðs ət ɡlədiˈiə, sɛd ət fæstɪɨs ət læpədiəs ˈkɔntənətər/. Under the name of arms are included, not only shields and swords and helmets, but also clubs and stones.

Armory. A building where arms, ammunition, and instruments of war are stored.

Arms. Anything that a man wears for his defense, or takes in his hands as a weapon. See also Bear arms.

Arms, law of. Agreements (as established e.g. by Geneva Convention) which give precepts and rules concerning conditions of war; e.g. treatment of prisoners, wounded, etc.

Arm's length transaction. Said of a transaction negotiated by unrelated parties, each acting in his or her own self interest; the basis for a fair market value determination. Commonly applied in areas of taxation when there are dealings between related corporations, e.g. parent and subsidiary. Inecto, Inc. v. Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 21 F.Supp. 418. The standard under which unrelated parties, each acting in his or her own best interest, would carry out a particular transaction. For example, if a corporation sells property to its sole shareholder for $10,000, in testing whether $10,000 is an "arm's length" price it must be ascertained for how much the corporation could have sold the property to a disinterested third party in a bargained transaction.

Arms, right to. Right guaranteed by Second Amendment, U.S. Constitution; does not however permit a person to carry gun in violation of state or federal gun law. Com. v. Jackson, Mass., 344 N.E.2d 166.

Army. Armed forces of a nation intended for military service on land.

Regular army. The permanent military establishment, which is maintained both in peace and war according to law. Compare Militia.

Around. In the vicinity of; near or close-by.

Arpen, arpent, arpenus. A civil and French measure of land equal to about an acre.

Arpentator /ˈɑrpəntətor/. A measurer or surveyor of land.

Arra /ərə/. In the civil law, earnest; earnest-money; evidence of a completed bargain. Used of a contract of marriage, as well as any other. Spelled, also, Arrha, Arrhae, Arrae. Cf. Arles.

Arraignment /ərəˈɛmrənt/. In old English law, to order; or set in order; to conduct in an orderly manner; to prepare for trial. To arraign an assise was to cause the tenant to be called to make the plaint, and to set the cause in such order as the tenant might be enforced to answer thereunto. See Arraignment.

Arraignment /ərəˈɛmrənt/. Procedure whereby the accused is brought before the court to plead to the criminal charge in the indictment or information. The charge is read to him and he is asked to plead "guilty" or "not guilty" or, where permitted, "nolo contendere." State v. McCotter, 288 N.C. 227, 217 S.E.2d 525, 529.

Arraignment shall be conducted in open court and shall consist of reading the indictment or information to the defendant or stating to him the substance of the charge and calling on him to plead thereto. He shall be given a copy of the indictment or information before he is called upon to plead. Fed.R.Crim.P. 10.

See also Information.

Arraigns, clerk of. In old English law, an assistant to the clerk of assise.

Arrangement with creditors. A plan of a debtor for the settlement, satisfaction, or extension of the time of payment of his debts. Chapter XI of the federal Bankruptcy Act provides for a device whereby, under the protection and supervision of the court, a financially troubled business may work out a composition or extension agreement with its creditors permitting it to stay in business, rather than going bankrupt. Arrangements of individual debtors with their creditors are provided for under Chapter XIII of the Act. See also Composition with creditors; Wage earner's plan.

Array /ərəˈɛ/. The whole body of persons summoned to serve as jurors, from which the final trial jury is selected. Also, the list of jurors impaneled. See Jury panel.

Arrears, arrearages. Money which is overdue and unpaid; e.g. overdue mortgage or rent payments.

Term used to describe cumulative preferred stock dividends that have not been declared on time.

Arrent /ərənt/. In old English law, to let or demise at a fixed rent. Particularly used with reference to the public domain or crown lands; as where a license was granted to inclose land in a forest with a low hedge and a ditch, under a yearly rent, or where an encroachment, originally a purpursuage, was allowed to remain on the fixing and payment of a suitable compensation to the public for its maintenance.

Arrest. To deprive a person of his liberty by legal authority. Taking, under real or assumed authority, custody of another for the purpose of holding or detaining him to answer a criminal charge or civil demand. State v. Ferraro, 81 N.J.Super. 213, 183 A.2d 227; People v. Wipfier, 37 Ill.App.3d 400, 346 N.E.2d 41, 44.

Arrest involves the authority to arrest, the assertion of that authority with the intent to effect an arrest, and the restraint of the person to be arrested. Village of Hoffman Estates v. Union Oil Co. of California, 13 Ill.Dec. 277, 370 N.E.2d 1304, 1308. All that is required for an "arrest" is some act by officer indicating his intention to detain or take person into custody and therby subject that person to the actual control and will of the officer; no formal declaration of arrest is required. Com. v. Brown, 230 Pa.Super. 214, 326 A.2d 906, 907.

See also Booking; Citizen’s arrest; Custodial arrest; False arrest; Lawful arrest; Probable cause; Reasonable grounds; Warrantless arrest.

Citizen’s arrest. See Citizen’s arrest.

Civil arrest. The apprehension of a person by virtue of a lawful authority to answer the demand against him in a civil action. Also includes arrest of a ship or cargo in maritime in rem actions. Fed.R. Civil P., Supp. Adm. R.C (3), D.

Parol arrest. One ordered by a judge or magistrate from the bench, without written complaint or other proceedings, of a person who is present before him, and which is executed on the spot; as in case of breach of the peace in open court.

Privilege from arrest. See Privilege.

Rearrest. Right of officer to without warrant one who has escaped after arrest, or violated parole, or failed to respond to bond for appearance.

Warrantless arrest. Seizure of a person without warrant but based on probable cause that he has committed felony. May also be made for commission of misdemeanor amounting to breach of peace in presence of officer. Wong Sun v. U.S., 371 U.S. 471, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441.

Warrant of arrest. See Warrant.

Arrestandis bonis ne dissipentur /árståndás bónnas níy dospéntar/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a person whose cattle or goods were taken by another, who during a contest was likely to make away with them, and who had not the ability to render satisfaction.

Arrestance ipsum qui pecuniam recept /árståndow ipsis kwáy pakyénviyam rázlypot/. In old English law, a writ which issued for apprehending a person who had taken the ken's prest money to serve in the wars, and then hid himself in order to avoid going.

Arrestatio /árståéysh(ý)ow/. In old English law, an arrest (q.v.).

Arreto facto super bonis mercatorum alienigenorum /xhrístów fékto s(y)wywpar bónnas márktórom ál-yáyjámýnárom/. In old English law, a writ against the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompense of goods taken from a denizen in a foreign country, after denial of restitution. The ancient civilians called it “clariigatio,” but by the moderns it is termed “reprisalía.”

Arrest of inquest. Pleading in arrest of taking the inquest upon a former issue, and showing cause why an inquest should not be taken.

Arrest of judgment. The act of staying a judgment, or refusing to render judgment in an action at law and in criminal cases, after verdict, for some matter intrinsic appearing on the face of the record, which would render the judgment, if given, erroneous or reversible. The court on motion of a defendant shall arrest judgment if the indictment or information does not charge an offense or if the court was without jurisdiction of the offense charged. Fed.R.Crim.P. 34.

Arrest record. Official form completed by police department when a person is arrested. Also, cumulative record of instances in which a person has been arrested, commonly maintained by probation office and useful to judge in setting sentences for second, third, etc. offenders.

Arrest warrant. See Warrant.

Arret /árét/áréy/. Fr. A judgment, sentence, or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. The term is derived from the French law, and is used in Canada and Louisiana.

Saisie arrêt is an attachment of property in the hands of a third person.

Arreted /shrééd/. Convened before a judge and charged with a crime.

Arrhabo /shréybow/. In the civil law, earnest money given to bind a bargain.

Arrhe /áry/. In the civil law, money or other valuable things given by the buyer to the seller, for the purpose of evidencing the contract; earnest money. See Arra; Pot-de-vin.

Arrhe sponsalitie were the earnest or present given by one betrothed to the other at the betrothal.

Arriage and carriage /árjaj an kéráj/. In English and Scotch law, indefinite services formerly demandable from tenants, but prohibited by statute.

Arrier ban /árí(y)ar bén/. In feudal law, a second summons to join the lord, addressed to those who had neglected the first. A summons of the inferiors or vassals of the lord. See Arier ban.

Arriere fief, or fee /árí(y)ar fý(y)l/. In feudal law, a fief or fee dependent on a superior one; an inferior fief granted by a vassal of the king, out of the fief held by him.

Arriere vassal /árí(y)ar vásal/. In feudal law, the vassal of a vassal.

Arrival. To come to, or reach, a particular place. The attainment of an end or state. The act of arriving.

In marine insurance, arrival of a vessel means an arrival for purposes of business, requiring an entry and clearance and stay at the port so long as to require some of the acts connected with business, and not merely touching at a port for advices, or to ascertain the state of the market, or being driven in by an adverse wind and sailing again as soon as it changes. F. S. Royster Guano Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Va., 18 F.2d 469, 470.

Arrogation. In the civil law, the adoption of a person who was of full age or sui juris.

Arse et pensate /árisy ét panséydy/. Burnt and weighed. A term formerly applied to money tested or assayed by fire and by weighing.

Arsenals /áršanalz/. Store-houses for arms; dockyards, magazines, and other military stores.
Arser in le main /arsé y on la maen/. Fr. Burning in the hand. The punishment by burning or branding the left thumb of lay offenders who claimed and were allowed the benefit of clergy; so as to distinguish them in case they made a second claim of clergy.

Arson. At common law, the malicious burning of the house of another. This definition, however, has been broadened by state statutes and criminal codes. For example, the Model Penal Code, § 220.1(1), provides that a person is guilty of arson, a felony of the second degree, if he starts a fire or causes an explosion with the purpose of: (a) destroying a building or occupied structure of another; or (b) destroying or damaging any property, whether his own or another's, to collect insurance for such loss.

In several states, this crime is divided into arson in the first, second, and third degrees, the first degree including the burning of an inhabited dwelling-house in the nighttime; the second degree, the burning (at night) of a building other than a dwelling-house, but so situated with reference to a dwelling-house as to endanger it; the third degree, the burning of any building or structure not the subject of arson in the first or second degree, or the burning of property, his own or another's with intent to defraud or prejudice an insurer thereof.

Arson clause. Clause in insurance policy voiding coverage if fire is set under direction or by insured.

Arsura /ars(y)urə/. The trial of money by heating it after it was coined. The loss of weight occasioned by this process. A pound was said to burn so many pence (tot arderе denarios) as it lost by the fire. The term is now obsolete.

Art. Systematic application of knowledge or skill in effecting a desired result; also an employment, occupation or business requiring such knowledge or skill; a craft; as industrial arts.

In the law of patents, this term means a useful art or manufacture which is beneficial and which is described with exactness in its mode of operation. Such an art can be protected only in the mode and to the extent thus described. It is synonymous with process or method when used to produce a useful result, and may be either a force applied, a mode of application, or the specific treatment of a specific object, and must produce physical effects. Emmett v. Metals Processing Corporation, C.C.A.Ariz., 118 F.2d 796, 798.

In seduction cases, "art" means the skillful and systematic arrangement of means for the attainment of a desired end.

Arteriosclerosis. Abnormal thickening and hardening of the arteries.

Artesian basin. A body of water more or less compact, moving through soils with more or less resistance.

Articles of Incorporation. The basic instrument filed with the appropriate governmental authority (e.g. Sec. of State) on the incorporation of a business; sometimes also called “certificate of incorporation”. The contents thereof are prescribed in the general corporation statutes. In many jurisdictions official forms are also prescribed. In most jurisdictions, corporate existence begins with the filing, usually with the secretary of state, of the articles or certificate of incorporation. In some jurisdictions, duplicate articles of incorporation are filed, and corporate existence begins with the issue of a formal certificate appended thereto called a “certificate of incorporation”. Various conditions precedent to doing business might also be imposed. See Articles of association; Certificate of Incorporation.

Articles of partnership. A written agreement by which the parties enter into a co-partnership upon the terms and conditions therein stipulated.

Articles of the clergy. The title of a statute passed in the ninth year of Edward II for the purpose of adjusting and settling the great questions of cognizance then existing between the ecclesiastical and temporal courts.

Articuli magna charta /ˌɑrtɪkjuˈləl mæˈnɪŋi kɑːrdʒə/. The preliminary articles, forty-nine in number, upon which the Magna Charta was founded.

Articuli super chartas /ˌɑrtɪkjuˈləl s(ɨ)ˈwʊpər kɑːrdəs/. Articles upon the charters. The title of a statute passed in the twenty-eighth year of Edward I, st. 3, confirming or enlarging many particulars in Magna Charta, and the Charter of Foresta, and appointing a method for enforcing the observance of them, and for the punishment of offenders.

Articulo mortis /ˌɑrtɪkjuˈləl mɔːrtɪs/. (Or more commonly in articulo mortis.) At the point of death; in the article of death, which means at the moment of death; in the last struggle or agony.

Artifice /ˈɑrdəfəs/. An ingenious contrivance or device of some kind, and, when used in a bad sense, it corresponds with trick or fraud. It implies craftiness and deceit, and imports some element of moral obliquity. See also Sham.

Artificer /ˌɑrtɪfɪˈsər/. One who buys goods in order to reduce them, by his own art or industry, into other forms, and then to sell them.

One who is actually and personally engaged or employed to do work of a mechanical or physical character, not including one who takes contracts for labor to be performed by others, i.e. a mechanic or workman as contrasted from the employer of such. One who is master of his art, and whose employment consists chiefly in manual labor. A craftsman; an artisan.

Artificial. As opposed to “natural”, means created or produced by man. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 13 Cal.2d 529, 90 P.2d 289. Created by art, or by law; existing only by force of or in contemplation of law. Humanly contrived. A will or contract is described as “artificially” drawn if it is couched in apt and technical phrases and exhibits a scientific arrangement.

Artificial force. In patent law, a natural force so transformed in character or energies by human power as to possess new capabilities of action; this transformation of a natural force into a force practically new involves a true inventive act.

Artificial insemination. Method by which a female is impregnated through injection of semen from a donor other than her husband; and other than through sexual intercourse.

Artificially developed water. Artificially developed water, to which one may acquire right superior to adjudicated rights of earlier appropriators of natural waters of stream into which he turns it, is water produced and contributed by him, which would not have reached stream if left to flow in accordance with natural laws. In re Nix, 96 Colo. 540, 45 P.2d 176, 178.

Artificial persons. Persons created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government, as distinguished from natural persons. Corporations are examples of artificial persons.

Artificial presumptions. Also called “legal presumptions,” those which derive their force and effect from the law, rather than their natural tendency to produce belief. See Presumption.

Artificial succession. The succession between predecessors and successors in a corporation aggregate or sole.

Artificial water course. See Water course.

Artisan. One skilled in some kind of trade, craft, or art requiring manual dexterity; e.g. a carpenter, plumber, tailor, mechanic.

Artisan’s lien. The statutory right of an artisan to keep possession of the object that he has worked on until he has been paid for such labor.

Asportation /əˈspɑrtɪˈeɪʃən/. The removal of things from one place to another. The carrying away of goods; one of the circumstances requisite to constitute the offense of larceny. The distance away which the property must be moved to constitute the crime need not be substantial; a slight distance will do. Smith v. United States, C.A.Nev., 291 F.2d 220. But the entire property must be moved.

Asportation was an essential element of common-law kidnapping.

Asportavit /əˈspɑrtɪvət/. He carried away. Sometimes used as a noun to denote a carrying away. An "asportavit of personal chattels".

ASPR. Armed Services Procurement Regulations.

Assart /əˈsɑrt/. In English law, the offense committed in the forest, by pulling up the trees by the roots that are thickets and coverts for deer, and making the ground plain as arable land. It differs from waste, in that waste is the cutting down of coverts which may grow again, whereas assart is the plucking them up by the roots and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterward grow. This is not an offense if done with license to convert forest into tillage ground.

Assart rents. Rents paid to the Crown for assorted lands.

Assassination /əˈsæsənˈeɪʃən/. Murder committed, usually, though not necessarily, for hire, without direct provocation or cause of resentment given to the murderer by the person upon whom the crime is committed; though an assassination of a public figure might be done by one acting alone for personal, social or political reasons. It is a federal crime, punishable as a homicide, to assassinate the President, President-elect, Vice President, or if there is no Vice President, the officer next in order of succession to the office of President, the Vice-President-elect, or any individual who is acting as President under the Constitution. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2385. In addition, advocating the overthrow of the government by assassination of any officer of such government is a crime under 18 U.S.C.A. § 2385.

Assault. Any willful attempt or threat to inflict injury upon the person of another, when coupled with an apparent present ability so to do, and any intentional display of force such as would give the victim reason to fear or expect immediate bodily harm, constitutes an assault. An assault may be committed without actually touching, or striking, or doing bodily harm, to the person of another. State v. Murphy, 7 Wash. App. 505, 500 P.2d 1276, 1281.

Frequently used to describe illegal force which is technically a battery. For crime of assault victim need not be apprehensive of fear if the outward gesture is menacing and defendant intends to harm, though for tort of assault, element of victim's apprehension is required. Com. v. Slaney, 345 Mass. 135, 185 N.E.2d 919. It is unlawful attempt to commit a battery. People v. Lopez, 271 C.A.2d 754, 77 Cal. Rptr. 59, 63.

In some jurisdictions degrees of the offense are established as first, second and even third degree assault.

See also Aggravated assault; Aggravated battery; Battery; Conditional assault; Felonious assault; Fresh complaint rule; Malicious assault with deadly weapon.

Aggravated assault. One committed with the intention of committing some additional crime; or one attended with circumstances of peculiar outrage or atrocity. This class includes assault with a dangerous or deadly weapon (q.v.).

A person is guilty of aggravated assault if he: (a) attempts to cause serious bodily injury to another, or causes such injury purposely, knowingly or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life; or (b) attempts to cause or purposely or knowingly causes bodily injury to another with a deadly weapon; or (c) attempts by physical menace to put another in fear of imminent serious bodily injury. Model Penal Code, § 211.1.

Simple assault. An assault unaccompanied by any circumstances of aggravation. A person is guilty of simple assault if he (a) attempts to cause or purposely, knowingly or recklessly causes bodily injury to another; or (b) negligently causes bodily injury to another with a deadly weapon; or (c) attempts by physical menace to put another in fear of imminent serious bodily injury. Model Penal Code, § 211.1.

Assault and battery. Any unlawful touching of another which is without justification or excuse. It is both a tort, Trogun v. Fruchtmann, 58 Wis.2d 569, 207 N.W.2d 297, as well as a crime, Scruggs v. State, Ind.App., 317 N.E.2d 807, 809. The two crimes differ from each other in that battery requires physical contact of some sort (bodily injury or offensive touching), whereas assault is committed without physical contact. In most jurisdictions, statutes have created aggravated assaults and batteries, punishable as felonies, and worded in various ways. See Battery.

Assault with dangerous or deadly weapon. An unlawful attempt or offer to do bodily harm without justification or excuse by use of any instrument calculated to do harm or cause death. An aggravated form of assault as distinguished from a simple assault; e.g. pointing loaded gun at one is an assault with dangerous weapon. State v. Gregory, 108 Ariz. 445, 50 P.2d 387, 390.

Assault with intent to commit manslaughter. An unlawful assault committed in such manner as would have resulted in commission of crime of manslaughter if person assaulted had died from effects of assault.

Assault with intent to commit murder. To constitute this assault, specific intent to kill, actuated by malice aforethought, must concur. Perez v. State, 114 Tex. Cr.R. 473, 22 S.W.2d 309, 310.

Assault with intent to commit rape. Crime is constituted by the existence of the facts which bring the offense within the definition of an assault, coupled with an intention to commit the crime of rape. Steptoe v. State, 134 Tex.Cr.R. 320, 115 S.W.2d 916, 917.

Assay /əˈsɛɪ/ /əˈsɛɪ/. The proof or trial, by chemical experiments, of the purity or fineness of metals; particularly of the precious metals, gold and silver. West v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 493, 145 S.W.2d 580, 584. Examination and determination as to characteristics (as weight, measure, or quality).
ASSAYER

Assayer. One whose business it is to make assays of the precious metals. West v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 493, 145 S.W.2d 580, 584.

Assayer of the king. An officer of the royal mint, appointed by St. 2 Hen. VI, c. 12, who received and tested the bullion taken in for coining; also called “assayator regis.”

Assay office. The U.S. Assay Office, under the Bureau of the Mint, is responsible for the process of assaying gold and silver, required by government, incidental to maintaining the coinage.

Assecurare /asɛkˈjʊərɪər/. To assure, or make secure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith.

Assecuration /asɛkˈjʊərəʃən/. In European law, assurance; insurance of a vessel, freight, or cargo.

Assecurator /asɛkˈjʊərətər/. In maritime law, an insurer.

Assembly. The concourse or meeting together of a considerable number of persons at the same place. Also the persons so gathered.

Political assemblies are those required by the constitution and laws: for example, the general assembly.

The lower or more numerous branch of the legislature in many of the states (e.g. N.Y.) is also called the “Assembly” or “House of Assembly.” See also House of Representatives.

Popular assemblies are those where the people meet to deliberate upon their rights; these are guaranteed by the Constitution. See Assembly, right of.

Assemblyman. Member of state Assembly (q.v.).

Assembly, right of. Right guaranteed by First Amendment, U.S. Constitution, allowing people to meet for any purpose connected with government; it encompasses meeting to protest governmental policies and actions and the promotion of ideas. See Unlawful assembly.

Assembly, unlawful. The congregating of people which results in antisocial behavior of the group, e.g. blocking a sidewalk, obstructing traffic, littering streets; but, a law which makes such congregating a crime because people may be annoyed is violative of the right of free assembly. Coates v. City of Cincinnati, 402 U.S. 611, 91 S.Ct. 1686, 29 L.Ed.2d 214. See Unlawful assembly.

Assent. Compliance; approval of something done; a declaration of willingness to do something in compliance with a request; acquiescence; agreement. To approve, ratify and confirm. It implies a conscious approval of facts actually known, as distinguished from mere neglect to ascertain facts. Sometimes it is equivalent to “authorize”. See Approval; Approve; Consent.

Express assent. That which is openly declared.

Implied assent. That which is presumed by law, and proved by conduct of the parties. See Consent (Implied consent).

Mutual assent. The meeting of the minds of both or all the parties to a contract; the fact that each agrees to all the terms and conditions, in the same sense and with the same meaning as the others.

Assent. To state as true; declare; maintain.

Assertery covenant /əsərˈdərɪə kʌvərənt/. One which affirms that a particular state of facts exists; an affirming promise under seal. See Affirmation; Jurat.

Assertery oath /əsərˈdərɪə òðə/. See Oath.

Assess /əsɛs/. To ascertain; fix the value of. To fix the amount of the damages or the value of the thing to be ascertained. To impose a pecuniary payment upon persons or property. To ascertain, adjust, and settle the respective shares to be contributed by several persons toward an object beneficial to them all, in proportion to the benefit received. To tax.

In connection with taxation of property, means to make a valuation and appraisal of property, usually in connection with listing of property liable to taxation, and implies the exercise of discretion on the part of officials charged with duty of assessing, including the listing or inventory of property involved, determination of extent of physical property, and placing of a value thereon. To adjust or fix the proportion of a tax which each person, of several liable to it, has to pay; to apportion a tax among several; to distribute taxation in a proportion founded on the proportion of burden and benefit. To calculate the rate and amount of taxes. To levy a charge on the owner of property for improvements thereto, such as for sewers or sidewalks.

See also Assessment.

Assessable insurance. Insurance policy under which insured is liable for additional premium if losses are unusually large.

Assessable stock. Stock where the stockholder may have to pay more than his original investment if corporate affairs so require.

Assessed. Term is equivalent to “imposed.” To value or appraise. Abrams v. City and County of San Francisco, 48 Cal.App.2d 1, 119 P.2d 197, 199.

Assessed valuation. Value on each unit of which a prescribed amount must be paid as property taxes. The worth or value of property established by taxing authorities on the basis of which the tax rate is applied. Commonly, however, it does not represent the true or market value of the property.

Assessment. In a general sense, the process of ascertaining and adjusting the shares respectively to be contributed by several persons towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received. A valuation or a determination as to value of property. It is often used in connection with assessing property taxes or levying of property taxes. Also the amount assessed. See also Assess; Equalization.
Corporations. Installments of the money subscribed for shares of stock, called for from the subscribers by the directors, from time to time as the company requires money, are called "assessments," or, in England, "calls." While the terms "call" and "assessment" are generally used synonymously, the latter term applies with peculiar aptness to contributions above the par value of stock or the subscription liability of the stockholders; whereas "call" or "installments" means action of the board of directors demanding payment of all or portion of unpaid subscriptions.

Damages. Fixing the amount of damages to which the successful party in a suit is entitled after judgment has been taken; also the name given to the determination of the sum which a corporation proposing to take lands for a public use must pay in satisfaction of the demand proved or the value taken.

Insurance. An apportionment made in general average upon the various articles and interests at risk, according to their value at the time and place of being in safety, for contribution for damage and sacrifices purposely made, and expenses incurred for escape from impending common peril.

A sum specially levied in mutual benefit insurance upon a fixed and definite plan within the limit of the company's or society's fundamental law of organization to pay losses, or losses and expenses incurred, being to a certain degree substantially the equivalent of premiums. The periodical demands made by a mutual insurance company, under its charter and by-laws, upon the makers of premium notes, are also denominated "assessments." Meaning "premiums," Ancient Order of United Workmen of Kansas v. Hobbs, 136 Kan. 708, 18 P.2d 561, 562; and being the consideration for the insurance contracts.

Special assessment. A "special assessment" is in the nature of a tax levied upon property according to benefits conferred on the property. Davies v. City of Lawrence, 218 Kan. 551, 545 P.2d 1115, 1120. A levy upon the owners of property adjacent to a public improvement (e.g. sidewalks) to defray the capital cost thereof. It differs from a tax in that it is levied for a specific purpose and in an amount proportioned to the direct benefit of the property assessed.

Taxation. The listing and valuation of property for the purpose of apportioning a tax upon it, either according to value alone or in proportion to benefit received. Moore v. Johnson Service Co., W.Va., 219 S.E.2d 315, 319. Also determining the share of a tax to be paid by each of many persons; or apportioning the entire tax to be levied among the different taxable persons, establishing the proportion due from each. Northwestern Imp. Co. v. Henneford, 184 Wash. 502, 51 P.2d 1083, 1085. It fixes the liability of the taxpayer and ascertsains the facts and furnishes the data for the proper preparation of the tax rolls. Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank of Dallas v. State, Tex.Civ. App., 118 S.W.2d 941, 942.

The process whereby the Internal Revenue Service imposes an additional tax liability. If, for example, the IRS audits a taxpayer's income tax return and finds gross income understated or deductions overstated, it will assess a deficiency in the amount of the tax that should have been paid in light of the adjustments made.

See also Deficiency assessment; Jeopardy assessment.

Assessment base. Total assessed value of all property in an assessment district.

Assessment company. In life insurance, a company in which a death loss is met by levying an assessment on the surviving members of the association.

Assessment contract. One wherein the payment of the benefit is in any manner or degree dependent on the collection of an assessment levied on persons holding similar contracts. See also Assessment insurance.

Assessment district. In taxation, any subdivision of territory, whether the whole or part of any municipality, in which by law a separate assessment of taxable property is made by the officers elected or appointed therefor.

Assessment for benefits. A burden levied under the power of taxation. Jackson v. City of Lake Worth, 156 Fla. 452, 23 So.2d 526, 528. See Assessment.

Assessment fund. The assessment fund of a mutual benefit association is the balance of the assessments, less expenses, out of which beneficiaries are paid.

Assessment Insurance. Exists when benefit to be paid is dependent upon collection of such assessments as may be necessary for paying the amounts to insured. Keen v. Bankers Mut. Life Co., 230 Mo.App. 1072, 93 S.W.2d 85, 90. Type of mutual insurance where the policyholders are assessed whenever there is a loss.

Assessment list. The list furnished by the assessor to the board of equalization or board of assessment. See Assessment roll.

Assessment ratio. For purposes of taxation of property is the ratio of assessed value to fair market value. Campbell Chain Co. of Cal. v. Alameda County, 12 C.A.3d 248, 90 Cal.Rptr. 501, 504.

Assessment roll. In taxation, the list or roll of taxable persons and property, completed, verified, and deposited by the assessors.

Assessment work. Under the mining laws of the United States, the holder of an unpatented mining claim on the public domain is required, in order to hold his claim, to do labor or make improvements upon it to the extent of at least one hundred dollars in each year. 30 U.S.C.A. § 28. This is commonly called by miners "doing assessment work."

ASSETS

Assets /assets/. Property of all kinds, real and personal, tangible and intangible, including, inter alia, for certain purposes, patents and causes of action which belong to any person including a corporation and the estate of a decedent. The entire property of a person, association, corporation, or estate that is applicable or subject to the payment of his or her or its debts.

See also Dead asset; Marshalling assets.

Accrued assets. Assets arising from revenues earned but not yet due.

Assets entre mains. L. Fr. Assets in hand; assets in the hands of executors or administrators, applicable for the payment of debts.

Assets per descendent. That portion of the ancestor’s estate which descends to the heir, and which is sufficient to charge him, as far as it goes, with the special debts of his ancestors.

Bankruptcy. The property or effects of a bankrupt or insolvent, applicable to the payment of his debts.

Capital assets. For income tax purposes, a capital asset is defined as all property held by a taxpayer (e.g., house, car, stocks, bonds), except for certain assets listed in I.R.C. § 1221. Under the tax laws however, a given asset may be treated as a capital asset for one purpose, and as an ordinary asset for another.

Broadly speaking, all assets are capital except those specifically excluded. Major categories of non-capital assets include: property held for resale in the normal course of business (i.e., inventory), trade accounts and notes receivable, depreciable property and real estate used in a trade or business (i.e. I.R.C. “§ 1231 assets”). I.R.C. § 1221.

Commercial assets. The aggregate of available property, stock in trade, cash, etc., belonging to a merchant or mercantile company.

Current assets. Assets readily convertible into cash, e.g. securities, notes, accounts receivable. See also Quick assets, infra.

Equitable assets. All assets which are chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity, and which do not fall under the description of legal assets. Those portions of the property which by the ordinary rules of law are exempt from debts, but which the testator has voluntarily charged as assets, or which, being non-existent at law, have been created in equity. They are so called because they can be reached only by the aid and instrumentality of a court of equity, and because their distribution is governed by a different rule from that which governs the distribution of legal assets.

Fixed assets. Assets of a permanent or long-term nature used in operation of business and not intended for sale.

Frozen assets. Assets which are difficult to convert into cash (e.g. real estate for which there is no market); also, assets which cannot be used because of legal restriction.

Intangible assets. Assets to which an arbitrary dollar value is attached; e.g. patents, trademarks, goodwill.

Legal assets. See Legal assets.

Liquid assets. See Current assets, supra.

Net assets. Excess of assets over liabilities.

Net operating assets. The excess of cash and other assets which will be converted into cash in near future through normal operation over current liabilities.

Nominal assets. Assets whose value is difficult to determine, e.g. a judgment or claim; also, book value of asset in contrast to actual value.

Personal assets. Chattels, money, and other personal property belonging to a bankrupt, insolvent, or decedent estate, which go to the assignee or executor. See also Personal effects.

Probate assets. Property of a decedent available for the payment of debts and legacies; the estate coming to the heir or personal representative which is chargeable, in law or equity, with the obligations which such heir or representative is required, in his representative capacity, to discharge.

Quick assets. Accounting term used to describe cash and receivables, including notes and sometimes marketable investments, which will be converted into cash as part of normal operations. See also Current assets, supra.

Real assets. Land and real estate.

Wasting assets. Assets exhausted through use or loss of value; e.g. patents, oil wells, coal deposits.

Asseveration /əˈseɪvərɪʃən/. An affirmation; a positive assertion; a solemn declaration. This word is seldom, if ever, used for a declaration made under oath, but denotes a declaration accompanied with solemnity or an appeal to conscience, whereas by an oath one appeals to God as a witness of the truth of what one says.

Assign. To transfer, make over, or set over to another. To appoint, allot, select, or designate for a particular purpose, or duty. To point at, or point out; to set forth, or specify; to mark out or designate; to particularize, as to assign errors on a writ of error; to assign breaches of a covenant. See also Assignment.

Assignability. Quality or legal attribute which permits a thing to be transferred or negotiated.

Assignable. See Assignability.

Assignable lease. A lease which contains a provision permitting its transfer by lessee or one which is silent as to lessee’s right to transfer his interest and hence a lease which may be transferred. Assignment of lease is distinguishable from sublease to extent, inter alia, that in assigning, lessee transfers his entire estate in the demised premises, whereas in sublease the sublessee acquires something less than the lessee’s entire interest. Spears v. Canon de Carnue Land Grant, 80 N.M. 766, 461 P.2d 415, 417.

Assignment house. A bawdy house; a house of prostitution.

Assignatus utitur jure auctoris /əsəɡˈnɛɪdəs ˈjœɪdədər ˈʒɜːri ˈoʊktərəs/. An assignee uses the right of his principal; an assignee is clothed with the rights of his principal.

Assigned account. Pledge of account receivable to bank or factor as security for loan.
Assigned counsel. An attorney appointed by court to represent an indigent person; most commonly in criminal cases. See U.S. Constitution, Sixth Amendment (right to counsel); Fed.R.Crim.P. 44. See also Counsel, right to.

Assigned risk. A risk which is not ordinarily acceptable to insurers but for which coverage is required by state statute and which is, therefore, assigned to insurers participating in an assigned risk pool. See Assigned risk plan.

Assigned risk plan. In those states having compulsory motor vehicle insurance, statutes provide that persons who are unable to buy coverage may secure insurance through a statutory plan under which insurers are compelled to write coverage for such persons. The insurance is handled through a pool of insurers.

Assignee /əˈsɪgnɪ/ /əˈsɪgn/. A person to whom an assignment is made; grantee.

Under U.C.C., assignee is subject to all defenses which may be asserted against assignor by account debtor. U.C.C. § 9-318.

Assignee in fact is one to whom an assignment has been made in fact by the party having the right. Assignee in law is one in whom the law vests the right; as an executor or administrator.

Assignee clause. A provision in Judiciary Act of 1789 preventing one who could not show diversity of citizenship to bring suit in Federal Court from assigning his claim to one who had the required diversity; modified in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1359 to prevent only assignment made collusively to invoke diversity jurisdiction. See Caribbean Mills, Inc. v. Kramer, C.A.5th, 392 F.2d 387.

Assignment. A transfer or making over to another of the whole of any property, real or personal, in possession or in action, or of any estate or right therein. It includes transfers of all kinds of property (Higgins v. Monckton, 28 Cal.App.2d 723, 83 P.2d 516, 519), including negotiable instruments. The transfer by a party of all of its rights to some kind of property, usually intangible property such as rights in a lease, mortgage, agreement of sale or a partnership. Tangible property is more often transferred by possession and by instruments conveying title such as a deed or a bill of sale.

Assignment for benefit of creditors. A general assignment for benefit of creditors is transfer of all or substantially all of debtor’s property to another person in trust to collect any money owing to debtor, to sell property, to distribute the proceeds to his creditors and return the surplus, if any, to debtor. Under Bankruptcy Act of 1898, such assignment was an “act of bankruptcy” if made within 4 months of bankruptcy. Bankruptcy Act (1898) § 3a(4). See also Preferential assignment.

Assignment of account. Transfer to assignee giving him a right to have moneys when collected applied to payment of his debt. Nanny v. H. E. Pogue Distillery Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 817, 133 P.2d 686, 688.

Assignment of counsel. See Assigned counsel; Assistance of counsel; Counsel, right to.

Assignment of dower. The act by which the share of a widow in her deceased husband’s real estate is ascertained and set apart to her.

Assignment of error. See Error.

Assignment of income. A procedure whereby a taxpayer attempts to avoid the recognition of income by assigning the property that generates the income to another. Such a procedure will not avoid the recognition of income by the taxpayer making the assignment if it can be said that the income was earned at the point of the transfer. In this case, usually referred to as an anticipatory assignment of income, the income will be taxed to the person who earns it.

Assignment of wages. Transfer of right to collect wages from wage earner to creditor; generally, statutes govern the extent to which such assignment may be made.

Assignment pro tanto. Where an order is drawn upon a third party and made payable out of a particular fund then due or to become due to the drawer, the delivery of the order to the payee operates as an assignment pro tanto of the fund. Doyle v. East New York Sav. Bank, 44 N.Y.S.2d 318, 323.

Assignment with preferences. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, with directions to the assignee to prefer a specified creditor or class of creditors, by paying their claims in full before the others receive any dividend, or in some other manner. More usually termed a “preferential assignment.” Such assignments may constitute an “act of bankruptcy” (q.v.).

Foreign assignment. An assignment made in a foreign country, or in another state.

General assignment. An assignment made for the benefit of all the assignor’s creditors, instead of a few only; or one which transfers the whole of his estate to the assignee, instead of a part only.

Voluntary assignment. An assignment for the benefit of his creditors made by a debtor voluntarily, as distinguished from a compulsory assignment which takes place by operation of law in proceedings in bankruptcy. Such constitutes an assignment of a debtor’s property in trust to pay his debts generally, in distinction from a transfer of property to a particular creditor in payment of his demand, or to a conveyance by way of collateral security or mortgage.

Assignor /əˈsɪnər/ /əˈsɪnər/. A person who assigns or transfers property to another. See Grantor.

Assigns. Assignees; those to whom property is, will, or may be assigned. Used e.g. in the phrase, in deeds, “heirs, administrators, and assigns to declare the assignable nature of the interest or right created.” It generally comprehends all those who take either immediately or remotely from or under the assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, descent, or act of law.

Assisa /əˈsɪzə/. In old English and Scotch law, an assise; a kind of jury or inquest; a writ; a sitting of a court; an ordinance or statute; a fixed or specific time, number, quantity, quality, price, or weight; a tribute, fine, or tax; a real action; the name of a writ. See Assise.
Assisa armorum /asáyza armóram/. Assise of arms. A statute or ordinance requiring the keeping of arms for the common defense.

Assisa cadere /asáyza kádrarý/. To fail in the assise; i.e., to be nonsuited. 3 Bl.Comm. 402.

Assisa cadit in juratum /asáyza kádrad an járúydam/. The assise falls (turns) into a jury; hence to submit a controversy to trial by jury.

Assisa continuanda /asáyza kántinyuwânda/. An ancient writ addressed to the justices of assise for the continuation of a cause, when certain facts put in issue could not have been proved in time by the party alleging them.

Assisa de Clarendon /asáyza diy klíárandan/. The assise of Clarendon. A statute or ordinance passed in the tenth year of Henry II, by which those that were accused of any heinous crime, and not able to purge themselves, but must abjure the realm, had liberty of forty days to stay and try what succor they could get of their friends towards their sustenance in exile.

Assisa de foresta /asáyza diy forésta/. Assise of the forest; a statute concerning orders to be observed in the royal forests.

Assisa de mensuris /asáyza diy mens(y)úrúras/. Assise of measures. A common rule for weights and measures, established throughout England by Richard I, in the eighth year of his reign.

Assisa de nocemento /asáyza diy nókyaméntow/. An assise of nuisance; a writ to abate or redress a nuisance.

Assisa de utrum /asáyza diy ýuwtram/. An obsolete writ, which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the land and rents of it.

Assisa friscie forte /asáyza frískkiy fórshiyiy/. Assise of fresh force, which see.

Assisa mortis d'ancestoris /asáyza mórðas dën-sestórás/. Assise of mort d'ancestor, which see.

Assisa nove dissesinim /asáyza nóvéviy dišýyaniy/. Assise of novel disseisin, which see.

Assisa panis et cerevisie /asáyza pénaś ét sàrovishiyiy/. Assise of bread and ale, or beer. The name of a statute passed in the fifty-first year of Henry III, containing regulations for the sale of bread and ale; sometimes called the “statute of bread and ale.”

Assisa proroganda /asáyza prówrowgánda/. An obsolete writ, which was directed to the judges assigned to take assises, to stay proceedings, by reason of a party to them being employed in the king’s business.

Assisa ultime presentationis /asáyza āłamíy pré-zántéyshiyóynás/. Assise of darrein presentment (q.v.).

Assisa venalium /asáyza vanéylyiam/. The assise of salable commodities, or of things exposed for sale.

Assise, or assize /asáyzy/. An ancient species of court, consisting of a certain number of men, usually twelve, who were summoned together to try a disputed cause, performing the functions of a jury, except that they gave a verdict from their own investigation and knowledge and not upon evidence adduced. From the fact that they sat together (assideo), they were called the “assise.” A court composed of an assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the baronet or justice, in a certain place, at an appointed time. The verdict or judgment of the jurors or recognizors of assise. 3 Bl.Comm. 57, 59.

In later English law, the name “asseses” or “assesizes” was given to the court, time, or place where the judges of assise and nisi prius, who were sent by special commission from the crown on circuits through the kingdom, proceeded to take indictments, and to try such disputed causes issuing out of the courts at Westminster as were then ready for trial, with the assistance of a jury from the particular county. These judges of assise were the successors of the ancient “justices in eyre.” They sat by virtue of four separate authorities: (1) Commission of Oyer and Terminter, (2) of goal delivery, (3) of nisi prius, and (4) Commission of Peace. In 1971 the Crown Court was established which superseded the criminal jurisdiction of courts of assise and all the jurisdiction of quarter sessions. The assise courts were accordingly abolished.

Anything reduced to a certainify in respect to time, number, quantity, quality, weight, measure, etc.

A species of writ, or real action, said to have been invented by Glanville, chief justice to Henry II, and having for its object to determine the right of possession of lands, and to recover the possession. 3 Bl. Comm. 184, 185.

The whole proceedings in court upon a writ of assise. The verdict or finding of the jury upon such a writ. 3 Bl.Comm. 57.

See also Certificate of assise.

Assise of Clarendon. See Assisa.

Assise of darrein presentment. A writ of assise which formerly lay when a man or his ancestors under whom he claimed presented a clerk to a benefice, who was instituted, and afterwards, upon the next avoidance, a stranger presented a clerk and thereby disturbed the real patron. 3 Bl.Comm. 245. It has given way to the remedy by quare impedit. Assise of fresh force. In old English practice, a writ which lay by the usage and custom of a city or borough, where a man was dispossessed of his lands and tenements in such city or borough. It was called “fresh force,” because it was to be sued within forty days after the party’s title accrued to him.

Assise of mort d’ancestor. A real action which lay to recover land of which a person had been deprived on the death of his ancestor by the abatement or intrusion of a stranger. 3 Bl.Comm. 185. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Assise of Northampton. A re-enactment and enlargement (1176) of the Assise of Clarendon.

Assise of novel disseisin. A writ of assise which lay for the recovery of lands or tenements, where the claimant had been lately disseised.

Assise of nuisance. A writ of assise which lay where a nuisance had been committed to the complainant’s freehold; either for abatement of the nuisance or for damages.
ASSOCIATION

Assise of the forest. A statute touching orders to be observed in the king's forests.

Assise of utrum. A writ of assise which lay for a parson to recover lands which his predecessor had improperly allowed the church to be deprived of. 3 Bl. Comm. 257.

An assise for the trial of the question of whether land is a lay fee, or held in frankalmoigne.

Assise rents. The certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor; so called because they are assised, or made precise and certain.

Grand assize. A peculiar species of trial by jury, introduced in the time of Henry II, giving the tenant or defendant in a writ of right the alternative of a trial by battel, or by his peers. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42, § 13. 3 Bl. Comm. 341. See Battel.

Assiser /asáyar/. An assessor; juror; an officer who has the care and oversight of weights and measures.

Assisors /asázar/. In Scotch law, jurors; the persons who formed that kind of court which in Scotland was called an "assise," for the purpose of inquiring into and judging divers civil causes, such as perambulations, cognitions, molestations, purpurstes, and other matters; like jurors in England.

Assist. To help; aid; succor; lend countenance or encouragement to; participate in as an auxiliary. To contribute effort in the complete accomplishment of an ultimate purpose intended to be effected by those engaged.

Assistance, or (assistants) court of. See Court of assistants.

Assistance of counsel. Sixth Amendment to Federal Constitution, guaranteeing accused in criminal prosecution "assistance of counsel" for his defense, means effective assistance, as distinguished from bad faith, sham, mere pretense or want of opportunity for conferences and preparation. Fed.R.Crim.P. 44; Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9 L.Ed.2d 799; Geders v. U. S., 425 U.S. 80, 96 S.Ct. 1330, 47 L.Ed.2d 592. See Assigned counsel; Counsel, right to.

Assistance, writ of. See Writ of assistance.

Assistant. A deputy, aide, or subordinate; as an assistant assessor. One who stands by and aids or helps another. Ordinarily refers to employee whose duties are to help his superior, to whom he must look for authority to act. State ex rel. Dunn v. Ayers, 112 Mont. 120, 113 P.2d 785, 788.

Assisus /asáyz/. Rented or farmed out for a specified assise; that is, a payment of a certain assessed rent in money or provisions.

Assize /asáyz/. See Assise.

Assizes de Jerusalem /asáyz de járúwzalam/. A code of feudal jurisprudence prepared by an assembly of barons and lords A.D. 1099, after the conquest of Jerusalem. It was compiled principally from the laws and customs of France.

Associate. Signifies confederacy or union for a particular purpose, good or ill. To join together, as e.g. partners. See Association.

Having subordinate status; e.g. associate professor.

An officer in each of the English courts of common law, appointed by the chief judge of the court, and holding his office during good behavior, whose duties were to superintend the entry of causes, to attend the sittings of nisi prius, and there receive and enter verdicts, and to draw up the postea and any orders of nisi prius. The associates were later officers of the Supreme Court of Judicature, and are styled "Masters of the Supreme Court". Duties of associates are now carried out by clerks in the Crown Office and Associates Department of the Central Office of the Supreme Court.

Associate justices. Judges of courts, other than the presiding or chief justice.

Associates in office. Those who are united in action; who have a common purpose; who share the responsibility or authority and among whom is reasonable equality. Those who are authorized by law to perform the duties jointly or as a body.

Association. The act of a number of persons in uniting together for some special purpose or business. It is a term of vague meaning used to indicate a collection or organization of persons who have joined together for a certain or common object. Also, the persons so joining; the state of being associated.

An unincorporated society; a body of persons united and acting together without a charter, but upon the methods and forms used by incorporated bodies for the prosecution of some common enterprise. Clark v. Grand Lodge of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 328 Mo. 1084, 43 S.W.2d 404, 408. It is not a legal entity separate from the persons who compose it. See also Affiliation.

An organization treated as a corporation for Federal tax purposes even though it may not qualify as such under applicable state law. What is designated as a trust or a partnership, for example, may be classified as an association if it clearly possesses corporate attributes. Corporate attributes include: centralized management, continuity of existence, free transferability of interests, and limited liability. I.R.C. § 7701(a)(3).

A "business trust" is an "association" when it has a continuing entity throughout trust period, centralized management, continuity of trust uninterrupted by death among beneficial owners, means for transfer of beneficial interests, and limitation of personal liabilities of participants to property embaked in undertaking. Fletcher v. Clark, D.C.Wyo., 57 F.Supp. 479, 480.

See also Articles of association; Confederacy; Joint stock association; Non-profit association; Professional association; Unincorporated association.

Partnership association. See Partnership.

Professional corporation. See Corporation (Professional corporation).

Unincorporated association. A confederation of individuals organized for a specific purpose which may or may not be profit making but which is not chartered as a corporation.

Association, freedom of. See Assembly, right of.

Association of American Law Schools, The. AALS is literally an association of law schools. After a school has graduated at least three annual classes it is eligible to apply for membership. Compliance with the rules of membership are determined through a three or four person inspection team. Recommendations for admission to membership are made by the Executive Committee, upon advice of the Accreditation Committee. Membership is attained by action of the House of Representatives.

Assoll /asól/. (Spelled also assoile, absoile, assoylyje.) To absolve; acquit; to set free; to deliver from excommunication.

As soon as. This term has a relative meaning according to the thing which is to be done. It may denote merely a reasonable time; or may be equivalent to "whenever", or may mean "immediately".

As soon as may be. Promptly and with due diligence; as soon as was reasonably possible; within a reasonable time; as soon as possible; forthwith; as soon as they conveniently can. George A. Fuller Co. v. Jersey City, 21 N.J.Misc. 38, 29 A.2d 720, 722.

As soon as practicable. Means reasonable time. These words are not synonymous with "as soon as possible"; they mean ordinarily as soon as reasonably can be expected; or "in due time". But the words have also been construed as practically synonymous with speedily.

The words "as soon as practicable" within liability policy requirement the insured will notify the insurer of an occurrence as soon as practicable means within reasonable time in view of all the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Greenway v. Select-

As speedily as possible. Means within reasonable time or without unreasonable delay having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the things to be done. Tatum v. Levi, 117 Cal.App. 83, 3 P.2d 963, 967.

Assume. To pretend. To undertake; engage; promise. To take to or upon one’s self. Also taking up, receiving, adopting, taking to oneself, or to put on deceitfully, take appearance of, affect, or outwardly seem. To take on, become bound as another is bound, or put oneself in place of another as to an obligation or liability. Texas Employers’ Ins. Ass’n v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 129 S.W.2d 746, 749. See also Assumption.

Assumed facts. Facts concerning which no evidence has been introduced at trial and hence no rulings of law or jury instructions are required. In argument, a hypothetical set of facts used to illustrate a point of law.

Assumed name. See Alias.

Assumed risk. See Assumption of risk.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus, neque auxilium /by sámow ramfyd(i)yow ād infiryóräm āekshiyównam nôn habiydargréesas, nékwiw ogzil(i)yam/. From (after) using the highest remedy, there can be no recourse (going back) to an inferior action, nor assistance (derived from it). A maxim in the old law of real actions, when there were grades in the remedies given; the rule being that a party who brought a writ of right, which was the highest writ in the law, could not afterwards resort or descend to an inferior remedy. 3 Bl.Comm. 193, 194.

Assumpsit /asám(p)psat/. Lat. He undertook; he promised.

A promise or engagement by which one person assumes or undertakes to do some act or pay something to another. It may be either oral or in writing, but is not under seal. It is express if the promisor puts his engagement in distinct and definite language; it is implied where the law infers a promise (though no formal one has passed) from the conduct of the party or the circumstances of the case. Dukes v. Rogers, 67 Ga.App. 661, 21 S.E.2d 295, 297.

A common law form of action which lies for the recovery of damages for the non-performance of a parol or simple contract; or a contract that is neither of record nor under seal. A liberal and equitable action, applicable to almost every case where money has been received which in equity and good conscience ought to be refunded; express promise is not necessary to sustain action, but it may be maintained whenever anything is received or done from the circumstances of which the law implies a promise of compensation. The action of assumpsit differs from trespass and trover, which are founded on a tort, not upon a contract; from covenant and debt, which are appropriate where the ground of recovery is a sealed instrument, or special obligation to pay a fixed sum; and from replevin, which seeks the recovery of specific property, if attainable, rather than of damages.

Express assumpsit. See Express assumpsit.

General (common or indebitatus) assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon the promise or contract implied by law in certain cases. It is founded upon what the law terms an implied promise on the part of defendant to pay what, in good conscience, he is bound to pay to plaintiff.

Special assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon an express contract or promise.

Assumpsit for money had and received. Is of equitable character and lies, in general, whenever defendant has received money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay to plaintiff.

Assumpsit on quantum meruit /asám(p)psat ən kwóntam mérwut/. When a person employs another to do work for him, without any agreement as to his compensation, the law implies a promise from the employer to the workman that he will pay him for his services as much as he may deserve or merit. In such case, the plaintiff may suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as he reasonably deserved, and then aver that his trouble was worth such a sum of money, which the defendant has omitted to pay. This is called an "assumpsit on quantum meruit". Travis v. Kennedy, Tex.Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 444, 446. See also Quantum meruit.
Assumption. The act of conceding or taking for granted. Laying claim to or taking possession of.

The act or agreement of assuming or taking upon one's self. The undertaking or adoption of a debt or obligation primarily resting upon another, as where the purchaser of real estate "assumes" a mortgage resting upon it, in which case he adopts the mortgage debt as his own and becomes personally liable for its payment. The difference between the purchaser of land assuming a mortgage on it and simply buying subject to the mortgage, is that in the former case he makes himself personally liable for the payment of the mortgage debt, while in the latter case he does not. When he takes the conveyance subject to the mortgage, he is bound only to the extent of the property. Where one "assumes" a lease, he takes to himself the obligations, contracts, agreements, and benefits to which the other contracting party was entitled under the terms of the lease. See Assumption of mortgage.

Assumption clause. In mortgages, a provision that the mortgage may not be assumed without written consent of mortgagee. See Assumption of mortgage. Also a provision in an instrument of transfer in which the transferee agrees to assume an obligation of the transferor.

Assumption fee. Lender's charge for processing records for new buyer assuming an existing loan (mortgage).

Assumption of care. See Good Samaritan doctrine.

Assumption of mortgage. To take or acquire a mortgage or deed of trust from some prior holder. Thus, a purchaser may assume or take over the mortgage of the seller. Often this requires permission of the mortgagee. This is distinguishable from taking equity of redemption subject to mortgage because in latter case grantee is not contractually bound to pay mortgage, whereas if he assumes the mortgage, he binds himself to mortgagee to pay the mortgage and to fulfill all other terms and conditions of mortgage. See also Assumption.

Assumption of risk. The doctrine of assumption of risk, also known as volenti non fit injuria, means legally that a plaintiff may not recover for an injury to which he assents, i.e., that a person may not recover for an injury received when he voluntarily exposes himself to a known and appreciated danger. The requirements for the defense of volenti non fit injuria are that: (1) the plaintiff has knowledge of facts constituting a dangerous condition, (2) he knows the condition is dangerous, (3) he appreciates the nature or extent of the danger, and (4) he voluntarily exposes himself to the danger. An exception may be applicable even though the above factors have entered into a plaintiff's conduct if his actions come within the rescue or humanitarian doctrine. Clarke v. Brockway Motor Trucks, D.C.Pa., 372 F.Supp. 1342, 1347.

A defense to action of negligence which consists of showing that the plaintiff, knowing the dangers and risk involved, chose to act as he did. An affirmative defense which the defendant in a negligence action must plead and prove. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c). It is not a defense under state workers' compensation laws or in FELA actions. Many states have abolished the defense of assumption of risk in automobile cases with the enactment of no-fault insurance acts or comparative negligence acts.

Assurance. The act or action of assuring; e.g. a pledge, guaranty, or surety. A declaration tending to inspire full confidence.

The deed or instrument by which real property is conveyed; also, the act of conveying such.

Same as "insurance"; term used in Canada and England.

In England, the legal evidences of the transfer of property are called the "common assurances" of the kingdom, whereby every man's estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are either prevented or removed.

Assurance, further, covenant for. See Covenant (Covenant for further assurance).

Assure. To make certain and put beyond doubt. To declare, aver, avouch, assert, or ensure positively. To declare solemnly; to assure to any one with design of inspiring belief or confidence. Used interchangeably with "insure" in insurance law. In real property documents it means a warranty; and in business documents, generally, it means a pledge or security. Utilities Engineering Institute v. Kofod, 185 Misc. 1035, 58 N.Y.S.2d 743, 745.

Assured. A person who has been insured by some insurance company, or underwriter, against losses or perils mentioned in the policy of insurance. Ordinarily synonymous with "insured".

Assured clear distance ahead. Requires driver to keep automobile under such control that he can stop in distance that he can clearly see; the distance varying with circumstances. Lauerman v. Strickler, 141 Pa. Super. 240, 14 A.2d 608, 610; Smiley v. Arrow Spring Bed Co., 138 Ohio St. 81, 33 N.E.2d 3, 5, 6, 7, 9.

Assurer. An insurer against certain perils and dangers; an underwriter; an indemnifier.

Astage /ástipyaléyshan/. A mutual agreement, assent, and consent between parties; also a witness or record.

Astrarius hæres /ástratririas hiriz/. An heir apparent who has been placed, by conveyance, in possession of his ancestor's estate during such ancestor's lifetime.

Astitution /ástat(y)wshan/. An arraignment (q.v.).

Astrarius /ástratririas/. In old English law, a householder; belonging to the house; a person in actual possession of a house.

Astrarius hæres /ástratririas hiriz/. Where the ancestor by conveyance hath set his heir apparent and his family in a house in his lifetime.
Astrer /ástra/. In old English law, a householder, or occupant of a house or hearth.

Astrild. In Saxon law, a penalty for a wrong done by one in the king's peace. The offender was to replace the damage twofold.

Astrum /ástram/. A house, or place of habitation.

Asylum /ášylam/. A sanctuary, or place of refuge and protection, where criminals and debtors found shelter, and from which they could not be taken without sacrilege. Shelter; refuge; protection from the hand of justice. The word includes not only place, but also shelter, security, protection. While a foreign country has the right to offer an asylum to fugitives from other countries, there is no corresponding right on the part of the alien to claim asylum. This right of asylum has been voluntarily limited by most countries by treaties providing for the extradition (q.v.) of fugitive criminals (international extradition).

In time of war, a place of refuge in neutral territory for belligerent warships.

An institution for the protection and relief of unfortunate, as asylums for the poor, or for the insane; though this term is no longer generally used for such institutions.

At. A term of considerable elasticity of meaning, and somewhat indefinite. A function word to describe or indicate presence or occurrence in, on, or near; or to indicate the means, cause, or manner; or to indicate that with which one is occupied or employed. As used to fix a time, it does not necessarily mean eo instante or the identical time named, or even a fixed definite moment. Often expresses simply nearness and proximity, and consequently may denote a reasonable time.

Atamita /átámáta/. In the civil law, a great-great-great-grandfather's sister.

At any time prior to. Synonymous with “not later than”. Hughes v. United States, C.C.A.Tenn., 114 F.2d 285, 287.

At arm's length. Beyond the reach of personal influence or control. Parties are said to deal "at arm's length" when each stands upon the strict letter of his rights, and conducts the business in a formal manner, without trusting to the other's fairness or integrity, and without being subject to the other's control or overmastering influence. See Arm's length transaction.

Atavia /átáviya/. In the civil law, a great-grandmother's grandmother.

Atavunculus /átavúncyulas/. The brother of a great-grandfather's grandmother, or a great-great-grandfather's brother.

Atavus /átavus/. The male ascendant in the fifth degree. The great-grandfather's or great-grandmother's grandfather, a fourth grandfather.

Ataxia. Condition involving impaired coordinative control over the extremities; power present in the extremities, but control is lacking.

At bar. Before the court. "The case at bar," etc.

A tempore cujus contrarii memoria non existet /éy témpra kyúwjas kánteràiyay memória nyon égỳzást/. From a time of which there is no memory to the contrary.

A teneris annis /éy ténaráiy aýná/. By reason of youth.

A terme. For a or the term.

A terme de sa vie. For the term of his life.

A terme que n'est mye encore passe. For a term that has not yet passed.

A terme que passe est. For a term that has passed.

Atia /átía/. (Spelled also Atta, Athe, Atte.) In Saxon law, an oath; the power or privilege of exacting and administering an oath.

Atheist. One who does not believe in the existence of a God.

Atia /éti/ya/. Hatred or ill-will. See De odio et atia.

Atilian law. See Lex atilia.

Atilian law. See Lex atinia.

At issue. Whenever the parties come to a point in the pleadings which is affirmed on one side and denied on the other, they are said to be at an issue.

ATLA. American Trial Lawyers Association.

At large. Not limited to any particular place, district, person, matter, or question; open to discussion or controversy; not precluded. Free; unrestrained; not under corporal control, as a fierce animal so free from restraint as to be liable to do mischief. Fully; in detail; in an extended form. Elected officials chosen by the voters of the State as a whole rather than from separate Congressional or legislative districts.

At law. According to law; by, for, or in law. Particularly in distinction from that which is done in or according to equity; or in titles such as sergeant at law, barrister at law, attorney or counsellor at law.

At least. In deed of trust covenant specifying amount of fire insurance, means at lowest estimate, at smallest concession or claim, in smallest or lowest degree, at smallest number. Browne v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co., 225 Mo.App. 665, 37 S.W.2d 977, 979.

Atmatertera /átmáyertára/. A great-grandfather's grandmother's sister (atavie soror), called by Bracton "atmatertera magna."

At once. In contracts of various kinds the phrase is construed as synonymous with "immediately" and “forthwith,” where the subject-matter is the giving of notice. The use of such term does not ordinarily call for instantaneous action, but rather that notice shall be given within such time as is reasonable in view of the circumstances. Likewise, contracts or statutes requiring the performance of a particular act “at once” are usually held to mean simply within a reasonable time. An order to “ship at once” is synonymous with “as soon as possible”. Myers v. Hardin, 208 Ark. 505, 186 S.W.2d 925, 928.

A tort. Without reason; unjustly; wrongfully.

A tort et a travers. Without consideration or discernment.

A tort ou a droit. Right or wrong.

At par. Said of a bond or preferred stock issued or selling at its face value.

Atpatruus /átprúus/. The brother of a great-grandfather’s grandfather.

Atrociouss assault and battery. An assault by maiming and wounding. Aggravated assault.

Atrocity. A word implying conduct that is outrageously or wantonly wicked, criminal, vile, cruel; extremely horrible and shocking.

Atrophy /átrofí/. Degeneration or wasting away of tissues, organs or parts due to lack of use; disease or interference with nerve supply.

ATS. At suit of.

Attach. Seizure of property under a writ of attachment. See Attachment.

To bind, fasten, tie, or connect, to make fast or join; its antonyms are separate, detach, remove.

Attaché /átshéh/ /atóshéh/. A person attached to an embassy, to the office of an ambassador, or to a foreign legation. One connected with an office, e.g., a public office.

Attached. A term describing the physical union of two otherwise independent structures or objects, or the relation between two parts of a single structure, each having its own function. As applied to buildings, the term is often synonymous with “annexed.” See, also Fixture.

Attached account. Account against which court order has been issued; payments can only be made with consent of court.

Attachmenta /átshëch(ly)aménta/. L. Lat. Attachment.

Attachmenta bonorum /átshëch(ly)aménta bownôram/. A distress formerly taken upon goods and chattels, by the legal attachators or bailiffs, as security to answer an action for personal estate or debt.

Attachmenta de plactius corone /átshëch(ly)aménta diy plásades korówniy/. Attachment of pleas of the crown.

Attachmenta de spínis et boscis /átshëch(ly)aménta diy spáynas ët bóskas/. A privilege granted to the officers of a forest to take to their own use thorns, brush, and windfalls, within their precincts.

Attachmenta /átshëch(ly)améntam/. L. Lat. An attachment.

Attaching creditor. See Creditor.

Attachment. The act or process of taking, apprehending, or seizing persons or property, by virtue of a writ, summons, or other judicial order, and bringing the same into the custody of the court for the purpose of securing satisfaction of the judgment ultimately to be entered in the action. While formerly the main objective of attachment was to coerce the defendant debtor to appear in court by seizor of his property, today the writ of attachment is used primarily to seize the debtor’s property in order to secure the debt or claim of the creditor in the event that a judgment is rendered. The remedy of attachment is governed strictly by state statutes, with such differing considerably as to when attachment is available (the majority of states providing that such is available at or after the commencement of the main action until entry of judgment). Federal courts follow the local rules or statutes relating to attachment. Fed.R.Civ. P. 64.

A remedy ancillary to an action by which plaintiff is enabled to acquire a lien upon property or effects of defendant for satisfaction of judgment which plaintiff may obtain. Lipscomb v. Rankin, C.C.A.Tex., 139 S.W.2d 367, 369.

See also Garnishment; Levy.

Distinguished from execution. See Execution.

Domestic and foreign. In some jurisdictions it is common to give the name “domestic attachment” to one issuing against a resident debtor (upon the special ground of fraud, intention to abscond, etc.), and to designate an attachment against a non-resident, or his property, as “foreign.”

Where the defendant is a non-resident, or beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court, his goods or land within the territory may be seized upon process of attachment; whereby he will be compelled to enter an appearance, or the court acquires jurisdiction so far as to dispose of the property attached. This is sometimes called “foreign attachment.” In such a case, the proceeding becomes in substance one in rem against the attached property.

Persons. A writ issued by a court of record, commanding the sheriff to bring before it a person who has been guilty of contempt of court, either in neglect or abuse of its process or of subordinate powers. A capias (q.v.).

Property. A species of mesne process, by which a writ is issued at the institution or during the progress of an action, commanding the sheriff to seize the property, rights, credits, or effects of the defendant to be held as security for the satisfaction of such judgment as the plaintiff may recover. It is principally used against absconding, concealed, or fraudulent debtors. Mass.R. Civ. P. 4.1.

Attachment bond. A bond used to dissolve an attachment so as to free the property subject to the attachment for sale or other disposition; may be surety.
company bond or personal bond with sureties. Plaintiff then looks to bond for satisfaction of his judgment.

Attachment execution. A name given in some states to a process of garnishment for the satisfaction of a judgment. As to the judgment debtor it is an execution; but as to the garnishee it is an original process—a summons commanding him to appear and show cause, if any he has, why the judgment should not be levied on the goods and effects of the defendant in his hands.

Attachment of privilege. In old English law, a process by which a man, by virtue of his privilege, calls another to litigate in that court to which he himself belongs, and who has the privilege to answer there. A writ issued to apprehend a person in a privileged place.

Attachment of risk. Used to describe point in time, generally when title passes, when risk of loss for destruction of property which is subject of sale passes to buyer from seller. U.C.C. § 2-509.

Attachment of the forest. In old English law, one of the three courts formerly held in forests. The highest court was called “justice in eyre’s seat;” the middle, the “swainmote;” and the lowest, the “attachment.”

Attain. To reach or come to by progression or motion; to arrive at; as, to attain a ripe old age. Watkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 156 Kan. 27, 131 P.2d 722, 723.

Attainder /atéynrd/. At common law, that extinction of civil rights and capacities which took place whenever a person who had committed treason or felony received sentence of death for his crime.

The effect of “attainder” upon such felon was, in general terms, that all his estate, real and personal, was forfeited. At the common law, attainder resulted in three ways, viz.: by confession, by verdict, and by process or outlawry. The first case was where the prisoner pleaded guilty at the bar, or having fled to sanctuary, confessed his guilt and abjured the realm to save his life. The second was where the prisoner pleaded not guilty at the bar, and the jury brought in a verdict against him. The third, when the person accused made his escape and was outlawed.

In England, by statute 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, attainder upon conviction, with consequent corruption of blood, forfeiture, or escheat, was abolished. In the United States, the doctrine of attainder is now scarcely known, although during and shortly after the Revolution acts of attainder were passed by several of the states. The passage of such bills is expressly forbidden by the Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 9).

Bills of attainder. Such special acts of the legislature as inflict capital punishments upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. If an act inflicts a milder degree of punishment than death, it is called a “bill of pains and penalties,” but both are included in the prohibition in the Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 9). Losier v. Sherman, 157 Kan. 153, 138 P.2d 272, 273; State v. Graves, 352 Mo. 1102, 182 S.W.2d 46, 54. See also Bill.

Attaint /atéynt/. Attainted, stained, or blackened.

In old English practice, a writ which lay to inquire whether a jury of twelve men had given a false verdict, in order that the judgment might be reversed. 3 Bl.Comm. 402. This inquiry was made by a grand assise or jury of twenty-four persons, usually knights, and, if they found the verdict a false one, the judgment was that the jurors should become infamous, should forfeit their goods and the profits of their lands, should themselves be imprisoned, and their wives and children thrust out of doors, should have their houses razed, their trees extirpated, and their meadows plowed up, and that the plaintiff should be restored to all that he lost by reason of the unjust verdict. 3 Bl.Comm. 404.

Attaint d’une cause /atéyn d(y)awn ków/. In French law, the gain of a suit.

Attempt. In statutes and in cases other than criminal prosecutions an “attempt” ordinarily means an intent combined with an act falling short of the thing intended. It may be described as an endeavor to do an act, carried beyond mere preparation, but short of execution.

Criminal law. An effort or endeavor to accomplish a crime, amounting to more than mere preparation or planning for it, which, if not prevented, would have resulted in the full consummation of the act attempted, but which, in fact, does not bring to pass the party’s ultimate design. The requisite elements of an “attempt” to commit a crime are: (1) an intent to commit it, (2) an overt act toward its commission, (3) failure of consummation, and (4) the apparent possibility of commission. State v. Stewart, Mo.App., 537 S.W.2d 579, 581.

A person is guilty of an attempt to commit a crime if, acting with the kind of culpability otherwise required for commission of the crime, he: (a) purposely engages in conduct which would constitute the crime if the attendant circumstances were as he believes them to be; or (b) when causing a particular result is an element of the crime, does or omits to do anything with the purpose of causing or with the belief that it will cause such result without further conduct on his part; or (c) purposely does or omits to do anything which, under the circumstances as he believes them to be, is an act or omission constituting a substantial step in a course of conduct planned to culminate in his commission of the crime. Model Penal Code, § 5.01.

Attendant, n. One who owes a duty or service to another, or in some sort depends upon him. One who follows and waits upon another.

Attendant, adj. Accompanying, or connected with.

Attendant circumstances. Facts surrounding an event, such as the time, place and declarations of a testator prior to and immediately following execution of his will.

Attendant terms. In English law, terms (usually mortgages), for a long period of years, which are created or kept outstanding for the purpose of attending or waiting upon and protecting the inheritance. A phrase used in conveyancing to denote estates which are kept alive, after the objects for which they were originally created have ceased, so that they might be deemed merged or satisfied, for the purpose of protecting or strengthening the title of the owner. By the Satisfied Terms Act of 1845, any attendant term becoming satisfied after the Act immediately ceased. But the Act did not apply to leaseholds. That Act was repealed and replaced by Sec. 5 of the Law of Property Act of 1925, which applies to terms created out of leaseholds as well as terms created out of freeholds.

Attestation /'ætstætʃən/. Lat. He attempts.

In the civil and canon law, anything wrongfully innovated or attempted in a suit by an inferior judge (or judge a quo) pending an appeal.

Attention. Consideration with a view to action; notice; attentiveness; the act or state of attending.

Atterrinar /ə'tærmanɪr/-. In old English law, to put off to a succeeding term; to prolong the term of payment of a debt.

Atterrining /ə'tærmanɪŋ/-. In old English law, putting off; the granting of a time or term, as for the payment of a debt.

Attermolement. In canon law, a making terms; a composition, as with creditors.

Attest. To bear witness to; to bear witness to a fact; to affirm to be true or genuine; to act as a witness to; to certify; to certify to the verity of a copy of a public document formally by signature; to make solemn declaration in words or writing to support a fact; to signify by subscription of his name that the signer has witnessed the execution of the particular instrument. Lindsey v. Realty Trust Co., Tex.Civ.App., 75 S.W.2d 322, 324; City Lumber Co. of Bridgeport v. Borsuk, 131 Conn. 640, 41 A.2d 775, 778. Also the technical word by which, in the practice in many of the states, a certifying officer gives assurance of the genuineness and correctness of a copy. Thus, an “attested” copy of a document is one which has been examined and compared with the original, with a certificate or memorandum of its correctness, signed by the person who has examined it. See Affirmation; Jurat; Oath; Verification.

Attestation. The act of witnessing an instrument in writing, at the request of the party making the same, and subscribing it as a witness. The act of witnessing the execution of a paper and subscribing the name of the witness in testimony of such fact. In re Carlson’s Estate, 156 Or. 597, 68 P.2d 119, 121. See Affirmation; Jurat; Oath; Verification.

Attestation clause. That clause (e.g. at the end of a will) wherein the witnesses certify that the instrument has been executed before them, and the manner of the execution of the same. A certificate certifying as to facts and circumstances attending execution of will. In re Bragg’s Estate, 106 Mont. 132, 76 P.2d 57, 62. See Uniform Probate Code, § 2–502.

Attested copy. See Attest.

Attesting witness. One who signs his name to an instrument, at the request of the party or parties, for the purpose of proving and identifying it.

Attestor. One who attests or vouches for.

At the end of the will. The words “at the end of the will” within statute providing that every will shall be subscribed by testator at the end of the will mean the end of the language and not paper on which it is written. In re Hildreth’s Will, 36 N.Y.S.2d 938, 939, 940.

At the market. Order to broker to buy or sell a stock at the current market price, rather than at a specified price.

At time cause of action accrues. Term is sometimes applied to present enforceable demand, but more often simply means to arise or come into existence. Stone v. Phillips, 142 Tex. 216, 176 S.W.2d 932, 933.

Attineta /ətʃɪŋktə/. L. Lat. An attaint, stain, or blackening; a conviction or finding of guilty of some offense.

Attorn /ətɔrn/. To turn over; to transfer to another money or goods; to assign to some particular use or service. To consent to the transfer of a rent or reversion. To agree to become tenant to one as owner or landlord of an estate previously held of another, or to agree to recognize a new owner of a property or estate and promise payment of rent to him.

Attornare /ətɔrnəri/. Lat. To attorn; to transfer or turn over; to appoint an attorney or substitute.

Attornare rem /ətɔrnəri rém/. To turn over money or goods, i.e., to assign or appropriate them to some particular use or service.

Attornato faciendo vel recipiando /ətɔrnətdəw faʃiʃjəndəʊ vəl rasɪpljəndəʊ/. An obsolete writ, which commanded a sheriff or steward of a county court or hundred court to receive and admit an attorney to appear for the person that owed suit of court.

Attornatus /ətɔrnədəs/. One who is attorned, or put in the place of another; a substitute; hence, an attorney.

Attornatus fere in omnibus personam dominii representat /ətɔrnədəs fɜri in ˈɒmnɪbəs pɜrsəʊnəm dəməni ˌrɛprəˈzentət/. An attorney represents the person of his master in almost all respects.

Attorne /ətɔrn/. L. Fr. In old English law, an attorney.

Attorney. In the most general sense this term denotes an agent or substitute, or one who is appointed and authorized to act in the place or stead of another. Nardi v. Poinsatte, D.C.Ind., 46 F.2d 347, 348. An agent, or one acting on behalf of another. Sherts v. Fulton Nat. Bank of Lancaster, 342 Pa. 337, 21 A.2d 18. In its most common usage, however, unless a contrary meaning is clearly intended, this term means "attorney at law", "lawyer" or "counselor at law".

"Attorney" means attorney, professional law association, corporation, or "partnership," authorized under applicable law to practice law. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(3).

The word "attorney" includes a party prosecuting or defending an action in person. New York C.P.L.R. § 105.

See also Attorney for government; Attorney General; Barrister; District (District Attorney); House counsel; Lawyer; Prosecuting attorney; States' Attorney; United States Attorney.

Attorney ad hoc. See Ad hoc.

Attorney at large. In old practice, an attorney who practiced in all the courts.

Attorney at law. Person admitted to practice law in his respective state and authorized to perform both client and criminal legal functions for clients, including drafting of legal documents, giving of legal advice, and representing such before courts, administrative agencies, boards, etc.

In English law, a public officer belonging to the superior courts of common law at Westminster, who conducted legal proceedings on behalf of others, called his clients, by whom he was retained; he answered to the solicitor in the courts of chancery, and the proctor of the admiralty, ecclesiastical, probate, and divorce courts. An attorney was almost invariably also a solicitor. It was provided by the judicature act, 1873, § 87, that solicitors, attorneys, or proctors of, or by law empowered to practice in, any court the jurisdiction of which is by that act transferred to the high court of justice or the court of appeal, shall be called "solicitors of the supreme court."

Attorney fees. See American rule; Fee; Minimum fee schedules; Retainer.

Attorney in fact. A private attorney authorized by another to act in his place and stead, either for some particular purpose, as to do a particular act, or for the transaction of business in general, not of a legal character. This authority is conferred by an instrument in writing, called a "letter of attorney," or more commonly a "power of attorney."

Attorney of record. Attorney whose name must appear somewhere in permanent records or files of case, or on the pleadings or some instrument filed in the case, or on appearance docket. Person whom the client has named as his agent upon whom service of papers may be made. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 21 Cal.2d 580, 134 P.2d 251, 254.

An attorney who has filed a notice of appearance (e.g., through a praecipe) and who hence is formally mentioned in court records as the official attorney of the party. Once an attorney becomes an attorney of record, he often cannot withdraw from the case without court permission.

Every pleading of a party represented by an attorney shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in his individual name, whose address shall be stated. Fed.R. Civil P. 11.

Attorney's license. A formal document issued by a state supreme court, normally after passage of a bar examination, which permits one to practice law in that jurisdiction. Also, a similar document issued by federal courts to attorneys admitted to practice in state courts. Such licenses may be revoked because of disbarment or suspended for attorney misconduct.

Attorney's lien. See Attorney's lien.

Letter of attorney. A power of attorney; a written instrument by which one person constitutes another his true and lawful attorney, in order that the latter may do for the former, and in his place and stead, some lawful act. An instrument of writing, appointing an attorney in fact for an avowed purpose and setting forth his powers and duties. It is, in effect, a mere contract of agency. A general power authorizes the agent to act generally in behalf of the principal. A special power is one limited to particular acts.

Power of attorney. The instrument by which authority of one person to act in place and stead of another as attorney in fact is set forth.

Practice of law. See Practice.

Public attorney. A name sometimes given to an attorney at law, as distinguished from a private attorney, or attorney in fact.

Right to attorney. See Counsel, right to.

Attorney-client privilege. In law of evidence, client's privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications between he and his attorney. That privilege which permits an attorney to refuse to testify as to communications from client to him though it belongs to client, not to attorney, and hence client may waive it. See also Client's privilege.

Attorney for government. Includes the Attorney General, an authorized assistant of the Attorney General, a United States Attorney, an authorized assistant of a United States Attorney, and when applicable to cases arising under the laws of Guam means the Attorney General of Guam or such other person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of Guam to act therein. Fed.R.Crim.P. 54(c).

Attorney General. The Attorney General, as head of the Department of Justice and chief law officer of the Federal Government, represents the United States in legal matters generally and gives advice and opinions to the President and to the heads of the executive departments of the Government when so requested. The Attorney General appears in person to represent the Government in the U.S. Supreme Court in cases of exceptional gravity or importance. See also Solicitor General.

In each state there is also an attorney general, who is the chief law officer of the state. He gives advice and opinions to the governor and to executive and administrative departments or agencies.

In England, the principal law officer of the Crown, and head of the bar of England.

Attorney general’s opinion. An opinion furnished by U.S. Attorney General to President, members of executive department or governmental agencies on request concerning question of law. Also, opinion rendered by state attorney general to Governor or state agencies on request concerning an interpretation of law.

Attorney, right to. See Counsel, right to.

Attorneyship. The office of an agent or attorney.

Attorney’s lien. The right of an attorney at law to hold or retain in his possession the money or property of a client until his proper charges have been adjusted and paid. It requires no equitable proceeding for its establishment. Also a lien on funds in court payable to the client, or on a judgment or decree or award in his favor, recovered through the exertions of the attorney, and for the enforcement of which he must invoke the equitable aid of the court.

Charging lien. An attorney’s lien, for his proper compensation, on the fund or judgment which his client has recovered by means of his professional aid and services. It is a specific lien covering only the services rendered by an attorney in the action in which the judgment was obtained, whereas a retaining lien is a general lien for the balance of the account between the attorney and his client, and applies to the property of the client which may come into the attorney’s possession in the course of his employment.

Retaining lien. The lien which an attorney has upon all his client’s papers, deeds, vouchers, etc., which remain in his possession, entitling him to retain them until satisfaction of his claims for professional services. It is a general lien.

Attornment /atərnmant/. In feudal and old English law, a turning over or transfer by a lord of the services of his tenant to the grantee of his seigniory.

Attornment is the act of a person who holds a leasehold interest in land, or estate for life or years, by which he agrees to become the tenant of a stranger who has acquired the fee in the land, or the remainder or reversion, or the right to the rent or services by which the tenant holds. It is an act by which a tenant acknowledges his obligation to a new landlord.

The agreement of a person to recognize a third party as a permissible successor party to a contract; most often, the agreement of a tenant to pay rent to a new landlord, especially a mortgagee who has foreclosed.

Attractive agencies doctrine. See Attractive nuisance doctrine.

Attractive instrumentalities doctrine. See Attractive nuisance doctrine.

Attractive nuisance doctrine. The doctrine is that person who has an instrumentalities, agency, or condition upon his own premises, or who creates such condition on the premises of another, or in a public place, which may reasonably be apprehended to be a source of danger to children, is under a duty to take such precautions as a reasonably prudent man would take to prevent injury to children of tender years whom he knows to be accustomed to resort there, or who may, by reason of something there which may be expected to attract them, come there to play. See Restatement, Second, Torts § 339.

Attribution. Under certain circumstances, the tax law applies attribution rules to assign to one taxpayer the ownership interest of another taxpayer. If, for example, the stock of X Corporation is held 60% by M and 40% by S, M may be deemed to own 100% of X Corporation if M and S are mother and son. In such a case, the stock owned by S is attributed to M. Stated differently, M has a 60% “direct” and a 40% “indirect” interest in X Corporation. It can also be said that M is the “constructive” owner of S’s interest.

Aubaine /əbwɑːn/. See Droit d’aubaine.

A.U.C. Ab urbe condita. From the founding of the city.

Auction /əˈkʃən/. An auction is a public sale of property to the highest bidder by one licensed and authorized for that purpose. The auctioneer is employed by the seller and is primarily his agent. However, when the property is struck off he is also the agent of the buyer to the extent of binding the parties by his memorandum of sale, thus satisfying the statute of frauds. Hawaii Jewelers Ass’n v. Fine Arts Gallery, Inc., 51 Hawaii 502, 463 P.2d 914, 916.

A sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer so announces by the fall of the hammer or in other customary manner. Such a sale is with reserve unless the goods are in explicit terms put up without reserve. U.C.C. § 2–328.

Dutch auction. A method of sale by auction which consists in the public offer of the property at a price beyond its value, and then gradually lowering the price until some one becomes the purchaser.

Auctionaries /əˈkʃəniəriəs/. Catalogues of goods for public sale or auction.

Auctionarius /əˈkʃənəriəs/. A seller; a regrator; a retailer; one who bought and sold; an auctioneer, in the modern sense. One who buys poor, old, worn-out things to sell again at a greater price.

Auctioneer. A person authorized or licensed by law to sell lands or goods of other persons at public auction. One who sells goods at public auction for another on commission, or for a recompense. Auctioneers differ from brokers, in that the latter may both buy and sell, whereas auctioneers can only sell; also brokers may sell by private contract only, and auctioneers by public auction only.

Auctuor /ɔktʊər/. In the Roman law, an auctioneer. In the civil law, a grantor or vendor of any kind. In old French law, a plaintiff.

Auctories /ɔktɔːriəs/. In the civil law, authority. In old European law, a diploma, or royal charter.

Auctoritates philosophorum, medicorum, et poetrarum, sunt in causis alleganda et tenendi /ɔktɔːratɛdyiζ falosfɔrm mɛdskɔrm et pɔwɛtɛrm sɑ̃t in kɔˈza sɛlɛɡəndi et tɛnɛndi/. The opinions of philosophers, physicians, and poets are to be alleged and received in causes.
Audiencia verborum sunt judice indigna /ôkyûwiya varbóram sánt jûwâdâly indîgna/.

Adjudicating at words is unworthy of a judge. Applied in State v. Fleming, 66 Me. 142, 151.

Audl alteram partem /ôdây âlîraam párdam/.

Hear the other side; hear both sides. No man should be condemned unheard. Lowry v. Inman, 46 N.Y. 119; Shaw v. Stone, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 228.

Audience. In international law, a hearing; interview with the sovereign. The king or other chief executive of a country grants an audience to a foreign minister who comes to him duly accredited; and, after the recall of a minister, an "audience of leave" ordinarily is accorded to him.

Audience court. In English law, a court belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, having jurisdiction of matters of form only, as the confirmation of bishops, and the like. This court has the same authority with the Court of Archers, but is of inferior dignity and antiquity. The Dean of the Arches is the official auditor of the Audience court. The Archbishop of York has also his Audience court. These courts, as separate courts, have long since been disused.

Audiendo et terminando /ôdîyêndow ê tîrmînîndow/.

A writ or commission to certain persons to appease and punish any insurrection or great riot.

Audit /ôdat/.

Inspection and verification by I.R.S. of a taxpayer's return or other transactions possessing tax consequences.

Systematic inspection of accounting records involving analyses, tests, and confirmations.

The hearing and investigation had before an auditor. An audience; a hearing; an examination in general. A formal or official examination and authentication of accounts, with witnesses, vouchers, etc. Green-Boots Const. Co. v. State Highway Commission, 165 Okl. 288, 25 P.2d 783.

See also Auditor; Generally Accepted Auditing Principles.

Correspondence audit. See Correspondence audit.

Desk audit. Review of civil service positions to determine if duties and responsibilities of position fit job classification and pay grade.

Field audit. An audit by the Internal Revenue Service conducted on the business premises of the taxpayer or in the office of the tax practitioner representing the taxpayer. To be distinguished from a correspondence audit or an office audit (q.v.).

Independent audit. One conducted by an outside person or firm not connected in any way with the company being audited.

Internal audit. One conducted by company personnel.

Office audit. See Office (Office audit).

Tax audit. An examination of books, vouchers and records of a taxpayer conducted by agents of the I.R.S. See Correspondence audit; Office (Office audit); RAR.

Audita querela /ôdáyda kwâriyla/.

The name of a common law writ constituting the initial process in an action brought by a judgment defendant to obtain relief against the consequences of the judgment on account of some matter of defense or discharge arising since its rendition and which could not be taken advantage of otherwise. Barnett v. Gillich, 290 Ill. App. 212, 8 N.E.2d 517, 520. May also lie for matters arising before judgment where defendant had no opportunity to raise such matters in defense. Louis E. Bower, Inc. v. Silverstein, 298 Ill.App. 145, 18 N.E.2d 385, 387.

This writ has been abolished in most states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure, being supplanted by motion for relief from judgment. Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b).

Audit committee. A committee of the board of directors of a corporation usually consisting of outside directors who nominate the independent auditors and discuss their work with them. If the auditors believe certain matters should be brought to the attention of stockholders, the auditors first bring these matters to the attention of the audit committee.

Auditor. One who checks the accuracy, fairness, and general acceptability of accounting records and statements and then attests to them; e.g. a Certified Public Accountant.

A State official whose duty is to examine the accounts of state agencies to determine if expenditures were made in accordance with authorizations by the legislature. See also General Accounting Office.

An officer of a business who examines and verifies accounts for accuracy.

An officer (or officers) of the court, assigned to state the items of debit and credit between the parties in a suit where accounts are in question, and exhibit the balance. Under the Rules of Civil Procedure in many states, the term "master" is used to describe those persons formerly known as auditors; e.g. Mass.R. Civil P. 53. See Master; Reference.

Auditor of the impress. Any of several officers in the English exchequer, who formerly had the charge of auditing the accounts of the customs, naval and military expenses, etc., now performed by the commissioners for auditing public accounts.

Auditor of the receipts. An officer of the English exchequer.

Public auditor. Examines account records of private businesses for a fee.

State auditor. See first general definition above.

Augmentation /ôgmanîtêshân/.

The increase of the crown's revenues from the suppression of religious houses and the appropriation of their lands and revenues. Also the name of a court (now abolished) erected 27 Hen. VIII., to determine suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey-lands. The court was dissolved in the reign of Mary, but the office of augmentations remained long after.

A share of the great tithes temporarily granted to the vicars by the appropriators, and made perpetual by statute 29 Car. II. c. 8. The word is used in a similar sense in the Canadian law.
Augmented estate. Estate reduced by funeral and administrative expenses, homestead allowance, family allowances, exemptions, and enforceable claims to which is added value of property transferred to anyone other than bona fide purchaser and value of property owned by surviving spouse at decedent’s death. Uniform Probate Code, § 2-202.

Augusta legibus soluta non est /agusta liyjabas sa(y)yidwa nôn ést/. The empress or queen is not privileged or exempted from subjection to the laws. 1 Bl.Comm. 219.

Aula /ôla/. In old English law, a hall, or court: the court of a baron, or manor; a court baron. This word was employed in mediæval England along with curia; it was used of the meetings of the lord’s men held there in the same way that the word court was used.

Aula ecclesie /ôla aklîziyity/. A nave or body of a church where temporal courts were anciently held.

Aula regis /ôla rîyjas/. (Calleled also Aula Regia.) The king’s hall or palace. The chief court of England in early Norman times. It was established by William the Conqueror in his own hall. It was composed of the great officers of state, resident in the palace, and followed the king’s household in all his expeditions. See, also, Curia regis.

Aulic /ôlak/. Pertaining to a royal court.

Aulnage. See Alnager.

Aulnager. See Alnager.

Aumone, service in. Where lands are given in alms to some church or religious house, upon condition that a service or prayers shall be offered at certain times for the repose of the donor’s soul.

Aunt. The sister of one’s father or mother, and a relation in the third degree, correlative to niece or nephew.

Aures /ôhrîyz/. A Saxon punishment by cutting off the ears, inflicted on those who robbed churches, or were guilty of any other theft.

Aurum regime /ôhrum rajânyiy/. Queen’s gold. A royal revenue belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king.

Australian ballot. An official ballot on which the names of all the candidates are printed. Its use is accompanied by safeguards designed to maintain secrecy in voting. The so-called Australian ballot laws, widely adopted in various forms in the United States, have generally been sustained by the courts.

Auter /ôwtar/, autre /*tra/. L. Fr. Another; other. See Autre.

Authentic /ôôentik/. Genuine; true; real; pure; reliable; trustworthy; having the character and authority of an original; duly vested with all necessary formalities and legally attested. Competent, credible, and reliable as evidence.

Authentic act. In the civil law, an act which has been executed before a notary or public officer authorized to execute such functions, or which is testified by a public seal, or has been rendered public by the authority of a competent magistrate, or which is certified as being a copy of a public register.

Authentication /ôôentkêysihan/. In the law of evidence, the act or mode of giving authority or legal authenticity to a statute, record, or other written instrument, or a certified copy thereof, so as to render it legally admissible in evidence. Verifications of judgments. An attestation made by a proper officer by which he certifies that a record is in due form of law, and that the person who certifies it is the officer appointed so to do. Acts done with a view of causing an instrument to be known and identified. See also Verification.

Authentication of a writing means (a) the introduction of evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that it is the writing that the proponent of the evidence claims it is or (b) the establishment of such facts by any other means provided by law. Calif.Evid.Code.

The requirement of authentication as a condition precedent to admissibility of evidence is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. Fed. Evid.Rule 901.

Self authentication. Statutes frequently provide that certain classes of writings shall be received in evidence “without further proof.” The following fall into this category: (1) deeds, conveyances or other instruments, which have been acknowledged by the signers before a notary public, (2) certified copies of public records, and (3) books of statutes which purport to be printed by public authority. See Fed.Evid. Rule 902.

Authenticum /ôôentkam/. In the civil law, an original instrument or writing; the original of a will or other instrument, as distinguished from a copy.

Author. One who produces, by his own intellectual labor applied to the materials of his composition, an arrangement or compilation new in itself. A beginner or mower of anything; hence efficient cause of a thing; creator; originator; a composer, as distinguished from an editor, translator or compiler.

Authorities. Citations to statutes, precedents, judicial decisions, and text-books of the law, made on the argument of questions of law or the trial of causes before a court, in support of the legal positions contended for, or added to fortify the opinion of a court or of a text writer upon any question. Authorities may be either primary (e.g. statutes, court decisions, regulations), or secondary (e.g. Restatements, treatises).

Authority. Permission. Right to exercise powers; to implement and enforce laws; to exact obedience; to command; to judge. Control over jurisdiction. Often synonymous with power. The power delegated by a principal to his agent. The lawful delegation of power by one person to another. Power of agent to affect legal relations of principal by acts done in accordance with principal’s manifestations of consent to agent. See Restatement, Second, Agency § 7.

Refers to the precedential value to be accorded an opinion of a judicial or administrative body. A court’s opinion is binding authority on other courts directly below it in the judicial hierarchy. Opinions of lower courts or of courts outside the hierarchy are governed by the degree to which it adheres to the document of stare decisis. See Stare decisis.

Legal power; a right to command or to act; the right and power of public officers to require obedien-to their orders lawfully issued in the scope of their public duties.

See also Actual authority; Apparent authority; Binding authority; Commission; Competent authority; Control; Credentials; IMPLIED authority; Power; Precedent; Scope of authority.

Apparent authority. That which, though not actually granted, the principal knowingly permits the agent to exercise, or which he holds him out as possessing.
The power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professionally as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 8. See Authority by estoppel.

Authority by estoppel. Not actual, but apparent only, being imposed on the principal because his conduct has been such as to mislead, so that it would be unjust to let him deny it. See Apparent authority.

Authority coupled with an interest. Authority given to an agent for a valuable consideration, or which forms part of a security.

Express authority. That given explicitly, either in writing or orally. See Express authority.

General authority. That which authorizes the agent to do everything connected with a particular business. It empowers him to bind his principal by all acts within the scope of his employment; and it cannot be limited by any private direction not known to the party dealing with him.

Implied authority. Actual authority circumstantially proved. That which the principal intends his agent to possess, and which is implied from the principal's conduct. It includes only such acts as are incident and necessary to the exercise of the authority expressly granted.

Incidental authority. Such authority as is necessary to carry out authority which is actually or apparently given, e.g. authority to borrow money carries with it as an incidental authority the power to sign commercial paper to effectuate the borrowing.

Inferred authority. See Incidental authority, above.

Inherent authority. Such power as reposes in an agent by virtue of the agency itself.

Limited authority. Such authority as the agent has when he is bound by precise instructions.

Naked authority. That arising where the principal delегates the power to the agent wholly for the benefit of the former.

Ostensible authority. See Apparent authority, supra.
Presumptive authority. See Implied authority, supra.

Special authority. That which is confined to an individual transaction. Such an authority does not bind the principal, unless it is strictly pursued.

Unlimited authority. That possessed by an agent when he is left to pursue his own discretion.

Authorize. To empower; to give a right or authority to act. To endow with authority or effective legal power, warrant, or right. People v. Young, 100 Ill.App.2d 20, 241 N.E.2d 587, 589. To permit a thing to be done in the future. It has a mandatory effect or meaning, implying a direction to act.

"Authorized" is sometimes construed as equivalent to "permitted"; or "directed", or to similar mandatory language. Possessed of authority; that is, possessed of legal or rightful power, the synonym of which is "competency." Doherty v. Kansas City Star Co., 143 Kan. 802, 57 P.2d 43, 45.

Authorized capital. See Authorized issue.

Authorized Issue. Total number of shares of capital stock which charter or articles of incorporation permits corporation to sell.

Autocracy /əʊtəˈkrɔːsi/ . The name of an unlimited mo-narchical government. A government at the will of one man (called an "autocrat"), unchecked by constitutional restrictions or limitations.

Autograph. One's handwriting; written with one's own hand.

Automatism /ˌɔːtəˈmætɪzəm/. Behavior performed in a state of mental unconsciousness or dissociation without full awareness, i.e., somnambulism, fugues.
Term is applied to actions or conduct of an individual apparently occurring without will, purpose, or reasoned intention on his part; a condition sometimes observed in persons who, without being actually insanian; suffer from an obscuration of the mental faculties, loss of volition or of memory, or kindred affections. "Ambulatory automatism" describes the pathological impulse to purposeless and irresponsible wanderings from place to place often characteristic of patients suffering from loss of memory with association of personality. Automatism may be asserted as a criminal defense to negate the requisite mental state of voluntariness for commission of a crime. See e.g. Model Penal Code, § 2.01.

Automobile guest. See Family automobile doctrine;
Family purpose doctrine; Guest; Guest statute.

Automobile insurance. A comprehensive term which embraces insurance coverage for all risks involved in owning and operating an automobile, such as personal injury protection, property damage to another and to the insured, fire, theft and vandalism. See Insurance.

Autonomy. The political independence of a nation; the right (and condition) of power of self-government.
The negation of a state of political influence from without or from foreign powers. Green v. Oberfell, 73 App.D.C. 298, 121 F.2d 46, 57.

Autoptic evidence. An exhibit of a thing offered before jury as evidence to be seen through jury's own eyes. Johnson v. State, 139 Tex.Cr.R. 275, 139
S.W.2d 579, 581. See Autoptic preference; Demostrative evidence.

Autopsy /ˌɔːtəˈspɒɪs/. The dissection of a dead body for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of death.
A post mortem examination to determine the cause, seat, or nature of a disease. Such is normally required by statute for deaths by violent or unnatural means.

Autoptic preference. Proffering or presenting in open court of articles for observation or inspection of the tribunal. See Auto-optic evidence; Demonstrative evidence.

Auto theft. A form of larceny, the subject matter of which is a motor vehicle. The taking and carrying away of a motor vehicle from the owner or possessor with intent to deprive him permanently of it. The intent distinguishes larceny from a lesser offense of use without authority. See also Joy riding.

Autre action pendant /òwróț äksiżyówn póndón/. In common law pleading, another action pending. A species of plea in abatement.

Autre droit /òwróț dr(w)ò/. In right of another, e.g., a trustee holds trust property in right of his cestui que trust. A prochein amy sues in right of an infant. 2 Bl.Comm. 176.

Autrefois /òwrótrfò/. L. Fr. At another time; formerly; before; heretofore.

Autrefois acquit /òwrótrfò akîy/*akwît/. Fr. Formerly acquitted. The name of a plea in bar to a criminal action, stating that the defendant has been once already indicted and tried for the same alleged offense and has been acquitted.

Autrefois attaint /òwrótrfò stêñ/*steynt/. In criminal law, formerly attainted. An old English plea (now obsolete) that the defendant has already been attainted for an felony, and therefore cannot be criminally prosecuted for another.

Autrefois convinct /òwrótrfò konvikt/. Fr. Formerly convicted. A plea by a criminal in bar to an indictment that he has been formerly convicted of the same crime. 4 Bl.Comm. 336.

Autre vie /òwróț viy/. Another's life. A person holding an estate for or during the life of another is called a tenant "pur autre vie," or "pur terme d'autre vie." See Estate pur autre vie.

Aventure, or adventure /a(d)අvɛnchar/. A mischance causing the death of a man, as where a person is suddenly drowned or killed by any accident, without felony.

Aver /avəɾ/, v. In pleading, to declare or assert; to set out distinctly and formally; to allege. See also Averment.

In old pleading, to avouch or verify; to make or prove true; to make good or justify a plea.

Aver /ɛvəɾ/, n. In old English and French, property; substance, estate and particularly live stock or cattle; hence a working beast, a horse or bullock.

Aver corn. A rent reserved to religious houses, to be paid in corn. Corn drawn by the tenant's cattle.

Aver land. In feudal law, land plowed by the tenant for the proper use of the lord of the soil.

Aver penny. Money paid towards the king's averages or carriages, and so to be freed thereof.

Aver silver. A custom or rent formerly so called.

Avera /avɪɾə/. A day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at eight pence.

ordinary usage the term signifies the mean between two or more quantities, measures, or numbers. If applied to something which is incapable of expression in terms of measure or amount, it signifies that the thing or person referred to is of the ordinary or usual type.

In maritime law, loss or damage accidentally happening to a vessel or to its cargo during a voyage. Also a small duty paid to masters of ships, when goods are sent in another man's ship, for their care of the goods, over and above the freight. See subdefinitions below.

In old English law, a service by horse or carriage, anciently due by a tenant to his lord. A labor or service performed with working cattle, horses, or oxen, or with wagons and carriages.

General average. A contribution by the several interests engaged in a maritime venture to make good the loss of one of them for the voluntary sacrifice of a part of the ship or cargo to save the residue of the property and the lives of those on board, or for extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred for the common benefit and safety of all. The law of general average is part of the maritime law, and not of the municipal law, and applies to maritime adventures only. Ralli v. Troop, 157 U.S. 386, 15 S.Ct. 657, 39 L.Ed. 742.

Gross average. More commonly called "general average" (q.v.). Where loss or damage occurs to a vessel or its cargo at sea, average is the adjustment and apportionment of such loss between the owner, the freight, and the cargo, in proportion to their respective interests and losses, in order that one may not suffer the whole loss, but each contribute ratably.

Particular average is a loss happening to the ship, freight, or cargo which is not to be shared by contribution among all those interested, but must be borne by the owner of the subject to which it occurs. It is thus called in contradistinction to general average.

 Petty average denotes such charges and disbursements as, according to occurrences and the custom of every place, the master necessarily furnishes for the benefit of the ship and cargo, either at the place of loading or unloading, or on the voyage; such as the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another, towage, light money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge toll, quarantine and such like.

Simple average is the same as "particular average" (q.v.).

Average clause. A clause providing that similar items in one location or at several locations which are covered by one insurance policy shall each be covered in the proportion that the value in each bears to the value in all.

Average daily balance. Average amount of money that a depositor keeps on deposit in a bank on any given day.

Average man test. Used to determine bias of prospective juror who asserts that he is without prejudice but who is so connected with case that ordinary man under circumstances would be biased without recognition of his prejudice. U. S. v. Haynes, C.A.Conn., 388 F.2d 980, 984.

Averaging up or down. Practice of purchasing the same security at different price levels, thus realizing a higher or lower average cost than the first purchase.

A verbis legis non est recendendum /ey värbiß liyyis nón est raśendendám/. The words of a statute must not be departed from. A court is not at liberty to disregard the letter of a statute, in favor of a supposed intention.

Averīs captīs in withernām /sviriiyas képtas in wiśernām/. In old English pleading, a writ granted to one whose cattle were unlawfully distained by another and driven out of the county in which they were taken, so that they could not be reprieved by the sheriff.

Averment /svärment/. In pleading, to allege or assert positively. All averments in pleadings are required to be simple, concise, and direct. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(e).

In old pleading, an offer to prove a plea, or pleading. The concluding part of a plea, replication, or other pleading, containing new affirmative matter, by which the party offers or declares himself "ready to verify."

Averrare /sværreiy/. In feudal law, a duty required from some customary tenants, to carry goods in a wagon or upon loaded horses.

Aversio /sváz(h)i(y)ow/. In the civil law, an averting or turning away. A term applied to a species of sale in gross or bulk.

Avowal /əvəˈwɔl/. An open declaration. Purpose is to enable the court to know what the witness would have stated in answer to the question propounded, and to inform the court what the interrogator would prove contrary to the testimony given at the trial. See Offer of proof.

Avowant. One who makes an avowry.

Avowry /əvəˈwɔrɪ/. A common law pleading in the action of replevin, by which the defendant avows, that is, acknowledges and justifies the taking of the distress or property complained of, where he took it in his own right, and sets forth the reason of it; as for rent in arrear, damage done, etc.

Avowterer /əvəˈwɔtər/. In English law, an adulterer with whom a married woman continues in adultery.

Avowtry. In old English law, adultery.

Avulsion /əvəlsən/. A sudden and perceptible loss or addition to land by the action of water, or a sudden change in the bed or course of a stream. Valder v. Wallis, 196 Neb. 222, 242 N.W.2d 112, 114. The removal of a considerable quantity of soil from the land of one man, and its deposit upon or annexation to the land of another, suddenly and by the perceptible action of water.

Where running streams are the boundaries between states, the same rule applies as between private proprietors, and, if the stream from any cause, natural or artificial, suddenly leaves its old bed and forms a new one by the process known as “avulsion,” the resulting change of channel works no change of boundary, which remains in the middle of the old channel though no water may be flowing in it and irrespective of subsequent changes in the new channel. State of Arkansas v. State of Tennessee, 246 U.S. 158, 38 S.Ct. 301, 304, 62 L.Ed. 638; Stull v. U. S., C.C.A.Neb., 61 F.2d 826, 830.

To constitute “avulsion,” rather than “accretion,” so as to preclude change in boundary between riparian owners, it is not necessary that soil washed away be identifiable; it being sufficient that change is so sudden that owner of land washed away is able to point out approximately as much land added to opposite site as he had washed away. Goins v. Merriman, 183 Okl. 155, 80 P.2d 268.

See Accretion; Alluvion; Reliction.

Avunculus /əvəŋˈkjələs/. In the civil law, a mother’s brother. 2 Bl.Comm. 230. Avunculus magnus, a great-uncle. Avunculus major, a great-grandmother’s brother. Avunculus maximus, a great-great-grandmother’s brother.

Avus /əˈvəs/eyəvəs/. In the civil law, a grandfather.

Await. Used in old statutes to signify a lying in wait, or waylaying.

Award, v. To grant, concede, or adjudge to. To give or assign by sentence or judicial determination or after careful weighing of evidence. Thus, a jury awards damages; the court awards an injunction; one awards a contract to a bidder. To confer as being deserved or merited.

Award, n. The decision or determination rendered by arbitrators or commissioners, or other private or extrajudicial deciders, upon a controversy submitted to them; also the writing or document embodying such decision. See also Final award; Prize.

Away-going crop. A crop sown before the expiration of a tenancy, which cannot ripen until after its expiration to which, however, the tenant is entitled. Broom, Max. 412; Miller v. Gray, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 265, 267, 268.

A.W.W. Abbreviation for “average weekly wage”. Term used in worker’s compensation computations.

Ayant cause. In French law, and also in Louisiana, this term signifies one to whom a right has been assigned, either by will, gift, sale, exchange, or the like; an assignee. An ayant cause differs from an heir who acquires the right by inheritance.
Baby Act. A plea of infancy, interposed for the purpose of defeating an action upon a contract made while the person was a minor, is vulgarly called "pleading the baby act". By extension, the term is applied to a plea of the statute of limitations.

Bachelor. One who has taken the first undergraduate degree (baccalaureate) in a college or university.

An unmarried man. A kind of inferior knight; an esquire.

Back, v. To indorse; to sign on the back; to sign generally by way of acceptance or approval; to substantiate; to countersign; to assume financial responsibility for. In old English law where a warrant issued in one county was presented to a magistrate of another county and he signed it for the purpose of making it executable in his county, he was said to "back" it.

Back, adv. To the rear; backward; in a reverse direction. Also, in arrear.

Backhaul. In freight transportation, to carry a shipment back over a segment of a route already covered.

Backing. Indorsement.

Back a warrant. See Back.

Back lands. A term of no very definite import, but generally signifying lands lying back from (not contiguous to) a highway or a water course.

Backlog. Accumulation of unfilled orders.

Back pay award. Difference between wages already paid an employee and higher wages granted retroactively. A determination by a judicial or quasi judicial body that an employee is entitled to accrued but uncollected salary or wages. Such may be awarded in employment discrimination cases.

Back-seat driver. A highly nervous passenger whether sitting in rear or by driver, who by unwarranted advice and warnings interferes in careful operation of automobile.

Backside. In English law, a term formerly used in conveyances and also in pleading; it imports a yard at the back part of or behind a house, and belonging thereto.

Backspread. Less than normal price difference in arbitrage.

Back taxes. Those assessed for a previous year or years and remaining due and unpaid from the original tax debtor.

Back to work agreement. Agreement between union and employer covering terms and conditions upon which employees will return to work following settlement of strike.

Backwardation (also called Backadation) /bæk-wardəˈʃən/. In the language of the stock exchange, this term signifies a consideration paid for delay in the delivery of stock contracted for, when the price is lower for time than for cash.

Backwards. In a policy of marine insurance, the phrase "forwards and backwards at sea" means from port to port in the course of the voyage, and not merely from one terminus to the other and back.

Backwater. Water in a stream which, in consequence of some dam or obstruction below, is detained or checked in its course, or flows back.

Bacon-Davis Act. Federal law (1931) granting Secretary of Labor power to set wage rates on public construction work to meet wages in private sector.

Baculus /bæk(y)ələs/. A rod, staff, or wand, used in old English practice in making livery of seiins where no building stood on the land. A stick or wand, by the erection of which on the land involved in a real action the defendant was summonsed to put in his appearance; this was called "baculus nuntiatorius." 3 Bl. Comm. 279.
Baby Act. A plea of infancy, interposed for the purpose of defeating an action upon a contract made while the person was a minor, is vulgarly called “pleading the baby act.” By extension, the term is applied to a plea of the statute of limitations.

Bachelor. One who has taken the first undergraduate degree (baccalaureate) in a college or university.

An unmarried man. A kind of inferior knight; an esquire.

Back, v. To indorse; to sign on the back; to sign generally by way of acceptance or approval; to substantiate; to countersign; to assume financial responsibility for. In old English law where a warrant issued in one county was presented to a magistrate of another county and he signed it for the purpose of making it executory in his county, he was said to “back” it.

Back, adv. To the rear; backward; in a reverse direction. Also, in arrear.

Backadation. See Backwardation.

Backberend (also Backberende) /bækberənd/. Sax. Bearing upon the back or about the person. Applied to a thief taken with the stolen property in his immediate possession. Used with handhabend, having in the hand.

Backbond. A bond of indemnification given to a surety.

Back carry. In forest law, the crime of having, on the back, game unlawfully killed. See Backberend.

Backdating. Predating a document prior to the date it was actually drawn. The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it is backdated. U.C.C. § 3–114.

Backhaul. In freight transportation, to carry a shipment back over a segment of a route already covered.

Backing. Indorsement.

Backing a warrant. See Back.

Back lands. A term of no very definite import, but generally signifying lands lying back from (not contiguous to) a highway or a water course.

Backlog. Accumulation of unfinished orders.

Back pay award. Difference between wages already paid an employee and higher wages granted retroactively. A determination by a judicial or quasi judicial body that an employee is entitled to accrued but uncollected salary or wages. Such may be awarded in employment discrimination cases.

Back-seat driver. A highly nervous passenger whether sitting in rear or by driver, who by unwarranted advice and warnings interferes in careful operation of automobile.

Backside. In English law, a term formerly used in conveyances and also in pleading; it imports a yard at the back part of or behind a house, and belonging thereto.

Backspread. Less than normal price difference in arbitrage.

Back taxes. Those assessed for a previous year or years and remaining due and unpaid from the original tax debtor.

Back to work agreement. Agreement between union and employer covering terms and conditions upon which employees will return to work following settlement of strike.

Backwardation (also called Backadation) /bakwardæʃən/. In the language of the stock exchange, this term signifies a consideration paid for delay in the delivery of stock contracted for, when the price is lower for time than for cash.

Backwards. In a policy of marine insurance, the phrase “forwards and backwards at sea” means from port to port in the course of the voyage, and not merely from one terminus to the other and back.

Backwater. Water in a stream which, in consequence of some dam or obstruction below, is detained or checked in its course, or flows back.

Bacon-Davis Act. Federal law (1931) granting Secretary of Labor power to set wage rates on public construction work to meet wages in private sector.

Baculus /bæk(y)ələs/. A rod, staff, or wand, used in old English practice in making livery of seisin where no building stood on the land. A stick or wand, by the erection of which on the land involved in a real action the defendant was summoned to put in his appearance; this was called “baculus nuntiatorius.” 3 Bl. Comm. 279.
Bad. Vicious, evil, wanting in good qualities; the opposite of good. Defective, faulty, inferior, or imperfect. Kniffley v. Reid, 287 Ky. 212, 152 S.W.2d 615, 616.

Bad character. Absence of moral virtue; the predominance of evil habits in a person. In law of evidence, such character may be shown to affect credibility of witness by introduction of record of convictions for crimes or by reputation. Fed.Evid.R. 608, 609.

Bad check. A check which is dishonored on presentation for payment because of no, or insufficient, funds or closed bank account. Writing or passing of bad checks is a misdemeanor in most states. Model Penal Code § 224.5. See also Check kiting.

Bad debt. A debt which is uncollectible; a permissible deduction for tax purposes in arriving at taxable income. I.R.C. § 166. Different tax treatment is afforded business and non-business bad debts. A business debt is defined by the Internal Revenue Code as a debt created or acquired in connection with a trade or business of the taxpayer, or a debt which becomes worthless in the taxpayer’s trade or business.

A deduction is permitted if a business account receivable subsequently becomes worthless providing the income arising from the debt was previously included in income. The deduction is allowed only in the year of worthlessness. If a reserve method is used, partial or totally worthless accounts are charged to the reserve.

Non-business bad debt. A bad debt loss not incurred in connection with a taxpayer’s trade or business. Such loss is deductible as a short-term capital loss and will only be allowed in the year the debt becomes entirely worthless. In addition to family loans, many investor losses fall into the classification of nonbusiness bad debts. I.R.C. § 166.

Bad debt reserve. An account used in bookkeeping to reflect the true worth of receivables in the balance sheet by predicting those debts which may not be collected and which ultimately will be written off as bad debts and claimed as a deduction for tax purposes. See also Reserve.

Bad faith. The opposite of “good faith,” generally implying or involving actual or constructive fraud, or a design to mislead or deceive another, or a neglect or refusal to fulfill some duty or some contractual obligation, not prompted by an honest mistake as to one’s rights or duties, but by some interested or sinister motive. Term “bad faith” is not simply bad judgment or negligence, but rather it implies the conscious doing of a wrong because of dishonest purpose or moral obliquity; it is different from the negative idea of negligence in that it contemplates a state of mind affirmatively operating with furtive design or ill will. Stath v. Williams, Ind.App., 367 N.E.2d 1120, 1124.

Badge. A mark or cognizance worn to show the relation of the wearer to any person or thing; the token of anything; a distinctive mark of office or service.

Badger. In old English law, one who made a practice of buying corn or victuals in one place, and carrying them to another to sell and make profit by them.

Badges of fraud. A term used relatively to the law of fraudulent conveyances made to hinder and defraud creditors. It is defined as a fact tending to throw suspicion upon a transaction, and calling for an explanation. It is a suspicious circumstance that overhangs a transaction, or appears on the face of the papers. A circumstance which does not alone prove fraud, but which warrants inference of fraud, especially where there is a concurrence of many such badges. Brennecke v. Riemann, Mo., 102 S.W.2d 874, 877. Recognized “badges of fraud” include fictitious consideration, false statements as to consideration, transactions different from usual course of doing business, transfer of all of a debtor’s property, insolvency, confidential relationship of parties, and transfers in anticipation of suit or execution. Hendrix v. Goldman, Mo., 92 S.W.2d 733, 736.

Bad motive. Intentionally doing a wrongful act knowing at the time that it is wrongful. Luhmann v. Schaefer, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 1088, 1090; Davis v. Nash Central Motors, Mo.App., 332 S.W.2d 475, 480.

Bad title. One which conveys no property to the purchaser of the estate. One which is so radically defective that it is not marketable, and hence such that a purchaser cannot be legally compelled to accept it.

Baga /bęga/. In old English law, a bag or purse. Thus there was the petty-bag-office in the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, because all original writs relating to the business of the crown were formerly kept in a little sack or bag, in parvā bagā.

Bagavel. In old English law, the citizens of Exeter had granted to them by charter from Edward I the collection of a certain tribute or toll upon all manner of wares brought to that city to be sold, toward the paving of the streets, repairing of the walls, and maintenance of the city, which was commonly called bagavel, bethugavel and chippingavel.

Bail, v. To procure release of one charged with an offense by insuring his future attendance in court and compelling him to remain within jurisdiction of court. Manning v. State ex rel. Williams, 190 Okl. 65, 120 P.2d 980, 981. To deliver the defendant to persons who, in the manner prescribed by law, become security for his appearance in court. To set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned, on security being taken for his appearance on a day and a place certain, which security is called “bail,” because the party arrested or imprisoned is delivered into the hands of those who bind themselves for his forthcoming. See also Release on own recognizance.

The object of “bail” in civil cases is either directly or indirectly to secure payment of a debt or performance of other civil duties, while in criminal cases object is to secure appearance of principal before the court when his presence is needed. Johnson v. Shaffer, 64 Ohio App. 236, 28 N.E.2d 765, 767. In its more ancient signification, the word includes the delivery of property, real or personal, by one person to another. See also Civil bail.
Bail, n. The surety or sureties who procure the release of a person under arrest, by becoming responsible for his appearance at the time and place designated. Those persons who become sureties for the appearance of the defendant in court.

Bail absolute. Sureties whose liability is conditioned upon the failure of the principal to duly account for money coming to his hands as administrator, guardian, etc.

Bail bond. A written undertaking, executed by the defendant or one or more sureties, that the defendant designated in such instrument will, while at liberty as a result of an order fixing bail and of the execution of a bail bond in satisfaction thereof, appear in a designated criminal action or proceeding when his appearance is required and otherwise render himself amenable to the orders and processes of the court, and that in the event he fails to do so, the signers of the bond will pay to the court the amount of money specified in the order fixing bail. Fed.R.Crim.P. 46; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3141 et seq. See also Personal recognizance.

Cash bail bond. A sum of money, in the amount designated in an order fixing bail, posted by a defendant or by another person on his behalf with a court or other authorized public officer upon condition that such money will be forfeited if the defendant does not comply with the directions of a court requiring his attendance at the criminal action or proceeding involved and does not otherwise render himself amenable to the orders and processes of the court.

Unsecured bail bond. A bail bond for which the defendant is fully liable upon failure to appear in court when ordered to do so or upon breach of a material condition of release, but which is not secured by any deposit of or lien upon property.

Bail common. At common law a fictitious proceeding, intended only to express the appearance of a defendant, in cases where special bail is not required. It is put in in the same form as special bail, but the sureties are merely nominal or imaginary persons, as John Doe and Richard Roe. 3 Bl.Comm. 287.

Bail court. In old English law and practice, an auxiliary court of the court of queen's bench at Westminster, wherein points connected more particularly with pleading and practice are argued and determined. It has been abolished.

Bail dock. Formerly at the Old Bailey, in London, a small room taken from one of the corners of the court, and left open at the top, in which certain malefactors were placed during trial.

Bail in error. That given by a defendant who intends to bring a writ of error on the judgment and desires a stay of execution in the meantime.

Bail piece. A formal entry or memorandum of the recognizance or undertaking of special bail in civil actions, which, after being signed and acknowledged by the bail before the proper officer, is filed in the court in which the action is pending. 3 Bl.Comm. 291.

Bail point scale. System whereby a predetermined number of points are given for all positive aspects of the defendant's background. The total number of points determine whether the defendant will be released on his own recognizance or the amount of bail to be set for his release.

Bail to the action of bail above. See Special bail, infra.

Bail to the sheriff or bail below. Persons who undertake that a defendant arrested upon mesne process in a civil action shall duly appear to answer the plaintiff, such undertaking being in the form of a bond given to the sheriff, termed a "bail bond" (q.v.). 3 Bl.Comm. 290. Sureties who bind themselves to the sheriff to secure the defendant's appearance, or his putting in bail to the action on the return-day of the writ.

Civil bail. See that title.

Common bail. Fictitious sureties formally entered in the proper office of the court. See Bail common, supra.

Special bail. Responsible sureties who undertake as bail above. Persons who undertake jointly and severally in behalf of a defendant arrested on mesne process in a civil action that, if he be condemned in the action, he shall pay the costs and condemnation (that is, the amount which may be recovered against him), or render himself a prisoner, or that they will pay it for him. 3 Bl.Comm. 291. See Bail to the sheriff or bail below, supra.

Straw bail. Nominal or worthless bail. In English law, irresponsible persons, or men of no property, who make a practice of posting bail for any one who will pay them a fee therefor, and who originally, as a mark of their purpose, wore straw in their shoes.

Bailable. Capable of being bailed; admitting of bail; authorizing or requiring bail.

Bailable action. One in which the defendant is entitled to be discharged from arrest only upon giving bond to answer.

Bailable offense. One for which the prisoner may be admitted to bail.

Bailable process. Such as requires the officer to take bail, after arresting the defendant. That under which the sheriff is directed to arrest the defendant and is required by law to discharge him upon his tendering suitable bail as security for his appearance.

Baillee. In the law of contracts, one to whom goods are bailed; the party to whom personal property is delivered under a contract of bailement. A species of agent to whom something movable is committed in trust for another. Smith v. State, 78 Okl.Cr. 343, 148 P.2d 206, 208. Under U.C.C., a person who by warehouse receipt, bill of lading or other document of title acknowledges possession of goods and contracts to deliver them. U.C.C. § 7–102. See Gratuitous baillee.

Baillee for hire. A person to whom possession of personal property is transferred and who is compensated for caring for such property; e.g. a mechanic to whom an automobile is entrusted for repairs is a baillee for hire. See also Bailment (Bailment for mutual benefit).

Baillee policies. Floating insurance policies which cover goods while in possession of baillee without particular description in the policy. Gillespie v. Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., 37 Tenn.App. 476, 265 S.W.2d 21, 27.

Bailee’s lien. Bailee’s right (usually statutory) to retain bailed goods for payment of services.

Bailiff. A court officer or attendant who has charge of a court session in the matter of keeping order, custody of the jury, and custody of prisoners while in the court. One to whom some authority, care, guardianship, or jurisdiction is delivered, committed, or intrusted. One who is deputed or appointed to take charge of another’s affairs; an overseer or superintendent; a keeper, protector, or guardian; a steward.

A person acting in a ministerial capacity who has by delivery the custody and administration of lands or goods for the benefit of the owner or bailor, and is liable to render an account thereof.

Bailiff-errant. A bailiff’s deputy.

Bailiffs of franchises. In old English law, officers who performed the duties of sheriffs within liberties or privileged jurisdictions, in which formerly the king’s writ could not be executed by the sheriff.

Bailiffs of hundreds. In old English law, officers appointed over hundreds, by the sheriffs, to collect fines therein, and summon juries; to attend the judges and justices at the assises and quarter sessions; and also to execute writs and process in the several hundreds. 1 Bl.Comm. 345.

Bailiffs of manors. In old English law, stewards or agents appointed by the lord (generally by an authority under seal) to superintend the manor, collect fines, and quit rents, inspect the buildings, order repairs, cut down trees, impound cattle trespassing, take an account of wastes, spoils, and misdemeanors in the woods and demesne lands, and do other acts for the lord’s interest.

High bailiff. An officer formerly attached to an English county court. His duties were to attend the court when sitting; to serve summonses; and to execute orders, warrants, writs, etc. He also had similar duties under the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the county courts.

Special bailiff. A deputy sheriff, appointed at the request of a party to a suit, for the special purpose of serving or executing some writ or process in such suit.

Bailivia /bêlêviya/. In old law, a bailiff’s jurisdiction, a bailiwick; the same as bailium. See Bailiwick.

In old English law, a liberty, or exclusive jurisdiction, which was exempted from the sheriff of the county, and over which the lord of the liberty appointed a bailiff with such powers within his precinct as an under-sheriff exercised under the sheriff of the county.

Bailiwick /bêlêwik/. A territorial segment over which a bailiff or sheriff has jurisdiction; not unlike a county in today’s governmental divisions.

Bailment. A delivery of goods or personal property, by one person to another, in trust for the execution of a special object upon or in relation to such goods, beneficial either to the bailor or bailee or both, and upon a contract, express or implied, to perform the trust and carry out such object, and thereupon either to redeliver the goods to the bailor or otherwise dispose of the same in conformity with the purpose of the trust.

Delivery of personality for some particular use, or on mere deposit, upon a contract, express or implied, that after purpose has been fulfilled it shall be re-delivered to the person who delivered it, or otherwise dealt with according to his directions, or kept until he reclains it, as the case may be. Simpkins v. Ritter, 189 Neb. 644, 204 N.W.2d 383, 385.

Generally, no fiduciary relationship is created by a bailment and hence it is not accurate to refer to the transfer as “in trust”, because no trustee-beneficiary relationship is created.

See also Pledge.

Actual bailment. One which exists where there is either: (a) an “actual delivery,” consisting in giving to the bailee or his agent the real possession of the chattel, or (b) a “constructive delivery,” consisting of any of those acts which, although not truly comprising real possession of the goods transferred, have been held by legal construction equivalent to acts of real delivery.

Bailment for hire. A contract in which the bailor agrees to compensate the bailee. See also Bailee for hire, supra; Bailment for mutual benefit, below.

Bailment for mutual benefit. One in which the parties contemplate some price or compensation in return for benefits flowing from the bailment, necessarily involving an express or implied agreement or undertaking to that effect. For example, delivery of automobile to one who, for a consideration, undertakes to repair it.

Bailment lease. A legal method by which one desiring to purchase an article but unable to pay therefor at the time, may secure possession thereof with the right to use and enjoy it as long as he pays stipulated rentals and becomes absolute owner after completing such installment payments, on payment of an additional sum which may be nominal. This right or option is common in auto lease agreements.

Constructive bailment. One arising where the person having possession of a chattel holds it under such circumstances that the law imposes upon him the obligation to deliver it to another. Wentworth v. Riggs, 159 App.Div. 899, 143 N.Y.S. 955, 956. See, also, Involuntary bailment, infra.

Gratuitous bailment. Another name for a depositum or naked bailment, which is made only for the benefit of the bailor and is not a source of profit to the bailee.

Involuntary bailment. One arising by the accidental leaving of personal property in the possession of any person without negligence on the part of its owner. See Constructive bailment, above.

Lucrative bailment. One which is undertaken upon a consideration and for which a payment or recompense is to be made to the bailee, or from which he is to derive some advantage. See Bailment for hire, supra.

Bailor. The party who bails or delivers goods to another in the contract of bailment.
BAILOUT

Bailout. Various procedures whereby the owners of an entity can obtain its profits with favorable tax consequences. With corporations, for example, the bailout of corporate profits at capital gain rates might well be the desired objective. The alternative of distributing the profits to the shareholders as dividends generally is less attractive since dividend income is taxed as ordinary income. See Preferred stock (Preferred stock bail-out).

Acquisition of a corporation for the principal purpose of favorable tax consequences by securing benefits of deduction, credit or other allowance which the acquiring corporation would not otherwise enjoy. I.R.C. § 269.

Bailout stock. When preferred stock is issued as a stock dividend and is non-taxable, it is called bailout stock. I.R.C. § 305.

Bait and switch. A deceptive sales practice. Such tactic usually involves advertising a low-priced product to lure customers to a store, then inducing them to buy higher-priced models by failing to stock sufficient quantities of the lower-priced item to satisfy demand, or by disparaging the less-expensive product. Tashof v. F. T. C., 437 F.2d 707, 709.

Balance. An equality between the sums total of the two sides of an account, or the excess on either side. The difference between the sum of debit entries minus the sum of credit entries in an account; if positive, the difference is called a debit balance; if negative, a credit balance.

Often used in the sense of residue or remainder, and, in a general sense, may be defined as what remains or is left over.

See also Average daily balance.

Balance of payments. The difference between all payments made by one nation to all other nations in the world and the payments made to that nation by all other nations.

Balance of power. In international law, a distribution and an opposition of forces, forming one system, so that no nation or country shall be in a position, either alone or united with others, to impose its will on any other nation or country or interfere with its independence. See also Separation of powers.

Balance of trade. Part of the balance of payments. It shows the net figure for the value of all the goods imported and exported by one nation. An excess of imports over exports constitutes a trade deficit.

Balance sheet. A statement of financial position of any economic unit, disclosing as at a given moment of time, its assets, at cost, depreciated cost, or other indicated value, its liabilities, and the equity of the owners in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles. See also Profit and loss statement.

Consolidated balance sheet. Covers combined operations of affiliated companies, divisions, or subsidiaries.

Net balance. In commercial usage, the balance of the proceeds, as from a sale of stock, after deducting the expenses incident to the sale.

Balancing of interests. Constitutional doctrine invoked when court is examining interplay between state action involving intrastate commerce and federal laws regarding interstate commerce. If there is legitimate state interest and if there is no clear congressional intent to preempt the field, state action will be upheld. Southern Pacific Co. v. State of Arizona ex rel., 325 U.S. 761, 65 S.Ct. 1515, 89 L.Ed. 1915.

Balancing test. A constitutional doctrine in which the court weighs the right of an individual to certain rights guaranteed by the Constitution with the rights of a state to protect its citizens from the invasion of their rights; used in cases involving freedom of speech and equal protection.

Balancing the equities. Doctrine commonly invoked in cases involving, for example, encroachment of building on another's land in which court will deny equitable relief to offended party in favor of money damages if the encroachment was made innocently and by mistake (not intentionally) and if encroachment is slight as compared with injury to offending party if he is required to remove. Adamec v. McCray, 63 Wash.2d 217, 386 P.2d 427, 428.

Baliva /bálía/ . (Spelled also Baliva; equivalent to Balivátis, Balivia). L. Lat. In old English law, a bailiwick; the jurisdiction of a sheriff; the whole district within which the trust of the sheriff was to be executed. 3 Bl.Comm. 283.

Balivo amovendo. See Balivo amovendo.

Ballastage. A toll paid for the privilege of taking up ballast from the bottom of a port or harbor. This arises from the property in the soil.

Ballistics /bəlistiks/. The science of gun examination frequently used in criminal cases, especially cases of homicide, to determine the firing capacity of a weapon, its fireability, and whether a given bullet was fired from a particular gun.

Ballium /bəli(ə)m/. A fortress or bulwark; also bail.

Balivo amovendo /bálívově ýumovvě́ndov/. An ancient writ to remove a bailiff from his office for want of sufficient land in the bailiwick.

Balloon mortgage. A mortgage providing for specific payments at stated regular intervals, with the final payment considerably more than any of the periodic payments.

Balloon note. A form of promissory note which commonly calls for minimum payments of principal, if any, and the payment of interest at regular intervals, but which requires a substantial payment of principal at the end of the term; the final payment frequently representing essentially all the principal.

Balloon payment. The final payment of principal under a balloon note; commonly represents essentially the entire principal. See Balloon mortgage. Balloon note.

Ballot. Derived from ballotta, a round bullet, used for casting a vote. Process or means of voting, usually in secret, by written or printed tickets or slips of paper, or voting machine. Piece of paper or levers on voting machine on which the voter gives expression to his choice. Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont.
Banc /bàŋk/.. Bench; the place where a court permanently or regularly sits; the seat of judgment as, banc le roy, the king's bench; banc le common pleas, the bench of common pleas.

The full bench, full court. A "sitting en banc" is a meeting of all the judges of a court as distinguished from the sitting of a single judge or panel of judges.

Banci narratores /bàŋsäy nàrätôrëys/. In old English law, advocates; counters; serjeants. Applied to advocates in the common pleas courts. 1 Bl.Comm. 211.

Banco /bàŋkôv/. Ital. A seat or bench of justice also, in commerce, a word of Italian origin signifying a bank. Also a small tract of land on opposite side river from country to which it belongs, and so existing by virtue of an avulsive change in the river. Lorenzo Title & Improvement Co. v. City Mortg Co., Tex.Civ.App., 48 S.W.2d 310, 314. See, a Bancus.

Bancus /bàŋkas/. A high seat, or seat of distinction; a seat of judgment, or tribunal for the administration of justice. Often used for the court itself; thus, the English court of common pleas was formerly called Bancus.

Bancus regine /bàŋkas râjâmîy/. The queen's bench. See Queen's bench.

Bancus regis /bàŋkas rîyjas/. The king's bench; the supreme tribunal of the king after parliament. 3 Bl.Comm. 41.

Bancus superior /bàŋkas sapirîyâ/. The upper bench. The king's bench was so called during the Protectorate.

Bandit. An outlaw; a man banned, or put under a ban; a brigand or robber. Banditti, a band of robbers.

Banditry. Organized robbery; brigandage; form of crime practiced by outlaws and plunderers.

Bane. A malefactor. Also a public denunciation of a malefactor; the same with what was called "hutesium," hue and cry.

Baneret, or banneret /bànenät/. In old English law, a knight made in the field, by the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it, as it were, a banner. Knights so made were accounted so honorable that they were allowed to display their arms in the royal army, as barons did, and could bear arms with supporters. They were sometimes called "vexillarii."

A degree of honor next after a baron's. When conferred by the king; otherwise, it ranks after a baronet. 1 Bl.Comm. 403.

Ban /bêñyäv/. Deodands (q.v.).

Banishment. A punishment inflicted upon criminals, by compelling them to leave a country for a specified period of time, or for life. Synonymous with exile or deportation, importing a compulsory loss of one's country. See also Deportation.

Bank. A bank is an institution, usually incorporated, whose business it is to receive money on deposit, cash checks or drafts, discount commercial paper, make loans, and issue promissory notes payable to... bearer, known as bank notes. U.C.C. § 1–201(4). American commercial banks fall into two main categories: state chartered banks and federally chartered national banks. See also Banking.

A bench or seat; the bench of justice; the bench or tribunal occupied by the judges; the seat of judgment; a court. The full bench, or full court, the assembly of all the judges of a court. See Banc.

An acclivity; an elevation or mound of earth, especially that which borders the sides of a water course. The land adjacent to a river. That part of a stream which retains the water. The elevation of land which confines the waters of a stream in their natural channel when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks. A water-washed and relatively permanent elevation or acclivity at the outer line of a river bed which separates the bed from the adjacent upland, and serves to confine the waters within the bed and to preserve the course of the river. The land lying between the edge of the water of a stream at its ordinary low stage and the line which the edge of the water reaches in its ordinary high stage. An elevation of land which confines the waters of a stream when they rise out of the bed. Neither the line of ordinary high-water mark, nor of ordinary low-water mark, nor of a middle stage of water can be assumed as the line dividing the bed from the banks. Banks are fast land, on which vegetation appropriate to such land in the particular locality grows wherever the bank is not too steep to permit such growth, and bed is soil of a different character, and having no vegetation, or only such as exists, when commonly submerged in water. On the borders of navigable streams, where there are levees established according to law, the levees form the "banks of the river."

Advising bank. A bank which gives notification of the issuance of a credit by another bank. U.C.C. § 5–103(e).

Bank acceptance. Draft drawn on and accepted by bank.

Bank-account. A sum of money placed with a bank or banker, on deposit, by a customer, and subject to be drawn out on the latter's check. The statement or computation of the several sums deposited and those drawn out by the customer on checks, entered on the books of the bank and the depositor's passbook. Any account with a bank, including a checking, time, interest or savings account. U.C.C. § 4–104(a). See also Joint bank account.

Commercial bank. See Commercial bank.

Confirming bank. A bank which engages either that it will itself honor a credit already issued by another bank or that such a credit will be honored by the issuer or a third bank. U.C.C. § 5–103(f). See also Confirming bank.

Correspondent bank. Bank which acts as agent for another bank, or engages in an exchange of services with that bank, in a geographical area to which the other does not have direct access.

Custodian bank. Any bank or trust company which is supervised and examined by state or federal authority having supervision over banks and which is acting as custodian for a clearing corporation. U.C.C. § 8–102(4).
Depository bank. The first bank to which an item is transferred for collection even though it is also the payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(a).

Export-import bank. See Export-Import Bank.

Federal land bank. See Federal Land Banks.

Federal reserve bank. See Federal Reserve System.

Intermediary bank. Any bank to which an item is transferred in course of collection except the depositary or payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(c). See also Intermediary bank.

Land bank. See Land bank.

Member bank. See Member bank.

Mutual savings bank. See Mutual savings bank.

National bank. See National bank.

Payor bank. A bank by which an item is payable as drawn or accepted. U.C.C. § 4-105(b).

Presenting bank. Any bank presenting an item except a payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(e).

Remitting bank. Any payor or intermediary bank remitting for an item. U.C.C. § 4-105(f).

Savings and loan bank. See Mutual savings bank; Savings and loan association.

Savings bank. Type of bank that receives deposits, and pays interest thereon, and makes certain types of loans (e.g. home financing loans), but does not provide checking services. See Mutual savings bank; Savings and loan association. Compare Commercial bank.

Bankable paper. Notes, checks, bank bills, drafts and other securities for money, received as cash by banks.

Bank clearings. See Clearinghouse.

Banker. In general sense, person that engages in business of banking. In narrower meaning, a private person who keeps a bank; one who is engaged in the business of banking without being incorporated. One who carries on the business of banking by receiving money on deposit with or without interest, by buying and selling bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds or stock, or other securities, and by loaning money without being incorporated.

Under some statutes, an individual banker, as distinguished from a “private banker” (q.v.), is a person who, having complied with the statutory requirements, has received authority from the state to engage in the business of banking, while a private banker is a person engaged in banking without having any special privileges or authority from the state.

See also Investment banker.

Person who holds stake in gambling game or wager.

Bankerout. Eng. Bankrupt; insolvent; indebted beyond the means of payment.

Banker's acceptance. A bill of exchange draft payable at maturity that is drawn by a creditor against his or her debtor. Banker's acceptances are short-term credit instruments most commonly used by persons or firms engaged in international trade. They are comparable to short-term government securities (for example, Treasury Bills) and may be sold on the open market at a discount.

Banker's lien. A lien which a banker has by virtue of which he can appropriate any money or property in his possession belonging to a customer to the extinguishment of any matured debt of such customer to the bank, provided such property or money has not been charged, with the knowledge of the bank, with the subservience of a special burden or purpose, or does not constitute a trust fund of which the banker has notice.

Banker's note. A commercial instrument resembling a bank note in every particular except that it is given by a private banker or unincorporated banking institution.

Bank Holding Company Act. Federal law which governs any company which directly or indirectly owns or controls, with power to vote, more than 5% of voting shares of each of two or more banks. Independent Bankers Ass’n of Ga. v. Dunn, 230 Ga. 345, 197 S.E.2d 129, 139.

Bank holiday of 1933. Presidential Proclamations No. 2039, issued March 6, 1933, and No. 2040, issued March 9, 1933, temporarily suspended banking transactions by member banks of the Federal Reserve System. Normal banking functions were resumed on March 13, subject to certain restrictions. The first proclamation, it was held, had no authority in law until the passage on March 9, 1933, of a ratifying act (12 U.S.C.A. § 95b). The present law forbids member banks of the Federal Reserve System to transact banking business, except under regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, during an emergency proclaimed by the President. 12 U.S.C.A. § 95.

Banking. The business of banking, as defined by law and custom, consists in the issue of notes payable on demand intended to circulate as money when the banks are banks of issue; in receiving deposits payable on demand; in discounting commercial paper; making loans of money on collateral security; buying and selling bills of exchange; negotiating loans, and dealing in negotiable securities issued by the government, state and national, and municipal and other corporations. Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U.S. 138, 156, 7 S.Ct. 826, 30 L.Ed. 895; In re Prudence Co., D.C.N.Y., 10 F.Supp. 33, 36.

Investment banking. Business of underwriting or distributing bond, stock or other securities issues.

Banking a deal. Means making to one who wishes to consummate a deal a loan of money on collateral for a consideration which may consist of interest, a fee, or a part of the securities or property involved in the deal. Cray, McFaw & Co. v. Hegarty, Conroy & Co., D.C.N.Y., 27 F.Supp. 93, 99.

Banking commission. State regulatory body charged with supervision of banking institutions. See also Federal Reserve Board of Governors with respect to regulation of national banks.

Banking day. That part of any day on which a bank is open to the public for carrying on substantially all of its banking functions. U.C.C. § 4-104(c).
Banking game. Gambling game at which money is bet or hazarded.

Banking hours. A term which, in addition to the regular hours, includes time to allow presentment, after closing, to the bank returning a check, if such presentment is necessary in fact. Columbia-Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Miller, 156 A.D. 810, 142 N.Y.S. 440, 445.

Bank night. A device by which a theater provides a registration book which any person over eighteen years of age, whether a patron of the theater or not, may sign. The book is placed in the lobby or outside the doors of the theater and no charge is made for registration nor need one who does so buy a ticket to the theater. A number is given to each name. On stated occasions, the numbers representing all the names registered are placed in a container on the stage of the theater and one number is drawn. The name of the person having that registration number is announced both inside and outside the theater and on coming forward within a certain time, he receives a sum of money which the theater provides from its own funds. If the person whose number is drawn is outside the theater, he is permitted to enter and claim the award without paying the admission. If he does not come forward within the time set, the money is added to the sum to be awarded on the next bank night. Under the plan, various safeguards are imposed on the operation to insure fairness in the allotment of the money. If not a lottery, a bank night is at least a gift enterprise. But it is generally considered to be a lottery. First v. A. & G. Amusement Co., 128 N.J.L. 311, 25 A.2d 892, 893; Commonwealth v. Lund, 142 Pa.Super. 208, 15 A.2d 839, 846.

Bankrupt. The state or condition of one who is unable to pay his debts as they are, or become, due. Amenability to the bankruptcies laws. The condition of one who (under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898) has committed an "act of bankruptcy" (q.v.), and is liable to be proceeded against by his creditors therefor, or of one whose circumstances are such that he is entitled, on his voluntary application, to take the benefit of the bankruptcy laws. The term includes a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed, or who has filed a voluntary petition, or who has been adjudged a bankrupt. Person or municipality referred to as a "debtor" under Bankruptcy Act, § 101(12). See Act of bankruptcy; Arrangement with creditors; Bankruptcy Act; Bankruptcy proceedings; Composition in bankruptcy; Composition with creditors; Contemplation of bankruptcy; Insolvency; Wage earner's plan.

Bankruptcy Act. A federal law (11 U.S.C.A.) for the benefit and relief of creditors and their debtors in cases in which the latter are unable or unwilling to pay their debts. The Act was substantially revised in 1978, effective October 1, 1979. Straight bankruptcy is in the nature of a liquidation proceeding and involves the collection and distribution to creditors of all the bankrupt's non-exempt property by the trustee in the manner provided by the Act. The debtor rehabilitation provisions of the Act (Chapters 11 and 13) differ however from straight bankruptcy in that the debtor looks to rehabilitation and reorganization, rather than liquidation, and the creditor looks to future earnings of the bankrupt, rather than property held by the bankrupt to satisfy their claims (see e.g. Wage earner's plan). See Act of bankruptcy; Bankruptcy proceedings.

Bankruptcy proceedings. The taking of possession by the trustee of the property of the bankrupt actually or constructively in his possession at time of filing of petition in bankruptcy, the distribution of the proceeds received from such property, ratably, among bankrupt's creditors whose claims have been filed and allowed, and the discharge of bankrupt from liability, for the unpaid balance of such claims. In re Public Leasing Corp., C.A.Okl., 488 F.2d 1369. Bankruptcy (in the sense of proceedings taken under the bankruptcy law) is either voluntary or involuntary; the former where the proceeding is initiated by the debtor's own petition to be adjudged a bankrupt and have the benefit of the law, the latter where he is forced into bankruptcy on the petition of a sufficient number of his creditors. See Bankruptcy Act, supra.

Bankruptcy proceedings are governed by the federal Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C.A.) and Official Rules and Forms.

Adjudication of bankruptcy. The judgment or decree of the bankruptcy court that a person against whom a petition in bankruptcy has been filed, or who has filed his voluntary petition, be ordered and adjudged to be a bankrupt.

Bankruptcy courts. Federal courts, as adjuncts to U.S. District Courts, which are concerned exclusively with the administration of Bankruptcy Act and presided over by a bankruptcy judge. 28 U.S.C.A. § 151. Bankruptcy courts exercise jurisdiction as generally provided in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1471.

Bankruptcy discharge. Order of Bankruptcy Court which discharges bankrupt from all dischargeable obligations and debts. For effect of, and exceptions to, discharge, see Bankruptcy Act §§ 523, 524, 727.

Bankruptcy distribution. After payment of administration, priority and other debts and expenses of bankrupt estate, trustee in bankruptcy makes pro rata distribution to creditors. See 11 U.S.C.A. § 726.

Bankruptcy forms. Official forms used in Bankruptcy Court for most matters (e.g., petitions, schedules).

Bankruptcy rules. Rules governing proceedings in bankruptcy courts; a great many of which make the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure applicable.

Bankruptcy schedules. Official forms for listing of bankrupt's assets, liabilities, and all unsecured creditors.

Bankruptcy trustee. One appointed by Bankruptcy Court to take charge of bankrupt estate, to collect assets, to bring suit on bankrupt's claims, and to defend actions against it; he has power to examine bankrupt, to initiate actions to set aside preferences, etc. 11 U.S.C.A. § 321 et seq. United States Trustees are provided for under Chapter 15 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C.A. § 1501 et seq.).

Bank Secrecy Act. Federal Act (1970), officially titled the "Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act," which requires banks and other financial institutions to report to the Internal Revenue Service detailed information on each unusual cash transaction over $10,000. The Act also requires anyone who transports, physically or through the mails, more than $5,000 in cash into or out of the United States to file a report with the United States Custom Service. Its final proviso requires United States taxpayers who have foreign bank accounts to file a report with the Treasury Department. The act provides for both criminal and civil penalties for failure to comply fully with these reporting requirements. 31 U.S.C.A. § 1051 et seq.

Banleuca /bæn(ə)yəwka/. (Same as the French banlieue.) An old law term, signifying a space or tract of country around a city, town, or monastery, distinguished and protected by peculiar privileges.

Bannl /bænʌ/, or bannitus /bænəðəs/. In old law, one under a ban (q.v.); an outlaw or banished man.

Banni nuptarum /bænə napʃiˈərəm/. L. Lat. In old English law, the banns of marriage.

Bannitio /bæniʃ(ə)yəʊ/. Banishment; expulsion by a ban or public proclamation.

Bannitus /bænəðəs/. See Bannl.

Banns of maternity. Public notice or proclamation of a matrimonial contract, and the intended celebration of the marriage of the parties in pursuance of such contract. Such announcement is required by certain religions to be made in a church or chapel, during service, on three consecutive Sundays before the marriage is celebrated. The object is to afford an opportunity for any person to interpose an objection if he knows of any impediment or other just cause why the marriage should not take place.

Bar. The court, in its strictest sense, sitting in full term. The presence, actual or constructive, of the court. Thus a trial at bar is one had before the full court, distinguished from a trial had before a single judge at nisi prius. So the “case at bar” is the case now before the court and under its consideration; the case being tried or argued.

In another sense, the whole body of attorneys and counsellers, or the members of the legal profession, collectively, who are figuratively called the “bar”. They are thus distinguished from the “bench,” which term denotes the whole body of judges. See Bar association.

In the practice of legislative bodies, the outer boundary of the house; therefore, all persons, not being members, who wish to address the house, or are summoned to it, appear at the bar for that purpose.

In the law of contracts, an impediment, obstacle, or preventive barrier. Thus, relationship within the prohibited degrees is a bar to marriage. In this sense also we speak of the “bar of the statute of limitations.”

That which defeats, annuls, cuts off, or puts an end to. Thus, a provision “in bar of dower” is one which has the effect of defeating or cutting off the dower rights which the wife would otherwise become entitled to in the particular land.

In pleading, a special plea, constituting a sufficient answer to an action at law; so called because it barred, i.e., prevented, the plaintiff from further pros-ecuting it with effect, and, if established by proof, defeated and destroyed the action altogether. Called a special “plea in bar.” It may be further described as a plea or peremptory exception of a defendant to destroy the plaintiff’s action. Under Fed.Rules Civ. Proc., pleas in bar are abolished in favor of affirmative pleading of defenses in answer. Rule 8(c). See Plea (Plea in bar).

With respect to claim preclusion, a valid and final personal judgment on the merits against a claimant pro bono (barring) a later suit on the same claim or cause of action.

A judgment rendered in a case is a bar to further action in the state in which it was rendered and in all other jurisdictions if the court which rendered it had required jurisdiction and if the subsequent action is brought by a party to first action or his privy. See Res (Res judicata).

A particular part of the court-room; for example, the place where prisoners stand at their trial, hence the expression “prisoner at the bar.”

In England, a partition or razing running across a court-room, intended to separate the general public from the space occupied by the judges, counsel, jury, and others concerned in the trial of a cause. In the English courts it is the partition behind which all outer-barristers and every member of the public must stand. Solicitors being officers of the court, are admitted within it; as are also queen’s counsel, barristers with patents of precedence, and serjeants, in virtue of their ranks. Parties who appear in person also are placed within the bar on the floor of the court.

Bar admission. Act by which one is licensed to practice before courts of a particular state or jurisdiction after satisfying requirements such as bar examination, period of residency or admission on grounds of reciprocity after period of years as member of bar of another jurisdiction.

Baragaria. Span. A concubine, whom a man keeps alone in his house, unconnected with any other woman.

Bar association. An association of members of the legal profession. Such associations have been organized in most states and also on the national level (American Bar Association; Federal Bar Association), and even on the city level (e.g. New York City Bar Ass’n). The first was established in Mississippi in 1825, but it is not known to have had a continued existence. An association of Grafton and Coos counties in New Hampshire had an existence before 1800, and probably a more or less continuous life since then, having finally merged into a state association.

Bar integration. See Integrated bar.

Barat. See Berat.

Baratrim committit qui propter pecuniarum justitiam baractat /baraˈetrisma kamidat kwɑː prɔˈpɔr pʰak(ə)yʊˈniːəm jɑːʃtʃiˈərəm ˈbɑːʁəktət/. He is guilty of barratry who for money sells justice. (This maxim, however, is one pertaining more to the meaning of “barratry” as used in Scotch law than to its common-law meaning.) See Barratry.
Bargain and sale deed. A deed that has a recitation of consideration coupled with words of conveyance of real property.

Bargainor. The person who makes a bargain. The party to a bargain who is to receive the consideration and perform the contract by delivery of the subject-matter.

Bargain or contract in restraint of trade. Any bargain or contract which purports to limit in any way right of either party to work or to do business.

Bargain sale or purchase. A sale of property for less than the fair market value of such property. The difference between the sale or purchase price and the fair market value of the property will have to be accounted for in terms of its tax consequences.

Bark. Term is sometimes figuratively used to denote the mere words or letter of an instrument, or outer covering of the ideas sought to be expressed, as distinguished from its inner substance or essential meaning.

Barnard's inn. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

Baro /bærəʊ/. In old law, a man, whether slave or free. In later usage, a freeman or freedman; a strong man; a good soldier; a hired soldier; a vassal; a baron; a feudal tenant or client. A man of dignity and rank; a knight. A magnate in the church. A judge in the exchequer (baro scaccarii). The first-born child. A husband.

Baron /bærən/. A lord or nobleman; the most general title of nobility in England. 1 Bl.Comm. 398, 399. A particular degree or title of nobility, next to a viscount. The lowest title in Great Britain. A judge of the court of exchequer. 3 Bl.Comm. 44. A freeman. Also a vassal holding directly from the king. A husband; occurring in this sense in the phrase "baron et feme," husband and wife. The term has essentially the same meanings as baro (q.v.).

Baronage. In English law, the collective body of the barons, or of the nobility at large.
Baron court. See Court-baron.

Barones scaccaril. See Barons of the exchequer.

Baronet. An English name or hereditary title of dignity or rank (but not a title of nobility, being next below that of baron), established in 1611 by James I. It is created by letters patent, and descends to the male heir.

Baron et feme /bərən ət fɛm/. Man and woman; husband and wife. A wife being under the protection and influence of her baron, lord, or husband, is styled a “feme-covert” (fama in viro cooperta), and her state of marriage is called her “coverture.”

Barons of the exchequer. The six judges of the court of exchequer in England, of whom one is styled the “chief baron;” answering to the justices and chief justice of other courts.

Barony. The dignity of a baron; a species of tenure; the territory or lands held by a baron.

Barony of land. In England, a quantity of land amounting to 15 acres. In Ireland, a subdivision of a county.

Bar, or barre. In old practice, a plea in bar. The bar of the court. A barrister.

Barrator /bærətər/. One who commits barratry. See Barretor.

Barratrous /bærətraus/. Fraudulent; having the character of barratry.

Barratry /bærətrɪ/. Also spelled “Barrety.” The offense of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise. State v. Batson, 220 N.C. 411, 17 S.E.2d 511, 512, 513.

In maritime law, an act committed by master or mariners of a vessel for some fraudulent or unlawful purpose contrary to their duty to owner and resulting in injury to owner. Isbell Enterprises, Inc. v. Citizens Cas. Co. of New York, D.C.Tex., 303 F.Supp. 549, 552.

See also Barretor; Champerty.

Barred. Obstructed by a bar. Subject to hindrance or obstruction by a bar or barrier which, if interposed, will prevent legal redress or recovery; as, when it is said that a claim or cause of action is “barred by the statute of limitations.”

Barrel. A measure of capacity, equal (in England) to 36 imperial gallons. The standard United States measure, except as to barrels of petroleum, equals 31 1/2 gallons.

In agricultural and mercantile parlance, as also in the inspection laws, the term means, prima facie, not merely a certain quantity, but, further, a certain state of the article; namely, that it is in a cask.

Barren money. In the civil law, a debt which bears no interest.

Barrenness. Sterility; the incapacity to bear children.

Barretor /bærətər/. A common mover, exciter, or maintainer of suits and quarrels either in courts or elsewhere in the country; a disturber of the peace who spreads false rumors and calumnies, whereby discord and disquiet may grow among neighbors.

One who frequently excites and stirs up groundless suits and quarrels, either at law or otherwise. State v. Batson, 220 N.C. 411, 17 S.E.2d 511, 512, 513.

Barrister. In England, an advocate; a counsellor learned in the law who has been admitted to plead at the bar, and who is engaged in conducting the trial or argument of causes. A person called to the bar by the benches of Inns of Court, giving exclusive right of audience in the Supreme Court.

Bas. Fr. Low; inferior; subordinate.

Basal fracture. A fracture of the skull beginning at the base of the skull to the rear and left extending to the top of the skull.

Bas chevaliers /bɛʃ ʃəvɛlɛʁ/ /bɑʃ ʃəvalɛˈʃɛ/. In old English law, low, or inferior knights, by tenure of a base military fee, as distinguished from barons and bannerets, who were the chief or superior knights.

Base, adj. Low in place or position; inferior; servile; of subordinate degree; impure, adulterated, or alloyed.

Base animal. See Animal.

Base bullion. Base silver bullion is silver in bars mixed to a greater or less extent with alloys or base materials.

Base coin. Debased, adulterated, or alloyed coin (e.g. copper, nickel) as distinguished from silver or gold.

Base court. In old English law, an inferior court, that is, not of record, as the court baron.

Base estate. The estate which “base tenants” (q.v.) have in their land.

Base fee. One that may last forever if the contingency does not happen, but debased because its duration depends upon collateral circumstances which qualify it; sometimes called a conditional, determinable, or qualified fee.

In old English law, an estate or fee which has a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. Scobey v. Beckman, 111 Ind.App. 574, 41 N.E.2d 847, 850.

Base services. In feudal law, such services as were unworthy to be performed by the nobler men, and were performed by the peasants and those of servile rank. 2 BL.Comm. 62.

Base tenants. Tenants who performed to their lords services in villenage; tenants who held at the will of the lord, as distinguished from frank tenants, or freeholders.

Base tenure. A tenure by villenage, or other customary service, as distinguished from tenure by military service; or from tenure by free service.

Base, n. Bottom, foundation, groundwork, that on which a thing rests. The locality on which a military or naval force relies for supplies or from which it initiates operations; e.g. air base; military base; marine base; naval base; submarine base.
Base line. Survey line used in the government survey to establish township lines. Horizontal elevation line used as centerline in a highway survey.

Base pay. Wages, exclusive of overtime, bonuses, etc.

Basic or pioneer patent. One discovered in new field and recognized by scientific world or industry as startling, unexpected, and unprophesied. Northeast Engineering Corporation v. Keystone Driller Co., C.C. A.Wis., 70 F.2d 13, 16.

Basileus /bâsâlyûws/. A Greek word, meaning "king." A title assumed by the emperors of the Eastern Roman Empire. It is used by Justinian in some of the Novels; and is said to have been applied to the English kings before the Conquest. 1 Bl.Comm. 242.

Basilica /basîlîkâ/. The name given to a compilation of Roman and Greek law, prepared about A.D. 880 by the Emperor Basilius, and published by his successor, Leo the Philosopher. It was written in Greek, was mainly an abridgment of Justinian's Corpus Juris, and comprised sixty books, only a portion of which are extant. It remained the law of the Eastern Empire until the fall of Constantinople, in 1453.

Basils. In old English law, a kind of money or coin abolished by Henry II.

Basin. When speaking of a large river, ordinarily means or includes the entire area drained by the main stream and its tributaries. City of Tulsa v. Peacock, 181 Okl. 383, 74 P.2d 359, 360.

In admiralty law and marine insurance, a part of the sea inclosed in rocks.

Basis. Fundamental principle; groundwork; support; the foundation or groundwork of anything; that upon which anything may rest or the principal component parts of a thing.

Accounting. Term used in accounting, especially in tax accounting, to describe the value of an asset for purpose of determining gain (or loss) on its sale or transfer or in determining value in the hands of a donee of a gift.

Acquisition cost, or some substitute therefor, of an asset used in computing gain or loss on disposition or retirement. The amount assigned to an asset for income tax purposes. For assets acquired by purchase, the basis would be cost [I.R.C. § 1012]. Special rules govern the basis of property received by virtue of another's death [I.R.C. §§ 1014, 1023] or by gift [§ 1015], the basis of stock received on a transfer of property to a controlled corporation [§ 358], the basis of the property transferred to the corporation [§ 362], and the basis of property received upon the liquidation of a corporation [§ 334].

Adjusted basis. In tax accounting, the value of property placed on it after its acquisition and after reflecting increases and decreases to the dollar amount of the original basis. The cost or other basis of property reduced by depreciation allowed or allowable and increased by capital improvements.

Stepped-up basis. In tax accounting, value placed on property which is acquired in a taxable transaction or purchase. I.R.C. § 1012.

Substituted basis. In tax accounting, value placed on property acquired in a transaction in which gain or loss is not recognized. I.R.C. § 1014. See also Substituted basis.

See also Accrual basis.

Basis of bargain. That on which any affirmation of fact or promise relating to goods sold is predicated, creating an express warranty. U.C.C. § 2–313(1)(a). See Essence of the contract.

Bastard. An illegitimate child; a child born before the lawful marriage of its parents; i.e. born out of lawful wedlock.

A child born after marriage, but under circumstances which render it impossible that the husband of his mother can be his father. State v. Coliton, 73 N.D. 582, 17 N.W.2d 546, 548, 549.

Bastard eigné. In old English law, bastard elder. If a child was born of an illicit connection, and afterwards the parents intermarried and had another son, the elder was called bastard eigné, or, as it is now spelled, ainé, and the second son was called puinsé, or since born, or sometimes he was called mulier puinsé. 2 Bl.Comm. 248.

Bastardize. To declare one a bastard, as a court does. To give evidence to prove one a bastard. A mother (married) cannot bastardize her child.

Bastardus non potest habere hæredem nisi de corpore suo legitime procreatum /bæstârdâs nôn pówdst habiriy haridyî nāsây sî ñî kôrpâry s(y)ûwôw lajädî-mîy prôwikriëyídâm/. A bastard can have no heir unless it be one lawfully begotten of his own body.

Bastardus nullius est filius, aut filius populi /bæstârdâs nálñâyây est filiyâs ôt filiyâs pôpyâyây/. A bastard is nobody's son, or the son of the people.

Bastardy proceedings. Court proceeding in which the paternity of a child is determined. The method provided by statute of proceeding against the putative father to secure a proper maintenance for the bastard.

Baston /bêstôn/batón/. In old English law, a baton, club, or staff. A term applied to officers of the wardens of the prison called the "Fleet," because of the staff carried by them. See Trail-baston.

Bas ville /bâ vîyl/. In French law, the suburbs of a town.

Batable-ground. Land that is in controversy, or about the possession of which there is a dispute, as the lands which were situated between England and Scotland before the Union.

Batiment /bêtamôn/. In French marine law, a vessel or ship.
Batonnier /bətɔnyɛ/ . The chief of the French bar in its various centres, who presides in the council of discipline.

Battel /ˈbædəl/. Trial by combat; wager of battel. See Wager of battel.

Battered child. A child who is suffering serious physical or emotional injury resulting from abuse inflicted upon him including sexual abuse, or from neglect, including malnutrition, or who is determined to be physically dependent upon an addictive drug at birth. See also Child abuse.

Battery. Criminal battery, defined as the unlawful application of force to the person of another, may be divided into its three basic elements: (1) the defendant's conduct (act or omission); (2) his "mental state," which may be an intent to kill or injure, or criminal negligence, or perhaps the doing of an unlawful act; and (3) the harmful result to the victim, which may be either a bodily injury or an offensive touching. What might otherwise be a battery may be justified; and the consent of the victim may under some circumstances constitute a defense. Com. v. Hill, 237 Pa. Super. 543, 333 A.2d 870. The consumption of an unlawful assault.

The actual offer to use force to the injury of another person is assault; the use of it is battery, which always includes an assault; hence the two terms are commonly combined in the term "assault and battery."

See also Assault and battery.

Aggravated battery. An unlawful act of violent injury to the person of another, accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, such as the use of deadly weapon, great disparity between the ages and physical conditions of the parties, or the purposeful infliction of shame and disgrace.

Simple battery. One not accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, or not resulting in grievous bodily injury.

Technical battery. A technical battery occurs when a physician or dentist, in the course of treatment, exceeds the consent given by a patient. Although no wrongful intent is present, and in fact there may be a sincere purpose to aid the patient, recovery is permitted unless there is an emergency. However, if the patient benefits from the battery only nominal damages may be recovered.

Battle of the forms. Term used to describe effect of multitude of forms used by buyers and sellers to accept and to confirm terms expressed in other forms. U.C.C. § 2–207.

Batture /ˈbɑtər/. A marine term, used to denote a bottom of sand, stone, or rock, mixed together, and rising towards the surface of the water; as a technical word and also in common parlance, an elevation of the bed of a river, under the surface of the water. The term is, however, sometimes used to denote the same elevation of the bank, when it has risen above the surface of the water, or is as high as the land on the outside of the bank. Conkey v. Knudsen, 143 Neb. 5, 8 N.W.2d 536, 541. In this latter sense it is synonymous with "alluvion." It means, in common law language, land formed by accretion. The term is used in Louisiana, and is applied principally to certain portions of the bed of the Mississippi river which are uncovered at time of low water but are covered annually at time of ordinary high water.

Bawd /bɔd/. One who procures opportunities for persons of opposite sexes to cohabit in an illicit manner; who may be, while exercising the trade of a bawd, perfectly innocent of committing in his or her own proper person the crime either of adultery or of fornication. A madam.

Bawdy-house. A house of ill fame; a house of prostitution; a brothel. A house or dwelling maintained for the convenience and resort of persons desiring unlawful sexual connection. A place for convenience of people of both sexes in resorting to lewdness, a place many may frequent for immoral purposes or a house where one may go for immoral purposes without invitation. Riley v. U. S., D.C.App., 298 A.2d 228, 231.

Bay. A pond-head made of a great height to keep in water for the supply of a mill, etc., so that the wheel of the mill may be turned by the water rushing thence, through a passage or flood-gate. (This is generally called a forebay.)

A bending or curving of the shore of the sea or of a lake, so as to form a more or less inclosed body of water. An opening into the land, or an arm of the sea, where the water is shut in on all sides except at the entrance.

Baygall. A low-lying wet land matter with vegetable fibres and often with gallberry and other thick-growing bushes.

Bayley /ˈbeɪli/. In old English law, bailiff. This term was used in the laws of the colony of New Plymouth, Mass., A.D. 1670, 1671.

Bayou /ˈbeɪyuː/ /ˈbeɪəʊ/. A species of creek or stream common in Louisiana and Texas. An outlet from a swamp, pond, or lagoon, to a river, or the sea.

B.C. An abbreviation for "before Christ," "bail court," "bankruptcy cases," and "British Columbia."

B.E. An abbreviation for "Baron of the Court of Exchequer."

Beach. This term, in its ordinary signification, when applied to a place on tide waters means the space between ordinary high and low water mark; or the space over which the tide usually ebbs and flows. It is a term not more significant of a sea margin than "shore." In common parlance designates that portion of shore consisting generally of sand and pebbles, resulting usually from the action of water, as distinct from the upland, to which it often extends above normal high-water mark. Beach is synonymous with "shore," "strand," or "flats." The term may also include the sandy shore above mean high water which is washed by storms and exceptionally high tides.

To "beach" a ship is to run it upon the beach or shore; this is frequently found necessary in case of a fire, leak, etc.

See Foreshore; Seashore.
Public beach. Beach dedicated by governmental body to the common use of the public, which the unorganized public and each of its members have a right to use while it remains such.

Beacon. A light-house, or sea-mark, formerly used to alarm the country, in case of the approach of an enemy, but now used for the guidance of ships at sea, by night, as well as by day.

Beaconage. Money paid for the maintenance of a beacon or signal-light.

Beadle. In English ecclesiastical law, an inferior parish officer, who is chosen by the vestry, and whose business is to attend the vestry, to give notice of its meetings, to execute its orders, to attend upon inquests, and to assist the constables. See Bedel.

Beams and balance. Instruments for weighing goods and merchandise.

Bear. To support, sustain, or carry. To give rise to, or to produce, something else as an incident or auxiliary. To render, to manage, or direct, or to conduct; to carry on, or maintain. To produce as yield; e.g. "bear" interest. One who believes stock prices will decline; opposite of a "bull."

Bear arms. The Second Amendment, U.S. Constitution, provides that the "right of the people to bear arms, shall not be infringed." This right has been restricted however by state and federal laws regulating the transportation, sale, use, and possession of weapons.

Bearer. The person in possession of an instrument, document of title, or security payable to bearer or indorsed in blank. U.C.C. § 1-201(5). When a check, note, draft, etc., is payable to "bearer," it imports that such shall be payable to any person who may present the instrument for payment. See also Payable to bearer.

Bearer bond. Bonds payable to the person having possession of them. Such bonds do not require endorsement to transfer ownership but the transfer of possession.

Bearer instrument. An instrument is payable to bearer when by its terms it is payable to (a) bearer or the order of bearer; or (b) a specified person or bearer; or (c) "cash" or the order of "cash," or any other indication which does not purport to designate a specific payee. U.C.C. § 3-111.

Bearer paper. Commercial paper payable to bearer; i.e. to the person having possession of such. See Bearer instrument.

Bearing date. Disclosing a date on its face; having a certain date. Words frequently used in pleading and conveyancing to introduce the date which has been put upon an instrument.

Bear interest. To yield, generate, or produce interest on the principal.

Bear market. A market in which prices are falling or are expected to fall.

Beat, v. To strike or hit repeatedly, as with blows. In the criminal law and the law of torts, with reference to assault and battery, the term includes any unlawful physical violence offered to another. See Battery.

Beat, n. In some of the southern states (as Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina) the principal legal subdivision of a county, corresponding to towns or townships in other states; or a voting precinct.

Beating. The infliction of extreme force to another. See Battery.

Beating of the bounds. An ancient custom in England by which, once a year, the minister, etc., of a parish walked about its boundaries to preserve a recollection of them.

Beaupleader /ˈbəʊpliːdər/. (L. Fr. fair pleading). A writ of prohibition directed to the sheriff or another, directing him not to take a fine for beaupleder. There was anciently a fine imposed called a fine for beaupleder, which is explained by Coke to have been originally imposed for bad pleading.

Bed. The hollow or channel of a water course; the depression between the banks worn by the regular and usual flow of the water. The land that is covered by the water in its ordinary low stage. Area extending between the opposing banks measured from the foot of the banks from the top of the water at its ordinary stage, including sand bars which may exist between the foot of said banks as thus defined. Town of Refugio v. Heard, Tex.Civ.App., 95 S.W.2d 1008, 1010. It includes the lands below ordinary high water mark. United States v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 312 U.S. 592, 313 U.S. 543, 61 S.Ct. 772, 775, 85 L.Ed. 1064.

Also, the right of cohabitation or marital intercourse; as in the phrase “divorce from bed and board,” or a mensa et thoro.

Bed and board. Divorce a mensa et thoro. See Divorce.

Bedel /ˈbɛdəl/. In English law, a crier or messenger of court, who summons men to appear and answer therein. A herald to make public proclamations. An inferior officer of a parish or liberty, to give notice of vestry meetings, etc.

An officer of the forest, similar to a sheriff's special bailiff. A collector of rents for the king.

Bedelary /ˈbɛdələrɪ/. The jurisdiction of a bedel, as a bailiwick is the jurisdiction of a bailiff.

Bederepe /ˈbɛdərɪp/. A service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, as to reap their landlord's corn at harvest.

Before. Prior to; preceding; in front of; at the disposal of; in a higher position. In the presence of; under the official purview of; as in a magistrate's jurat, "before me personally appeared," etc.

When used as a preposition, does not indicate a period of time as do the prepositions "for," "during," and "throughout," but merely an event or act preceding in time, or earlier than, or previously to, the time mentioned. First Nat. Corp. v. Perrine, 99 Mont. 454, 43 P.2d 1073, 1077.

Beg. To solicit alms or charitable aid.
Beggar. One who lives by begging charity, or who has no other means of support than solicited alms.

Behalf. Benefit, support, defence, or advantage.

Behavior. Manner of having, holding, or keeping one’s self; manner of behaving, whether good or bad; conduct; manners; carriage of one’s self, with respect to propriety and morals; deportment. State v. Roll, 1 Ohio Dec. 284; Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U.S. 118, 63 S.Ct. 1333, 1340, 87 L.Ed. 1796. See also Character; Reputation.

Behetría /bêyetriya/. In Spanish law, lands situated in districts and manors in which the inhabitants had the right to select their own lords.

Behoof. Use; benefit; profit; service; advantage. It occurs in conveyances, e.g., “to his and their use and behoof.”

Being struck. Collision, or striking together of two objects, one of which may be stationary. Condition of a person who has been traumatized. Business closed or affected by labor strike. See also Strike.

Belief. A conviction of the truth of a proposition, existing subjectively in the mind, and induced by argument, persuasion, or proof addressed to the judgment. Latrobe v. J. H. Cross Co., D.C.Pa., 29 F.2d 210, 212. A conclusion arrived at from external sources after weighing probability. Conviction of the mind, arising not from actual perception or knowledge, but by way of inference, or from evidence received or information derived from others.

Belief-action distinction. The distinction noted in analysis of cases under First Amendment, U.S. Constitution—freedom of speech and religion—to the effect that one is guaranteed the right to any belief he chooses, but when that belief is translated into action, the state also has rights under its police power to protect others from such actions. Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U.S. 145, 164.

Belligerency /bilijərənsi/. In international law, the status of de facto statehood attributed to a body of insurgents, by which their hostilities are legalized. The international status assumed by a state (i.e., nation) which wages war against another state. Quality of being belligerent; status of a belligerent; act or state of waging war; warfare.

Belligerent /bilijərənt/. In international law, as an adjective, it means engaged in lawful war. As a noun, it designates either of two nations which are actually in a state of war with each other, as well as their allies actively co-operating, as distinguished from a nation which takes no part in the war and maintains a strict indifference as between the contending parties, called a “neutral.”

As a personality trait, refers to one who is overly assertive, hostile or combative.

Belligerents. A body of insurgents who by reason of their temporary organized government are regarded as conducting lawful hostilities. Also, militia, corps of volunteers, and others, who although not part of the regular army of the state, are regarded as lawful combatants provided they observe the laws of war. See also Belligerency; Belligerent.

Bellum /bêləm/. Lat. In public law, war. An armed contest between nations; the state of those who forcibly contend with each other. Jus belli, the law of war.

Belong. To appertain to; to be the property of; to be a member of; to be appropriate; to own.

Belonging. That which is connected with a principal or greater thing; an appendage, an appurtenance; also, ownership. Church of the Holy Faith v. State Tax Commission, 39 N.M. 403, 48 P.2d 777, 779.

Belongings. That which belongs to one; property; possessions; a term properly used to express ownership. Ford’s Adm’r v. Wade’s Adm’r, 242 Ky. 18, 45 S.W.2d 818, 820. See Personal effects.

Below. Inferior; of inferior jurisdiction, or jurisdiction in the first instance. The court from which a cause is removed for review is called the “court below.” Preliminary; auxiliary or instrumental.

Bail to the sheriff has been called “bail below,” as being preliminary to and intended to secure the putting in of bail above, or special bail. See Bail.

Bench. A seat of judgment or tribunal for the administration of justice; the seat occupied by judges in courts; also the court itself, or the aggregate of the judges composing a court, as in the phrase “before the full bench.”

The judges taken collectively, as distinguished from counsellors and advocates, who are called the bar.

The term, indicating originally the seat of the judges, came to denote the body of judges taken collectively, and also the tribunal itself, as the King’s Bench.

Bench blower. Record of arrests and other happenings kept by police.

Bench conference. A meeting at the judge’s bench prior to, during or after a trial or hearing between counsel and the judge to discuss a matter pertaining to such proceeding. Commonly called to discuss questions of evidence out of hearing of jury; it may or may not be made part of the written record of the proceeding.
Benchers. In England, principal officers of each inn of court, in whom the government of such is vested.

Bench legislation. See Judge-made law under the title Judge.

Bench mark. A mark on a fixed and enduring object, indicating a particular elevation and used as a reference in topographical surveys and tidal observations. Ace Const. Co. v. U. S., 185 Ct.Cl. 487, 401 F.2d 816, 820.

Bench trial. Trial held before judge sitting without a jury; jury waived trial.

Bench warrant. Process issued by the court itself, or "from the bench," for the attachment or arrest of a person; either in case of contempt, or where an indictment has been found, or to bring in a witness who does not obey the subpoena.

Bene /bi:nii/. Lat. Well; in proper form; legally; sufficiently.

Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione /benedikta est ekspozitio(ly)ow kwendor ryzy radimayar ey dastrakshirowniy/. Blessed is the exposition when anything is saved from destruction. It is a laudable interpretation which gives effect to the instrument, and does not allow its purpose to be frustrated.

Benefice /bena:fsa/. In ecclesiastical law, in its technical sense, this term includes ecclesiastical preferments to which rank or public office is attached, otherwise described as ecclesiastical dignities or offices, such as bishoprics, deaneries, and the like; but in popular acceptation, it is almost invariably appropriated to rectories, vicarages, perpetual curacies, district churches, and endowed chapelys. A term derived from the feudal law, in which it signified a permanent stipendary estate, or an estate held by feudal tenure. 4 Bl.Comm. 107.

Bénificé /bagni:fi:/. Fr. In French law, a benefit or advantage, and particularly a privilege given by the law rather than by the agreement of the parties.

Bénéfice de discussion. Benefit of discussion. The right of a guarantor to require that the creditor should exhaust his recourse against the principal debtor before having recourse to the guarantor himself.

Bénéfice de division. Benefit of division; right of contribution as between co-secureties.

Bénéfice d'Inventaire. A term which corresponds to the beneficium inventarii of Roman law, and substantially to the English law doctrine that the executor properly accounting is only liable to the extent of the assets received by him.

Bénéficiaire /bagni:fi:sy:v/. The person in whose favor a promissory note or bill of exchange is payable; or any person in whose favor a contract of any description is executed.

Beneficial. Tending to the benefit of a person; yielding a profit, advantage, or benefit; enjoying or entitled to a benefit or profit. This term is applied both to estates (as a "beneficial interest") and to persons (as "the beneficial owner").

Beneficiary association. See Benevolent associations.

Beneficial enjoyment. The enjoyment which a man has of an estate in his own right and for his own benefit, and not as trustee for another.

Beneficial estate. An estate in expectancy is one where the right to the possession is postponed to a future period, and is "beneficial" where the devisee takes solely for his own use or benefit, and not as the mere holder of the title for the use of another.

Beneficial interest. Profit, benefit, or advantage resulting from a contract, or the ownership of an estate as distinct from the legal ownership or control. When considered as designation of character of an estate, is such an interest as a devisee, legatee, or donee takes solely for his own use or benefit, and not as holder of title for use and benefit of another.

Beneficial owner. Term applied most commonly to cestui que trust who enjoys ownership of the trust or estate in equity, but not legal title which remains in trustee or personal representative. Equitable as contrasted with legal owner.

One who does not have title to property but has rights in the property which are the normal incident of owning the property. The persons for whom a trustee holds title to property are the beneficial owners of the property, and the trustee has a fiduciary responsibility to them.

Beneficial power. A power which has for its object the donee of the power, and which is to be executed solely for his benefit; as distinguished from a trust power, which has for its object a person other than the donee, and is to be executed solely for the benefit of such person.

Beneficial use. The right to use and enjoy property according to one's own liking or so as to derive a profit or benefit from it, including all that makes it desirable or habitable, as light, air, and access; as distinguished from a mere right of occupancy or possession. Such right to enjoyment of property where legal title is in one person while right to such use or interest is in another. Christiansen v. Department of Social Security, 15 Wash.2d 465, 131 P.2d 169, 191.

Beneficiary /bena:fi:ri:/y/. One who benefits from act of another. See also Primary beneficiary; Third party beneficiary.

Credit. A "beneficiary" of a credit is a person who is entitled under its terms to draw or demand payment. U.C.C. § 5–103(d). See also Creditor beneficiary.

Incidental. A person who may derive benefit from performance on contract, though he is neither the promisee nor the one to whom performance is to be rendered. Salzman v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 48 A.D.2d 258, 369 N.Y.S.2d 238, 242. See also Incidental beneficiary.

Insurance. The person entitled to take proceeds on death of insured.

Taxation. One who is assessed as the real owner. See also Income beneficiary.

Trust. As it relates to trust beneficiaries, includes a person who has any present or future interest, vested or contingent, and also includes the owner of an interest by assignment or other transfer and as it relates to a charitable trust, includes any person entitled to enforce the trust. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201. A person named in a trust account as one for whom a party to the account is named as trustee. Uniform Probate Code, § 6–101. Person for whose benefit property is held in trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 3.

Beneficiary association. See Benevolent associations.

Beneficiary heir. In the law of Louisiana, one who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ.Code La. art. 883. Also, one who may accept the succession with benefit of inventory.

Beneficium invito non datur /benafish(iyor)am invaydow non deydar/. A privilege or benefit is not granted against one's will.

Beneficium non datum nisi propter officium /benafish(iyor)am xon deydam naysay proper afishiyam/. A remuneration [is] not given, unless on account of a duty performed.

Beneficium non datur nisi offici causa /benafish(iyor)am xon deydam naysay afishiyaw koza/. A benefice is not granted except on account or in consideration of duty.

Beneficium principis debeat esse manusurum /benafish(iyor)am prinsspaw debay ee mens(y)yuram/. The benefaction of a prince ought to be lasting.

Benefit. Advantage; profit; fruit; privilege; gain; interest. The receiving as the exchange for promise some performance or forbearance which promisor was not previously entitled to receive. Graphic Arts Finishers, Inc. v. Boston Redevelopment Authority, 357 Mass. 40, 255 N.E.2d 793, 798.

Financial assistance received in time of sickness, disability, unemployment, etc. either from insurance or public programs such as social security.

Contracts. When it is said that a valuable consideration for a promise may consist of a benefit to the promisor, "benefit" means that the promisor has, in return for his promise, acquired some legal right to which he would not otherwise have been entitled. Irving v. Irwin, 133 Cal.App. 374, 24 P.2d 215, 216; Woolum v. Sizemore, 267 Ky. 384, 102 S.W.2d 323, 324.

Eminent domain. It is a rule that, in assessing damages for private property taken or injured for public use, "special benefits" may be set off against the amount of damage found, but not "general benefits." Within the meaning of this rule, general benefits are such as accrue to the community at large, to the vicinage, or to all property similarly situated with reference to the work or improvement in question; while special benefits are such as accrue directly and solely to the owner of the land in question and not to others.

Benefit association. See Benefit societies.

Benefit building society. The original name for what is now more commonly called a "building society" (q.v.).

Benefit certificate. A written obligation to pay the person therein named the amount specified upon the conditions therein stipulated. Also a term usually applied to policies issued by fraternal and beneficiary societies. Chandler v. New York Life Ins. Co., 194 Ark. 6, 104 S.W.2d 1060, 1061.
Benefit of bargain rule. Under such rule a defrauded purchaser may recover the difference between the real and the represented value of the property purchased. Auffenberg v. Hafley, Mo.App., 457 S.W.2d 929, 337.

In an action for fraud, plaintiff's recovery is limited to that measured by "out-of-pocket" rule, by which damages are measured by difference between purchase price of property and fair market value of same property on date of sale, unless actionable misrepresentation was warranty of value, in which case plaintiff may recover under "benefit-of-the-bargain" rule by which damages are determined by difference between actual value of property received and its value had representations as made been true. Galego v. Knudsen, 573 P.2d 313, 318, 281 Or. 43.

Benefit of cession. In the civil law, the release of a debtor from future imprisonment for his debts, which the law operates in his favor upon the surrender of his property for the benefit of his creditors.

Benefit of clergy. In its original sense, the phrase denoted the exemption which was accorded to clergymen from the jurisdiction of the secular courts, or from arrest or attachment on criminal process issuing from those courts in certain particular cases. Afterwards, it meant a privilege of exemption from the punishment of death accorded to such persons as were clerks, or who could read. This privilege of exemption from capital punishment was anciently allowed to clergymen only, but afterwards to all who were connected with the church, even to its most subordinate officers, and at a still later time to all persons who could read (then called "clerks"), whether ecclesiastics or laymen. It does not appear to have been extended to cases of high treason, nor did it apply to mere misdemeanors. The privilege was claimed after the person's conviction, by a species of motion in arrest of judgment, technically called "praying his clergy." As a means of testing his clerical character, he was given a psalm to read (usually, or always, the fifty-first), and, upon his reading it correctly, he was turned over to the ecclesiastical courts, to be tried by the bishop or a jury of twelve clerks. These heard him on oath, with his witnesses and compurgators, who attested their belief in his innocence. This privilege operated greatly to mitigate the extreme rigor of the criminal laws, but was found to involve such gross abuses that parliament began to enact that certain crimes should be felonies "without benefit of clergy," and finally, by the Criminal Law Act of 1827, it was altogether abolished. The act of congress of April 30, 1790, c. 9, § 31, 1 Stat. 119, provided that there should be no benefit of clergy for any capital crime against the United States, and, if this privilege formed part of the common law of the several states before the Revolution, it no longer exists.

Sometimes used in negative sense, "without benefit of clergy", to describe status of man and woman who live together though not married to each other.

Benefit of counsel. See Counsel, right to.

Benefit of discussion. In the civil law, the right which a surety has to cause the property of the principal debtor to be applied in satisfaction of the obligation in the first instance. Civ.Code La. arts. 3045-3051.

Benefit of division. Same as beneficium divisionis (q.v.).

Benefit of inventory. In the civil law, the privilege which the heir obtains of being liable for the charges and debts of the succession, only to the value of the effects of the succession, by causing an inventory of these effects within the time and manner prescribed by law. Civil Code La. art. 1032.

Benefit of order. See Beneficium (Beneficium ordinis).

Benefit societies. Under this and several similar names, in various states, corporations which insist to receive periodical payments from members, and hold them as a fund to be loaned or given to members needing pecuniary relief.

Benerth. A feudal service rendered by the tenant to his lord with plow and cart.

Benevolence. The doing of a kind or helpful action towards another, under no obligation except an ethical one.

The love of humanity; the desire to promote its prosperity or happiness. The term includes acts of well-wishing towards others, for the promotion of general happiness, and plans actuated by love of others and a desire for their well-being. In re Peabody's Estate, 124 Misc. 338, 208 N.Y.S. 664, 671. Also beneficent; doing well.

It is a broader term than "charity" which it includes, and with which it is frequently used synonymously. "Charity" in its legal sense implies giving without consideration or expectation of return, and "benevolence" applies to any act which is prompted by or has for its object the well-being of others. State v. Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ. App., 51 S.W.2d 405, 410.

See also Benevolent; Charitable; Charity.

Benevolent /ben-ev-aht/, Philanthropic; humane; having a desire or purpose to do good to men; intended for the conferring of benefits, rather than for gain or profit; loving others and actively desirous of their well being. In re Altman's Estate, 87 Misc. 255, 149 N.Y.S. 601, 605.

This word, as applied to objects or purposes, may refer to those which are in their nature charitable, and may also have a broader meaning and include objects and purposes not charitable in the legal sense of that word. Acts of kindness, friendship, forethought, or good-will might properly be described as benevolent. It has therefore been held that gifts to trustees to be applied for "benevolent purposes" at their discretion, or to such benevolent purposes as they could agree upon, do not create a public charity. But where the word is used in connection with other words explanatory of its meaning, and indicating the intent of the donor to limit it to purposes strictly charitable, it has been held to be synonymous with, or equivalent to, "charitable."

See also Charitable; Charity.
Benevolent associations. Those having a philanthropic or charitable purpose, as distinguished from such as are conducted for profit; specifically, “benefit associations” or “beneficial associations.” Another name for a “benefit society,” “benevolent society,” and “fraternal” or “friendly society.” State v. Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 405, 410. See also Benevolent corporation; Charitable corporation.

Benevolent corporation. A nonprofit corporation; created for charitable rather than for business purposes. One that ministers to all; the purpose may be any-thing that promotes the mental, physical, or spiritual welfare of man. The term may include a corporation to which a bequest is made to be used in the improvement of the social, physical, and economic condition of the employees of a business corporation. In re Alman’s Estate, 87 Misc. 255, 149 N.Y.S. 691. See also Charitable corporation.

Benevolentia regis habenda /benaválésh(i)y/i ríyjas habénda/. The form in ancient fines and submissions to purchase the king’s pardon in order to be restored to place, title or estate.

Benevolent society. See Benevolent associations; Benevolent corporation.

Benigne faciändae sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et que libet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est /banigny fashiyéndiy sánt intárpratéshiyóniy/ kartéraém, at ríy màjías váliyav kwám péhriyat; et kwíyàbat kannásh(i)yow fortásmiy kóntrá downstórám intárpraténdó est/. Liberal interpretations are to be made of deeds, so that the purpose may rather stand than fall; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor.

Benigne faciändae sunt interpretationes, propter simplici- citatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire /banigny fashiyéndiy sánt intárpratéshiyóniy, próptar simplisitéydam léýakórám, at ríy màjías váliyav kwám péhriyat; et kwíyàbat váráléshiyónnay, nón éy kóntrá, débad inséráváryiy/. Constructions [of written instruments] are to be made literally, on account of the simplicity of the laity [or common people], in order that the thing [or subject-matter] may rather have effect than perish [or become void]; and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words. 2 Bl.Comm. 379.

Benignior sententia in verbis generalibus seu dublis, est préferenda /banign(i)yor senténdsh(i)y/ in várbas jenáréylabas syúw dyúwibiyas ést préferénds/. The more favorable construction is to be placed on general or doubtful expressions.

Benignius leges interpretanda sunt quo voluntas earum conservetur /banigny(i)yas liyiyiyó intárpraténdiy sánt kwów válañtás iyéram kósárvéyár/. Laws are to be more liberally interpreted, in order that their intent may be preserved.

Bequeath /bakwiýð/. To give personal property by will to another. It therefore is distinguishable from “de-vise,” which is properly used of reality. But if the context clearly shows the intention of the testator to use the word “bequeath” as synonymous with “de-vise,” it may be held to pass real property. See Bequest.

Bequest /bakwést/. A gift by will of personal property; a legacy. Disposition of realty in will is termed “devise.” See also Charitable bequest; Demonstrative bequest; Devise; General bequest; Legacy.

Conditional bequest. One the taking effect or continuing of which depends upon the happening of or non-occurrence of a particular event.

Executory bequest. The bequest of a future, de-ferred, or contingent interest in personality.

Residuary bequest. A gift of all the remainder of the testator’s personal estate, after payment of debts and legacies, etc.

Specific bequest. One whereby the testator gives to the legatee all his property of a certain class or kind; as all his pure personality.

Bera. Also barat. A warrant or patent of dignity or privilege given by an Oriental monarch.

Berblage /bárbiyáj/. A rent paid for the pasturing of sheep.

Bernet. In Saxon law, burning; the crime of house burning, now called “arson.”

Bernstein test. Form of blood test used in determining child’s paternity and predicated on 4 blood types.

Berry, or bury. A villa or seat of habitation of a nobleman; a dwelling or mansion house; a sanctu-ary.

Bertillon system /bártiýón sístam/. A method of anthropometry (q.v.), once used for the identification of criminals and other persons, consisting of the taking and recording of a system of numerous, minute, and uniform measurements of various parts of the human body, absolutely and in relation to each other, the facial, and other angles, and of any eccentricities or abnormalities noticed in the individual.

Bes. Lat. In the Roman law, a division of the as, or pound, consisting of eight unciae, or duodecimal parts, and amounting to two-thirds of the as. 2 Bl.Comm. 462 note m. Two-thirds of an inheritance. Eight per cent. interest.

Besayel, besael, besayle /béséyl/. In old English law, a writ which lay where a great-grandfather died seized of lands and tenements in fee-simple, and on the day of his death a stranger abated, or entered and kept out the heir. 3 Bl.Comm. 186.

Beseech. To entreat; to implore.

Besides. In addition to; moreover; also; likewise.

Besoin /basóyn/básówm/. Fr. Need.

Besot /básóit/. To stupefy, to make dull or senseless, to make to dote; and “to dote” is to be delirious, silly, or insane.
Best. Of the highest quality; of the greatest usefulness for the purpose intended. Most desirable, suitable, useful, or satisfactory. For example: the "best bid" of interest by a prospective depositary of school funds would not necessarily be the highest bid, but, looking to the solvency of the bidder, the bond tendered, and all the circumstances surrounding the transaction, the safety and preservation of the school fund, the "best bid" might be the lowest bid.

Best evidence. Primary evidence, as distinguished from secondary; original, as distinguished from substitutionary; the best and highest evidence of which the nature of the case is susceptible, not the highest or strongest evidence which the nature of the thing to be proved admits of. A written instrument is itself always regarded as the primary or best possible evidence of its existence and contents; a copy, or the recollection of a witness, would be secondary evidence. "Best evidence" or "primary evidence" includes that evidence which is available to a party and procurable under the existing situation, and all evidence falling short of such standard, and which in its nature suggests there is better evidence of the same fact, is "secondary evidence." See Best evidence rule; Original document rule; Primary evidence.

Best evidence rule. The "best evidence rule" prohibits the introduction into evidence of secondary evidence unless it is shown that original document has been lost or destroyed or is beyond jurisdiction of court without fault of the offering party; if original document is lost, then secondary evidence is properly admissible. State v. Stephens, Mo.App., 556 S.W.2d 722, 723. Fed.R.Evid. 1002 states the basic rule as follows: "To prove the content of a writing, recording, or photograph, the original writing, recording, or photograph is required, except as otherwise provided in these rules or by Act of Congress." As to what constitutes an "original writing", see Original.

Bestiality. A sexual connection between a human being and an animal. State v. Poole, 59 Ariz. 44, 122 P.2d 415, 416. At common law the term "crime against nature" embraced both "sodomy" and "bestiality". See Sodomy.

Bestow. To give, grant, confer, or impart; not necessarily limited in meaning to "devise."

Best use. In eminent domain, the value of property considering its optimum use at a given time and hence the money which should be awarded for such governmental taking; used commonly as "highest and best use".

Bet. An agreement between two or more persons that a sum of money or other valuable thing, to which all jointly contribute, shall become the sole property of one or some of them on the happening in the future of an event at present uncertain, or according as a question disputed between them is settled in one way or the other. A contract by which two or more parties agree that a sum of money, or other thing, shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. See Wager; a term generally synonymous with bet. See also Betting book; Betting slips.

Betray. Act of delivering up to an enemy something of value. To divulge a matter in breach of a confidence. To deceive, seduce or lead astray. A "betrayal," as of a professional secret on the part of a physician, signifies a wrongful disclosure in violation of the trust imposed by the patient. See Treason.

Betrothed /bətroʊd/. One who has exchanged promises to marry. The term may be synonymous with "intended wife." See also Engagement.

Betrothment, betrothal. Mutual promise of marriage; the pledging of troth; a mutual promise or contract between a man and woman competent to make it, to marry at a future time.

Better Business Bureau. Local, business-supported organizations that promote good business practices, receive complaints about specific businesses, and provide consumers with information about specific firms. The local bureaus are loosely affiliated with a national bureau.

Better equity. See Equity.

Betterment. An improvement put upon a property which enhances its value more than mere replacement, maintenance, or repairs. The improvement may be either temporary or permanent. Also applied to denote the additional value which a property acquires in consequence of some public improvement, as laying out or widening a street, etc. See also Improvement.

Betterment acts. Statutes which provide that a bona fide occupant of real estate making lasting improvements in good faith shall have a lien upon the estate recovered by the real owner to the extent that his improvements have increased the value of the land. Also called "occupying claimant acts."

Betting. Act of placing a bet or wager. See Bet; Gambling; Par-mutuel betting; wager.

Betting book. A book kept for registering bets on the result of a race as operated on race track. In a broader sense, the "betting book" is that book which enables the professional bettor to carry on his business, and to promote a race, and it includes the book, the making book and the bookmaker.

Betting slips. Part of gambling paraphernalia consisting of papers on which numbers or names of dogs or horses to be bet are written and which constitutes evidence for prosecution of illegal gaming.

Between. A space which separates. Strictly applicable only with reference to two things, but this may be understood as including cases in which a number of things are discriminated collectively as two wholes, or as taken in pairs, or where one thing is set off against a number of others. In re McShane's Will, 158 Misc. 777, 286 N.Y.S. 680, 682. Sometimes used synonymously with "among". In re Moore's Estate, 157 Pa.Super. 296, 43 A.2d 359. As a measure or indication of distance, this word has the effect of excluding the two termini. If an act is to be done "between" two certain days, it must be performed before the commencement of the latter day. In computing the time in such a case, both the days named are to be excluded.
Bewareed. Eng. Expended. Before the Britons and Saxons had introduced the general use of money, they traded chiefly by exchange of wares.

Beyond a reasonable doubt. In evidence means fully satisfied, entirely convinced, satisfied to a moral certainty; and phrase is the equivalent of the words clear, precise and indubitable. In criminal case, the accused's guilt must be established "beyond a reasonable doubt," which means that facts proven must, by virtue of their probative force, establish guilt.

Beyond control. Anything or any person who, in relationship to another person is out of reach of the latter, either physically, legally or morally; for example, a child who has reached his majority is beyond the legal control of his parents. See also Act of God.

Beyond the seas. Beyond the limits of the United States. In England, an expression to indicate that a person was outside the United Kingdom. The Limitation Act of 1939 abolished the old procedure whereby a defendant's absence beyond the seas suspended the operation of the Statutes of Limitations.

B.F. An abbreviation for bonum factum, a good or proper act, deed, or decree; signifies "approved."

BIA. Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Bianually. Twice a year; semi-annually.

Bias /bā'ēsə/. Inclination; bent; prepossession; a preconceived opinion; a predisposition to decide a cause or an issue in a certain way, which does not leave the mind perfectly open to conviction. To incline to one side. Condition of mind, which sways judgment and renders judge unable to exercise his functions impartially in particular case. As used in law regarding disqualification of judge, refers to mental attitude or disposition of the judge toward a party to the litigation, and not to any views that he may entertain regarding the subject matter involved. State ex rel. Mitchell v. Sage Stores Co., 157 Kan. 622, 143 P.2d 652, 655.

Actual bias consists in the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror which satisfies the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that the juror cannot try the issues impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging.

See also Average man test; Discrimination; Prejudice.

Bible. See Family Bible.

Bicameral system /bākə'mərəl sistəm/. A term applied by Jeremy Bentham to the division of a legislative body into two chambers, as in the United States government (Senate and House).

Bld. An offer by an intending purchaser to pay a designated price for property which is about to be sold at auction. An offer to perform a contract for work and labor or supplying materials or goods at a specified price. Public contracts are frequently awarded on basis of submitted bids. See also Invitation to bid; Let; Lowest responsible bidder; Open bid; Sealed bid.

Term may also refer to application for another job by an employee.

Best bid. One that is not necessarily the lowest, but rather fits the best interests of the issuer of the bid; taken into consideration is the solvency of the bidder, quality of his work, reputation, etc.

Bidder. One who makes a bid. One who offers to pay a specified price for an article offered for sale at a public auction or to perform a certain contract for a specified price. As to "Responsible bidder" see that title.

Biddings. Offers of a designated price for goods or other property put up for sale at auction.

Bidding up. Raising the price for an item being sold at an auction by a series of bids, each higher than the other. If such successive bids are made collusively by persons with an interest in raising the final bid, such practice is unlawful.

Bid in. Property sold at auction is said to be "bid in" by the owner or an incumbrancer or some one else who is interested in it, when he attends the sale and makes the successful bid.

Bid off. One is said to "bid off" a thing when he bids for it at an auction sale, and it is knocked down to him in immediate succession to the bid and as a consequence of it.

By-bidding. In the law relating to sales by auction, this term is equivalent to "puffing." The practice consists in making fictitious bids for the property, under a secret arrangement with the owner or auctioneer, for the purpose of misleading and stimulating other persons who are bidding in good faith.

Competitive bidding. Bids which are submitted as the result of public notice and advertising of an intended sale or purchase.

Letting or awarding of bids. See Let.

Open bid. Offer to perform a contract together with the price, but with right to reduce the price to meet price quoted by others for same job.

Sealed bid. One submitted under seal, and which is not to be opened until a specified time at which all bids are to be opened and compared. Commonly required on construction contracts, to assure independence of bidding.

Upset bid. A bid made after a judicial sale, but before the successful bid at the sale has been confirmed, larger or better than such successful bid, and made for the purpose of upsetting the sale and securing to the "upset bidder" the privilege of taking the property at his bid or competing at a new sale.

Bid and asked. Price quotation for securities that are not frequently traded or are traded on the over-the-counter market. The bid quotation is the highest price a prospective buyer is willing to pay; the asked quotation is the lowest price the seller is willing to sell for.

Bid bond. Type of bond required in public construction projects which must be filed at the time of the bid and which protects the public agency in the event that the bidder refuses to enter into a contract after the award to him or withdraws his bid before the award. A type of indemnity bond.
Bid price. In market exchanges, the price a buyer is willing to pay, as contrasted with the price at which a seller is willing to sell; called the "ask price". Also, the amount specified in a bid as the amount for which the bidder will perform the work or buy the property.

Bienes /biˈʝeːnəs/. In Spanish law, goods; property of every description, including real as well as personal property; all things (not being persons) which may serve for the uses of man.

Bienes comunes. Common property; those things which, not being the private property of any person, are open to the use of all, such as the air, rain, water, the sea and its beaches.

Bienes gananciales. A species of community in property enjoyed by husband and wife, the property being divisible equally between them on the dissolution of the marriage; does not include what they held as their separate property at the time of contracting the marriage.

Bienes publicos. Those things which, as to property, pertain to the people or nation, and, as to their use, to the individuals of the territory or district, such as rivers, shores, ports, and public roads.

Biennial /bɪˈɲɛn(i)l/. Occurring every two years.

Biennial session. The regular session of most State legislatures, usually held in odd-numbered years; gradually being supplanted by annual sessions.

Biennium /bɪˈɲɪnɪəm/. A two-year period; the period for which appropriations are made in many State legislatures.

Biens /bɪˈɲɛnz/ /bɪˈɲɛn(z)/. In old English law, property of every description, except estates of freehold and inheritance.

In French law, this term includes all kinds of property, real and personal. Biens are divided into biens meubles, movable property; and biens immeubles, immovable property. The distinction between movable and immovable property is recognized by the continental jurists, and gives rise, in the civil as well as in the common law, to many important distinctions as to rights and remedies.

Bifurcated trial /bɪˈfɜːrkəd triˈɔl/. Trial of issues separately, e.g. guilt and punishment, or guilt and sanity, in criminal trial.

The trial of the liability issue in a personal injury or wrongful death case separate from and prior to trial of the damages question. The advantage of so doing is that if the liability issue is determined in defendant's favor there is no need to try the damages question, which can be an involved one entailing expensive expert witnesses and other proof.

Bigamia /bɪˈɡæmiə/. The criminal offense of willfully and knowingly contracting a second marriage (or going through the form of a second marriage) while the first marriage, to the knowledge of the offender, is still subsisting and undissolved. The state of a man who has two wives, or of a woman who has two husbands, living at the same time.

A married person is guilty of bigamy, a misdemeanor, if he contracts or purports to contract another marriage, unless at the time of the subsequent marriage: (a) the actor believes that the prior spouse is dead; or (b) the actor and the prior spouse have been living apart for five consecutive years throughout which the prior spouse was not known by the actor to be alive; or (c) a Court has entered a judgment purporting to terminate or annul any prior dissolving marriage, and the actor does not know that judgment to be invalid; or (d) the actor reasonably believes that he is legally eligible to remarry. Model Penal Code, § 230.1.

In the canon law, the term denoted the offense committed by an ecclesiastical who married two wives successively. It might be committed either by marrying a second wife after the death of a first or by marrying a widow.

See also Polygamy.

Big board. A popular term referring to the board showing the current prices of securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big eight. The eight largest public accounting (CPA) firms listed in alphabetical order.

Bigot. A prejudiced person; or one that is wedded to an opinion in matters of religion, race, etc.

Bilagines /bɪˈlɑːɡiːnəs/. By-laws of towns; municipal laws.

Bilan. A term used in Louisiana, derived from the French. A book in which bankers, merchants, and traders write a statement of all they owe and all that is due them; a balance-sheet.

Bilancis deferendas /baˈlantʃiʃɪəs deferəndəs/. In English law, an obsolete writ addressed to a corporation for the carrying of weights to such a haven, there to weigh the wool anciently licensed for transportation.

Bilateral contract /bɪˈlɪətərəl ˈkɒŋtrəkt/. A term, used originally in the civil law, but now generally adopted, denoting a contract in which both the contracting parties are bound to fulfill obligations reciprocally towards each other; as a contract of sale, where one becomes bound to deliver the thing sold, and the other to pay the price of it. A contract executory on both sides, and one which includes both rights and duties on each side. Contract formed by the exchange of promises in which the promise of one party is consideration supporting the promise of the other as contrasted with a unilateral contract which is formed by the exchange of a promise for an act. Antonucci v. Stevens Dodge, Inc., 73 Misc.2d 173, 340 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982.
Bilboes. A device used for punishment at sea, similar to the stocks (q.v.) on land.

Biline. A word used by Briton in the sense of "collateral." En line biline, in the collateral line.

Bilinguis /baylingwas/. Of a double language or tongue; that can speak two languages. A term formerly applied to a jury composed partly of Englishmen and partly of foreigners, which, by the English law, an alien party to a suit was, in certain cases, entitled to; more commonly called a "jury de mediate lingua." 3 Bl.Comm. 360.

Bill. As a legal term, this word has many meanings and applications, the most important of which are set forth below:

Bill of rights. A formal and emphatic legislative assertion and declaration of popular rights and liberties usually promulgated upon a change of government; e.g. the famous Bill of Rights in English history. Also the summary of the rights and liberties of the people, or of the principles of constitutional law deemed essential and fundamental, contained in many of the American state constitutions. Hamill v. Hawks, C.C.A.Okl., 58 F.2d 41, 47. That portion of Constitution guaranteeing rights and privileges to the individual; i.e. first ten Amendments of U.S. Constitution.

Commercial law. A written statement of the terms of a contract, or specification of the items of a transaction or of a demand. Also, a general name for any item of indebtedness, whether receivable or payable; accounts for goods sold, services rendered, or work done. As a verb, as generally and customarily used in commercial transactions, "bill" is synonymous with "charge" or "invoice." George M. Jones Co. v. Canadian Nat. R. Co., D.C.Mich., 14 F.2d 852, 855. See also Commercial paper, infra.

Bill-book. A book in which an account of bills of exchange and promissory notes, whether payable or receivable, is stated.

Bill-head. A printed form on which merchants and traders make out their bills and render accounts to their customers.

Bill of lading. See Bill of lading, infra.

Bill of parcels. A statement sent to the buyer of goods, along with the goods, exhibiting in detail the items composing the parcel and their several prices, to enable him to detect any mistake or omission; an invoice (q.v.).

Bill of sale. In contracts, a written agreement, formerly limited to one under seal, by which one person assigns or transfers his right to or interest in goods and personal chattels to another. Legal document which conveys title from seller to buyer.

Bill payable. In a merchant's accounts, all bills which he has accepted, and promissory notes which he has made, are called "bills payable," and are entered in a ledger account under that name, and recorded in a book bearing the same title. See Account (Account payable).

Bill receivable. In a merchant's accounts, all notes, drafts, checks, etc., payable to him, or of which he is to receive the proceeds at a future date, are called "bills receivable," and are entered in a ledger-account under that name, and also noted in a book bearing the same title. See Account (Account receivable).

Bill rendered. A bill of items rendered by a creditor to his debtor; an "account rendered," as distinguished from "an account stated."

Grand bill of sale. In old English law, the name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. An expression which is understood to refer to the instrument whereby a ship was originally transferred from the builder to the owner, or first purchaser.

Commercial paper. A promissory obligation for the payment of money.

Bill broker. Middleman who negotiates purchase or sale of commercial paper.

Bill of credit. A bill or promissory note issued by the government, upon its faith and credit, designed to circulate in the community as money. See Federal reserve notes; Treasury bill.

In mercantile law, a license or authority given in writing from one person to another, very common among merchants, bankers, and those who travel, empowering a person to receive or take up money of their correspondents abroad. See also Letter of credit.

Bill of exchange. A three party instrument in which first party draws an order for the payment of a sum certain on a second party for payment to a third party at a definite future time. Same as "draft" under U.C.C. A check is a demand bill of exchange. See also Advance bill; Banker's acceptance; Blank bill; Clean bill; Draft; Time bill.

Foreign bill of exchange. A bill of exchange drawn in one country upon another country not governed by the same homogeneous laws, or not governed throughout by the same municipal laws. A bill of exchange drawn in one of the United States upon a person residing in another state is a foreign bill.

Common law pleading and practice.

Bill of costs. A certified, itemized statement of the amount of costs in an action or suit.

Bill of evidence. Stenographer's transcript of testimony heard at trial which may be considered on appeal as bill of exceptions. Spencer v. Commonwealth, 250 Ky. 370, 63 S.W.2d 288.

Bill of exceptions. A formal statement in writing of the objections or exceptions taken by a party during the trial of a cause to the decisions, rulings, or instructions of the trial judge, stating the objection, with the facts and circumstances on which it is founded, and, in order to attest its accuracy, signed by the judge; the object being to put the controverted rulings or decisions upon the record for the information of the appellate court. Bills of exceptions have been eliminated in civil appeals in jurisdictions which have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure tracking Fed.Rules of Civil Proc. in favor of a straight appeal with no need to claim exception after making objection at trial; e.g. Mass.R.Civ. Proc. 46.

Bill of particulars. A written statement or specification of the particulars of the demand for which an action at law is brought, or of a defendant's set-off against such demand (including dates, sums, and items in detail), furnished by one of the parties to the other, either voluntarily or in compliance with a judge's order for that purpose. It is designed to aid the defendant in interposing the proper answer and in preparing for trial, by giving him detailed information regarding the cause of action stated in the complaint. In jurisdictions which have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure, the bill of particulars has been replaced by various discovery devices (Fed.R. Civ.P. 26 et seq.) and by motion for more definite statement (Fed.R. Civ.P. 12(e)). See however Criminal law below with respect to bill of particulars in criminal cases.

Contracts. An obligation; a deed, whereby the obligor acknowledges himself to owe to the obligee a certain sum of money or some other thing.

Bill obligatory. A bond absolute for the payment of money. It is called also a "single bill," and differs from a promissory note only in having a seal. See Bill penal.

Bill of debt. An ancient term including promissory notes and bonds for the payment of money.

Bill penal. A written obligation by which a debtor acknowledges himself indebted in a certain sum, and binds himself for the payment thereof, in a larger sum, called a "penalty." Bonds with conditions have superseded such bills in modern practice. They are sometimes called bills obligatory, and are properly so called; but every bill obligatory is not a bill penal.

Bill single. A written promise to pay to a person or persons named a stated sum at a stated time, without any condition. When under seal, it is sometimes called a "bill obligatory" (q.v.). It differs from a "bill penal" (q.v.) in that it expresses no penalty.

Criminal law.

Bill of attainder. Legislative acts, no matter what their form, that apply either to named individuals or to easily ascertifiable members of a group in such a way as to inflict punishment on them without a judicial trial. United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 448-49, 85 S.Ct. 1707, 1715, 14 L.Ed. 484, 492; United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303, 315, 66 S.Ct. 1075, 1078, 90 L.Ed. 1252. An act is a "bill of attainder" when the punishment is death and a "bill of pains and penalties" when the punishment is less severe; both kinds of punishment fall within the scope of the constitutional prohibition. U.S.Const. Art. I, Sec. 9, Cl. 3 (as to Congress); Art. I, Sec. 10 (as to state legislatures).

Bill of indemnity. See Bill of indemnity, infra.

Bill of indictment. A formal written document accusing a person or persons named of having committed a felony or misdemeanor, lawfully laid before a grand jury for their action upon it. See Indictment; Presentment.

Bill of pains and penalties. See Bill of attainder, supra.

Bill of particulars. Form of discovery in which the prosecution sets forth the time, place, manner and means of the commission of the crime as alleged in complaint or indictment. Fed.R.Crim.P. 7. The purpose of a "bill of particulars" is to give notice to the accused of the offenses charged in the bill of indictment so that he may prepare a defense, avoid surprise, or intelligently raise pleas of double jeopardy and the bar of the statute of limitations; it was not designed to perform the function of a discovery device. Com. v. Mervin, 230 Pa.Super. 552, 326 A.2d 602, 605.

Equity pleading and practice. The initial pleading of plaintiff or petitioner in equity action in contrast to declaration (complaint) in law actions. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, however, bill has been replaced by complaint for both equitable and legal actions because of merger of law and equity. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

In England, in the ancient practice of the court of king's bench, the usual and orderly method of beginning an action was by a bill, or original bill, or plaint. This was a written statement of the plaintiff's cause of action, like a declaration or complaint, and always alleged a trespass as the ground of it, in order to give the court jurisdiction. 3 Bl.Comm. 43.

Bill for a new trial. A bill in equity in which the specific relief asked is an injunction against the execution of a judgment rendered at law, and a new trial in the action on account of some fact which would render it inequitable to enforce the judgment, but which was not available to the party on the trial at law, or which he was prevented from presenting by fraud or accident, without concurrent fraud or negligence on his own part. Superseded by motion for new trial in jurisdictions with Rules of Civil Procedure (Rule 59).

Bill for foreclosure. One which is filed by a mortgagee against the mortgagor, for the purpose of having the estate sold, thereby to obtain the sum mortgaged on the premises, with interest and costs. Bill in aid of execution. A bill to set aside encumbrances or conveyances therein specified as fraudulent. Pape v. Pareti, 315 Ill.App. 1, 42 N.E.2d 361, 364.

Bill in nature of a bill of review. A bill in equity, to obtain a re-examination and reversal of a decree, filed by one who was not a party to the original suit, nor bound by the decree.

Bill in nature of a bill of revivor. Where, on the abatement of a suit, there is such a transmission of the interest of the incapacitated party that the title to it, as well as the person entitled, may be the subject of litigation in a court of chancery, the suit cannot be continued by a mere bill of revivor, but an original bill upon which the title may be litigated must be filed. This is called a "bill in the nature of a bill of revivor." It is founded on privity of estate or title by the act of the party. And the nature and operation of the whole act by which the privity is created is open to controversy.

Bill in nature of a supplemental bill. A bill filed when new parties, with new interests, arising from events happening since the suit was commenced, are brought before the court; such differs from a supplemental bill, which is properly applicable to those cases only where the same parties or the same interests remain before the court.

Bill in nature of interpleader. See Bill of interpleader.
Bill of certiorari. A bill, the object of which is to remove a suit in equity from some inferior court to the court of chancery, or some other superior court of equity, on account of some alleged incompetency of the inferior court, or some injustice in its proceedings. As an appellate vehicle, it has been replaced by appeal in jurisdictions which have adopted Rules of Appellate Procedure in civil cases. See Certiorari.

Bill of conformity. One filed by an executor or administrator, who finds the affairs of the deceased so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of chancery. This bill is filed against the creditors, generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted, and procuring a final decree settling the order of payment of the assets.

Bill of discovery. A proceeding by a party against an adversary for discovery of facts within adversary's knowledge, or discovery of documents, writings, or other things within his possession or power, to be used either offensively or defensively in a pending or contemplated action. In aid of action at law is equitable remedy to enable litigant to obtain, prior to trial, such information as is in exclusive possession of adverse party and is necessary to establishment of complainant's case. Superseded by discovery rules in jurisdictions that have adopted Fed.Rules of Civil Proc. (Rules 26-37).

Bill of information. In England, where a suit is instituted on behalf of the crown or government, or of those of whom it has the custody by virtue of its prerogative, or whose rights are under its particular protection, the matter of complaint is offered to the court by way of information by the attorney or solicitor general, instead of by petition. Where a suit immediately concerns the crown or government alone, the proceeding is purely by way of information, but, where it does not do so immediately, a relator is appointed, who is answerable for costs, etc., and, if he is interested in the matter in connection with the crown or government, the proceeding is by information and bill. Informations differ from bills in little more than name and form, and the same rules are substantially applicable to both. 3 Bl.Comm. 261.

Bill of interpleader. The name of a bill in equity to obtain a settlement of a question of right to money or other property adversely claimed, in which the party filing the bill has no interest, although it may be in his hands, by compelling such adverse claimants to litigate the right or title between themselves, and relieve him from liability or litigation. Superseded by Rule 22, "Interpleader," in those jurisdictions that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure. See Interpleader.

Bill of peace. One which is filed when a person has a right which may be controverted by various persons, at different times, and by different actions.

Bill of review. Proceeding in equity brought for purpose of reversing or correcting prior judgment of trial court after judgment has become final. Rogers v. Searle, Tex.Civ.App., 533 S.W.2d 433, 437. It is in the nature of a writ of error. A "bill of review," or a bill in the nature of a bill of review, are of three classes; those for error appearing on the face of the record, those for newly discovered evidence, and those for fraud impeaching the original transaction. Such bills are peculiar to courts of equity. In states where Rules of Civil Procedure are applicable, such bill is replaced by motion for relief from judgment or order (Rule 60).

Bill of revivor. One which is brought to continue a suit which has abated before its final consummation as, for example, by death, or marriage of a female plaintiff.

Bill of revivor and supplement. One which is a compound of a supplemental bill and bill of revivor, and not only continues the suit, which has abated by the death of the plaintiff, or the like, but supplies any defects in the original bill arising from subsequent events, so as to entitle the party to relief on the whole merits of his case.

Bill quia timet. A bill invoking the aid of equity "because he fears," that is, because the complainant apprehends an injury to his property rights or interests, from the fault or neglect of another. Such bills are entertained to guard against possible or prospective injuries, and to preserve the means by which existing rights may be protected from future or contingent violations; differing from injunctions, in that the latter correct past and present or imminent and certain injuries. De Carli v. O'Brien, 150 Or. 35, 41 P.2d 411, 416.

Bill to carry a decree into execution. One which is filed when, from the neglect of parties or some other cause, it may become impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court.

Bill to perpetuate testimony. A bill in equity filed in order to procure the testimony of witnesses to be taken as to some matter not at the time before the courts, but which is likely at some future time to be in litigation. Superseded by Rule of Civil Procedure 27.

Bill to quiet possession and title. Also called a bill to remove a cloud on title (q.v.), and though sometimes classed with bills quia timet or for the cancelation of void instruments, they may be resorted to in other cases when the complainant's title is clear and there is a cloud to be removed.

Bill to suspend a decree. One brought to avoid or suspend a decree under special circumstances.

Bill to take testimony de bene esse. One which is brought to take the testimony of witnesses to a fact material to the prosecution of a suit at law which is actually commenced, where there is good cause to fear that the testimony may otherwise be lost before the time of trial. Superseded by Rule of Civil Procedure 27.

Cross-bill. One which is brought by a defendant in a suit against a plaintiff in or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. It is a bill brought by a defendant against a plaintiff, or other parties in a former bill depending, touching the matter in question in that bill. It is usually brought either to obtain a necessary discovery of facts in aid of the defense to the original bill, or to obtain full relief to all parties in reference to the matters of the original bill. It is to be treated as a mere auxiliary suit. A species of pleading, used for the purpose of obtaining a discovery necessary to the defense, or to obtain some relief founded on the collateral claims of the party defendant to the original suit. Such bill has been superseded by a crossclaim under Fed.R. Civil P. 13. Also, if a bill of exchange or promissory note be given in consideration of another bill or notice, it is called a “cross” or “counter” bill or note.

Supplemental bill. A bill to bring before the court matters arising after the filing of the original bill or not then known to the complainant. The function of this bill has been replaced by supplemental pleadings permitted under Fed.R. Civil P. 15. See Bill in nature of a supplemental bill.

Legislation. The draft of a proposed law from the time of its introduction in a legislative house through all the various stages in both houses. Once introduced, a federal bill may be considered in any session of a Congress, but it dies at the end of a Congress, and it must be reintroduced as a new bill if a succeeding Congress is to consider it. The form of a proposed law before it is enacted into law by vote of the legislative body. An “Act” is the appropriate term for it after it has been acted on by, and passed by, the legislature. See also Marking up; Omnibus bill.

Clean bill. Bill coming out of committee in amended or redrafted form, making it essentially a new bill.

Engrossed bill. Bill in final form, ready to be voted on by legislature.

Enrolled bill. Bill that has been passed and forwarded to President or Governor for signature or veto.

Private bill. One dealing only with a matter of private personal or local interest. All legislative bills which have for their object some particular or private interest are so termed, as distinguished from such as are for the benefit of the whole community, which are termed “public bills.”

Revenue bill. See Appropriations bill, supra.

Maritime law.

Bill of adventure. A written certificate by a merchant or the master or owner of a ship, to the effect that the property and risk in goods shipped on the vessel in his own name belong to another person, to whom he is accountable for the proceeds alone.

Bill of entry. Form filled out by importer for use of customs officer; describes goods, their value, etc. Permits goods to be unloaded from ship.

Bill of health. An official certificate, given by the authorities of a port from which a vessel clears, to the master of the ship, showing the state of the port, as respects the public health, at the time of sailing, and exhibited to the authorities of the port which the vessel next makes, in token that she does not bring disease. If the bill alleges that no contagious or infectious disease existed, it is called a “clean” bill; if it admits that one was suspected or anticipated, or that one actually prevailed, it is called a “touched” or a “foul” bill.

Bill of sight. When an importer of goods is ignorant of their exact quantity or quality, so that he cannot make a perfect entry of them, he may give to the customs officer a written description of them, according to the best of his information and belief. This is called a “bill of sight.”

Negotiable instruments. See Commercial paper, supra.

Billa /bɪlə/. L. Lat. A bill; an original bill.

Billa cassetur, or quod billa cassetur /kwəd bɪlə kəsiˈdər/. (That the bill be quashed.) The form of the judgment rendered for a defendant on a plea in abatement, where the proceeding is by bill; that is, where the suit is commenced by capias, and not by original writ.

Billa excambili /bɪlə ɪksæmbɪˈbiː/.. A bill of exchange.

Bill of address. See Address.

Bill of attainder. See Attainder; Bill (Criminal law).

Bill of indemnity. A law under which a public official is protected from liability in performance of his official acts including his failure to take his official oath. An initial pleading by which the plaintiff seeks to require another (e.g., insurance company) to discharge his liability to a third person.

In English law, an act of parliament, passed every session until 1869, but discontinued in and after that year, as having been rendered unnecessary by the passing of the promissory oaths act, 1868, for the relief of those who had unwittingly or unavoidably neglected to take the necessary oaths, etc., required for the purpose of qualifying them to hold their respective offices.

Bill of lading. Document evidencing receipt of goods for shipment issued by person engaged in business of transporting or forwarding goods and it includes airbill, U.C.C. § 1–201(5). An instrument in writing signed by a carrier or his agent, describing the freight so as to identify it, stating the name of the consignor, the terms of the contract for carriage, and agreeing or directing that the freight be delivered to the order or assigns of a specified person at a specified place. It is receipt for goods, contract for their carriage, and is documentary evidence of title to goods. Schwalb v. Erie R. Co., 161 Misc. 743, 293 N.Y.S. 842, 846.
Bills in a set. A series of bills of lading each bearing a number and providing that a certain bill is valid only if goods have not been delivered against another bill. U.C.C. § 7–304.

Common law. In common law, the written evidence of a contract for the carriage and delivery of goods sent by sea for a certain freight. A written memorandum, given by the person in command of a merchant vessel, acknowledging the receipt on board the ship of certain specified goods, in good order or “apparent good order,” which he undertakes, in consideration of the payment of freight, to deliver in like good order (dangers of the sea excepted) at a designated place to the consignee therein named or to his assigns.

Foul bill. Bill of lading containing notation that goods received by carrier were defective.

Negotiable bill. One which by its terms calls for goods to be delivered to bearer or to order of named persons, or where recognized in overseas trade, if it runs to named persons or assigns. U.C.C. § 7–104(1)(a)(b).

Non-negotiable bill. Document of title in which goods are consigned to named persons. U.C.C. § 7–104(2).

Ocean bill. A negotiable bill of lading used in shipment by water.

On board bill. Bill of lading which shows that loading has been completed.

Order bill. One in which it is stated that goods are consigned to order of any person named therein. See Negotiable bill, supra; also, Order bill of lading.

Overseas bill. Where the contract contemplates overseas shipment and contains a term C.I.F. or C. & F. or F.O.B. vessel, the seller unless otherwise agreed must obtain a negotiable bill of lading stating that the goods have been loaded on board or, in the case of a term C.I.F. or C. & F., received for shipment. U.C.C. § 2–323(1).

Straight bill. One in which it is stated that goods are consigned to a specified person.

Through bill. One by which a railroad contracts to transport over its own line for a certain distance carloads of merchandise or stock, there to deliver the same to its connecting lines to be transported to the place of destination at a fixed rate per carload for the whole distance. Embodying undertaking to be performed in part by persons acting as agents for issuer. U.C.C. § 7–302.

Bill of lading acts. The principal acts governing bills of lading are Article 7 of the Uniform Commercial Code, the Federal Bills of Lading Act (49 U.S.C.A. §§ 81–126), and the Carmack Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act (49 U.S.C.A. § 20(11). See also Harter Act.

Bill of mortality. A written statement or account of the number of deaths which have occurred in a certain district within a given time.

Bill of pains and penalties. Statutory provision for punishment without judicial determination of guilt similar to bill of attainder except that punishment is less severe. Prohibited by U.S.Const., Art. I, § 9, cl. 3 (Congress), § 10 (States).

Bill of rights. First ten Amendments to U.S. Constitution. See also Bill.

Bill quia timet /bɪl kwɪə timət/. See Quia timet.

A single warrant authorizing the search of more than one area or the seizure of everything found at a given location without specific authorization in the warrant, the latter being in violation of the requirements of the Fourth Amendment to U.S. Const. Marcus v. Search Warrants etc., 367 U.S. 717, 81 S.Ct. 1708, 6 L.Ed.2d 1127.

Blank indorsement. The indorsement of a bill of exchange or promissory note, by merely writing the name of the indorser, without mentioning any person to whom the bill or note is to be paid; called “blank,” because a blank or space is left over it for the insertion of the name of the indorsee, or of any subsequent holder. Otherwise called an indorsement “in blank.” Such indorsement causes an instrument, otherwise payable to order, to become payable to bearer and negotiable by delivery alone. U.C.C. § 3-204(2).

Blanks. A kind of white money (value 8d.), coined by Henry V in those parts of France which were then subject to England; forbidden to be current in that realm by 2 Hen. VI, c. 9.

Blank shares. “Series shares” which may vary in the relative rights and preferences as between different series but which may be fixed in articles of incorporation.

Blasphemy /blásfamíy/. Any oral or written reproach maliciously cast upon God, His name, attributes, or religion. In general, blasphemy may be described as consisting in speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. It is purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to Him as the intelligent creator, governor, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being, as "calumny" usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual. It is a willful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence of God by denying His existence, or His attributes as an intelligent creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in Him as such.

In English law, blasphemy is the offense of speaking matter relating to God, Jesus Christ, the Bible, or the Book of Common Prayer, intended to wound the feelings of mankind or to excite contempt and hatred against the church by law established, or to promote immorality.

Blended fund. In England, where a testator directs his real and personal estate to be sold, and disposes of the proceeds as forming one aggregate, this is called a "blended fund."

Blended price. As applied to milk, a price paid to producers based upon a pool average weighted by the volume of milk disposed of, according to different types of utilization. Queensboro Farm Products v. State, 175 Misc. 374, 24 N.Y.S.2d 413, 417.

Blind alley. Literally, a way from which exit is possible only by retracing the path of entry; fig., a no-win position, a dilemma.

Blind corner. Used to describe the configuration of buildings or other structures which prevent a driver approaching an intersection from being able to observe traffic coming in the direction of the intersecting way.

Blindcraft. A natural descriptive term identifying in a broad sense work of the blind, conveying the idea of the blindid performing deftly at any of the various skills or trades to which their talents are applied or leaving the suggestion of dexterity and skill of the blind as well as their handwork itself. San Francisco Ass'n for Blind v. Industrial Aid for Blind, D.C.Mo., 58 F.Supp. 995, 1001.

Blindness. Condition of one who is without sight either wholly or partially. Degrees are recognized for purpose of worker's compensation and social security benefits.

Block. A square or portion of a city or town inclosed by streets, whether partially or wholly occupied by buildings or containing only vacant lots. Also used synonymous with "square." The platted portion of a city surrounded by streets. The term need not, however, be limited to blocks platted as such, but may mean an area bounded on all sides by streets or avenues. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. City of Tulsa, Okl., C.C.A.Okl., 15 F.2d 960, 963. It must be surrounded on at least three sides by streets, which must be marked on the ground, and not simply indicated as such on a plat. See also Lot.

Large amount of stock or bonds sold as a unit.

Blockade. Action taken against enemy nation so as to isolate, obstruct and prevent communications, commerce, supplies, and persons from entering into or leaving such nation. Such blockades may be by sea, or land, or both.

Blockage. Recognition in the field of taxation of fact that in some instances a large block of stock cannot be marketed and turned into cash as readily as a few shares. Citizens Fidelity Bank & Trust Co. v. Reeves, Ky., 259 S.W.2d 432, 433. See Blockage rule.

Blockage rule. Process of determining value of large blocks of corporate stock for gift and estate tax purposes, based on the postulate that a large block of stock cannot be marketed as readily and as advantageously in price as can a few shares. Montclair Trust Co. v. Zink, Prerog., 141 N.J.Eq. 401, 57 A.2d 372, 378, 380. Application of this rule generally justifies a discount in the fair market value since the disposition of a large amount of stock at any one time may well depress the value of such shares in the market place.

Block-booking. The practice of licensing or offering for license one motion picture feature or group of features on condition that exhibitor will also license another feature or group of features released by distributor during a given period. U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, N. Y., 334 U.S. 131, 68 S.Ct. 915, 928, 92 L.Ed. 1260.

Bona fide error. Mistake made unintentionally; inadvertently; in good faith. Within meaning of Truth in Lending Act's exemption from liability for bona fide errors, "bona fide error" is error made in course of good-faith attempt at compliance with Act's requirements. Mirabal v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., C.A.Ill., 537 F.2d 871, 878.

Bona fide holder for value. An innocent or "bona fide holder for value" of negotiable paper is one who has taken it in good faith for a valuable consideration in the ordinary course of business and when it was not overdue. One who receives negotiable paper in payment of antecedent obligations without notice of prior equities. Under U.C.C. § 3-302, the requirements for a holder in due course are different from a mere bona fide holder for value. See Holder In due course.

Bona fide judgment creditor. One who in good faith, without fraud or collusion, recovers a judgment for money honestly due him.

Bona fide mortgage. Essential elements of status are good faith, valuable consideration, and absence of notice. Companoro v. Gondolfo, C.C.A.N.J., 60 F.2d 451, 452. To constitute "bona fide mortgage" there must be an absence of notice, and of fixed liability for the consideration. Cambridge Production Credit Ass'n v. Patrick, 140 Ohio St. 521, 45 N.E.2d 731, 735.

Bona fide possessor. One who not only supposes himself to be the true proprietor of the land, but who is ignorant that his title is contested by some other person claiming a better right to it.

Bona fide purchaser for value is one who, without notice of another's claim of right to, or equity in, property prior to his acquisition of title, has paid vendor a valuable consideration. Snuffin v. Mayo, 6 Wash.App. 525, 494 P.2d 497.

One who buys property or to whom a negotiable document of title is transferred in good faith and without notice of any defense or claim to the property or document. U.C.C. § 7-501. One who takes trust property for value and without notice of breach of trust and who is not knowingly part of an illegal transaction. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 284; Uniform Probate Code § 2-202(5).

Bulk transfer. Purchaser from transferee of bulk transfer who takes for value in good faith and without notice of any defect of non-compliance with law. U.C.C. § 6-110.

Investment securities. A purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of any adverse claim who takes delivery of a security in bearer form or of one in registered form issued to him or indorsed to him or in blank. U.C.C. § 8-302.

Bona fide sale. A completed transaction in which seller makes sale in good faith, for a valuable consideration without notice of any reason against the sale.

Attachment bond. See that title.

Bail bond. See Bail (Bail bond).

Bearer bond. See that title.

Bid bond. See that title.

Blanket bond. See that title.

Bond and mortgage. A species of security, consisting of a bond conditioned for the repayment of a loan of money, and a mortgage of realty to secure the performance of the stipulations of the bond.

Bond coupon. Part of bond which is cut and surrendered for payment of one of successive payments of interest. See Coupon bond.

Bond creditor. A creditor whose debt is secured by a bond.

Bond discount. The difference between the face amount or obligation of the bond and the current market price of such bond, if selling price is lower than market price. Claussen’s Inc. v. U. S., C.A.Ga., 469 F.2d 340, 345.

Bond dividend. See Dividend.

Bond for deed. See Bond for title, below.

Bond for title. An agreement to make title in the future on an executory or incomplete sale. Ingram v. Smith, 62 Ga.App. 335, 7 S.E.2d 922, 926. It is not a conveyance of legal title but only a contract to convey and may ripen into an equitable title upon payment of the consideration.

Bond issue. The totality of bonds issued at a given time. Delivery of instruments as covered by term. Vans Agnew v. Fort Myers Drainage Dist., C.C.A.Fla., 69 F.2d 244, 245.

Bond of state or local government. See Municipal bond.

Bond premium. The difference between the face amount or obligation of the bond and the selling price of such bond if the selling price is greater than the face amount.

Bottomry bond. Bond secured by mortgage of ships.

Callable bond. See Callable bonds.

Collateral trust bond. A bond secured by collateral deposited with a trustee. The collateral is often the stocks or bonds of companies controlled by the issuing company but may be other securities.

Completion bond. A form of surety or guaranty agreement which contains the promise of a third party, usually a bonding company, to complete or pay for the cost of completion of a construction contract if the construction contractor defaults. Bond given to insure public authority that contract once awarded will be completed as awarded within fixed period of time. Extruded Louver Corp. v. McNulty, 34 Misc.2d 566, 226 N.Y.S.2d 220, 224. See Contract bond; Performance bond; also, Miller Act.

Consolidated bond. Bond which is sufficiently large in face amount to retire two or more outstanding issues of bonds or securities.

Contract bond. A guarantee of the faithful performance of a construction contract and the payment of all material and labor costs incident thereto. A contract bond covering faithful performance is known as a “performance bond,” and one covering payment of labor and materials, a “payment bond.” See also Completion bond; Performance bond.

Convertible bond. Bond that can, at the option of the holder, be converted into stock.

Corporate bonds. See that title.

Cost bond. See Appeal bond, supra.

County bonds. See that title.

Coupon bond. Bond with interest coupons attached. The coupons are clipped as they come due and are presented by the holder for payment of interest.

Debenture bond. Bonds secured by general credit of government or corporation rather than by any specific property; i.e. bond which is not secured with collateral.

Deferred bonds. See that title.

Discount bond. See Bond discount.

Fidelity bond. Bond covering employer-business for loss due to embezzlement, larceny, or gross negligence by employees.

Fiduciary bond. See Fiduciary.

General average bond. See that title.

General obligation bonds. Bonds backed by general tax revenues.

Gold bond. Formerly, bond containing a clause which required payment of the bonded indebtedness in gold; such clause has since been prohibited. Norman v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 294 U.S. 240, 55 S.Ct. 407, 79 L.Ed. 885. Now bonds are dischargeable by payment in legal tender or money.

Government bond. Evidence of indebtedness issued by the government to finance its operations. Such bonds are backed solely by the credit of the government.

Guaranteed bond. A bond which has interest or principal, or both, guaranteed by a company other than the issuer.

Guaranty bond. Type of bond which combines the features of both the fidelity and surety bond and which is given to secure payment and performance.

Improvement bond. Type of bonds issued by a city, town or special authority to finance improvements within the district, with payment to be made only from the improvement fund.

Income bond. Bonds on which interest is payable only when earned and after payment of interest upon prior mortgages. In some cases unpaid interest on an income bond may accumulate as a claim against the corporation when the bond becomes due. An income bond may also be issued in lieu of preferred stock.

Indemnity bond. See that title.
Indeterminate bond. Callable bond with no set maturity date.

Industrial development bonds. Such bonds are issued by a municipality as a means of attracting private businesses. The bonds are marketed by the municipality and the proceeds used to build the private business facility. Commonly, the business leases the facility from the municipality for a total rent equal to the amount necessary to pay the interest and amortize the principal on the bonds.

Interest bond. Bond paid in lieu of interest due on other bonds.

Joint and several bond. A bond the principal and interest of which is guaranteed by two or more persons.

Joint bond. Bond executed by two or more obligors who must be joined in any action on such, as opposed to joint and several bond, on which any or all of obligors may be sued at the option of the obligee.

Judicial bonds. See that title.

Junior bond. Bonds which are subordinate in priority, in principal or interest to another issue.

Leasehold mortgage bond. A bond secured by a building constructed on leased real estate. This bond is subject to the compliance by the lessee (who issues the bond) with the terms of the lease; upon default in any of the terms of the lease the lessor of the leased real estate has priority over the holders of the leasehold bonds.

Liability bond. One which is intended to protect the assured from liability for damages or to protect the persons damaged by injuries occasioned by the assured as specified, when such liability should accrue, and be imposed by law, as by a court, as distinguished from an indemnity bond, whose purpose is only to indemnify the assured against actual loss by way of reimbursement for moneys paid or which must be paid.

License bond. The term “License Bond” is used interchangeably with “Permit Bond” to describe bonds required by state law, municipal ordinance, or by regulation as a condition precedent to the granting of a license to engage in a specified business or the grant of a permit to exercise a certain privilege.

Such bonds provide payment to the obligee for the loss or damage resulting from the operations permitted by law, ordinance or regulation, under which the bond is required and for violations by the licensee of the duties and obligations imposed upon him.

Mortgage bond. A bond secured by a mortgage on a property. The value of the property may or may not equal the value of the so-called mortgage bonds issued against it. See also Leasehold mortgage bond, supra.

Municipal bond. A bond issued by a state or a political subdivision, such as county, city, town or village. The term also designates bonds issued by such agencies and authorities. In general, interest paid on municipal bonds is exempt from federal income taxes and state and local income taxes within the state of issue. See also Industrial development bonds, supra.

Official bond. A bond given by a public officer, conditioned that he shall well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office. The term is sometimes made to include the bonds of executors, guardians, trustees, etc.

Passive bond. Bond which bears no interest.

Payment bond. See Miller Act.

Building. Structure designed for habitation, shelter, storage, trade, manufacture, religion, business, education, and the like. A structure or edifice inclosing a space within its walls, and usually, but not necessarily, covered with a roof. Netter v. Scholtz, 282 Ky. 493, 138 S.W.2d 951, 953.

Building and loan association. An organization for the purpose of accumulating a fund by subscriptions and savings of its members to assist them in building or purchasing for themselves dwellings or real estate by the loan to them of the requisite money. Quasi public corporations chartered to encourage thrift and promote ownership of homes. Hopkins Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Cleary, Wis., 296 U.S. 315, 56 S.Ct. 235, 237, 241, 80 L.Ed. 251. Such associations are not commercial banks, nor, in most states, are such classified as savings banks or savings institutions; though in many states such is a special type or variety of savings and loan association. See also Savings and loan association.

Building code. Laws, ordinances, or government regulations concerning fitness for habitation setting forth standards and requirements for the construction, maintenance, operation, occupancy, use or appearance of buildings, premises, and dwelling units. While many codes are local in nature and scope, many states have uniform codes which all local municipalities must adhere to. In addition FHA financed real estate must meet certain building code requirements.

Building is covered. Phrase in a binder or contract of temporary insurance meaning that the property shall be insured in the standard form of insurance from that instant for a reasonable time until either the policy or policies can be written out, or their issuance approved or disapproved or some other temporary impediment to the complete formal contract of insurance can be removed. Shumway v. Home Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of California, 301 Mass. 391, 17 N.E.2d 212, 214.

Building lease. A lease of land for a long term of years, at a rent called "ground rent"; the lessee covenanting to erect certain structures thereon according to specification, and to maintain the same, etc., during the term.

Building lien. The statutory lien of a materialman or contractor for the erection of a building. See Mechanic's lien.

Building line. A line established by municipal authority, to secure uniformity of appearance in the streets of the city, drawn at a certain uniform distance from the curb or from the edge of the sidewalk, and parallel thereto, upon which the fronts of all buildings on that street must be placed, or beyond which they are not allowed to project. Often referred to as the "set-back" requirement.

Building loan agreement. An agreement by which one undertakes to advance to another money to be used primarily in erection of buildings. Such funds are normally used by the borrower to pay the contractor, sub-contractors and materialmen; and such funds are commonly advanced in installments as the structure is completed. The lender's security is normally the structure being erected. Also called interim or construction financing.

Building permit. Authorization required by local governmental bodies for new building, or major alteration or expansion of existing structures. Building plans, estimated costs, etc., and a fee, are usually required before such is issued. Such permit is normally required to be displayed on the construction site.

Building restrictions. Regulations or restrictions (commonly in zoning ordinances) upon the type of structure that can be constructed on one’s property. Such restrictions may also be created in the form of restrictive covenants in deeds.

Building society. An association in which the subscriptions of the members form a capital stock or fund out of which advances may be made to members desiring them, on mortgage security. See Building and loan association.

Bul. In the ancient Hebrew chronology, the eighth month of the ecclesiastical, and the second of the civil year. It has since been called “Marshevan,” and answers to our October.

Bulk. Unbroken packages. Merchandise which is neither counted, weighed, nor measured. The aggregate that forms a body or unit. When used in relation to sale of goods by sample, “bulk” means the whole quantity of goods sold, which is supposed to be fairly represented by the sample.

Bulk mortgage. A mortgage on property in bulk. May describe creation of security interest in several items as a whole or in bulk, or a mortgage of more than one parcel of real estate, though a bulk transfer is not a security interest subject to Art. 9 of U.C.C., § 9-111.

Bulk sale. Any transfer in bulk, and not in ordinary course of transferor's business, of a major part of the materials, supplies, merchandise or other inventory of an enterprise. U.C.C. § 6-102(1). See Bulk Sales Acts, infra.

A sale of substantially all the inventory of a trade or business to one person in one transaction. Under certain conditions, corporations making a bulk sale pursuant to a complete liquidation will recognize neither gain nor loss on such sale. I.R.C. § 337(b)(2).

Bulk Sales Acts. A class of statutes designed to prevent the defrauding of creditors by secret sale in bulk of all or substantially all of a merchant's stock of goods. Individual state bulk sales acts have been superseded by Art. 6 of U.C.C., “Bulk Transfers”.

Bulk transfers. See Bulk sale; Bulk Sales Acts, supra.

Bull. In ecclesiastical law, an instrument granted by the Pope of Rome, and sealed with a seal of lead, containing some decree, commandment, or other public act, emanating from the pontiff. Bull, in this sense, corresponds with edict or letters patent from other governments.

There are three kinds of apostolical rescripts—the brief, the signature, and the bull; which last is most commonly used in legal matters. Also, the term for an investor who anticipates that the stock market will rise; as contrasted with a “bear” who believes it will fall.

Bulla /búla/. A seal used by the Roman emperors, during the lower empire; it was of four kinds,—gold, silver, wax, and lead.

Bullet. Synonymous with “shot,” meaning a projectile particularly a solid ball or bullet that is not intended to fit the bore of a piece.

Bulletin. An officially published notice or announcement concerning the progress of matters of public importance and interest. A brief news item of immediate publication. The publication (organ) of an institution or association.

Bulletin des lois /buštān déy lýá/. In France, the official sheet which publishes the laws and decrees; this publication constitutes the promulgation of the law or decree.

Bullion. Gold and silver intended to be coined.

“Bullion” encompasses, at the very least, any solid mass of uncoined gold or silver whatever its shape so long as its shape does not enhance its value. U. S. Smelting Refining & Mining Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., D.C.N.Y., 372 F.Sup. 489, 494.

Bullion fund. A fund of public money maintained in connection with the mints, for the purpose of purchasing precious metals for coinage, and also of enabling the mint to make returns of coins to private depositors of bullion without waiting until such bullion is actually coined.

Bull market. Securities term for a market in which prices are rising or are expected to rise.

Bull pen. A certain place of close confinement at a penitentiary.

Bum-bailiff. A person employed to dun one for a debt; a bailiff employed to arrest a debtor. Probably a vulgar corruption of “bound-bailiff” (q.v.).

Bunco game /бэкгов géyım/. Any trick, artifice, or cunning calculated to win confidence and to deceive, whether by conversation, conduct, or suggestion. A swindling game or scheme.

Bunda /bánđa/. In old English law, a bound, boundary, border, or limit (terminus, limes).

Buoy /bóy/buíwi/. A floating object intended as a guide and warning to mariners, by marking a spot where the water is shallow, or where there is a reef or other danger to navigation, or to mark the course of a channel. Buoys are regulated by federal statutes.

Burden. Capacity for carrying cargo. Something that is carried. Something oppressive or worrisome. A burden, as on interstate commerce, means anything that imposes either a restrictive or onerous load upon such commerce.

Burden of going forward. The onus on a party to a case to refute or to explain as in the case of one who is charged with possession of stolen goods after the government has introduced evidence of the defendant's recent possession of such goods, the inference being that the defendant knew the goods to have been stolen. Barnes v. U.S., 412 U.S. 837, 846, n. 11, 93 S.Ct. 2357, 2363, 37 L.Ed.2d 380.

Burden of persuasion. The onus on the party with the burden of proof to convince the trier of fact of all elements of his case. In criminal case the burden of the government to produce evidence of all the necessary elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364, 90 S.Ct. 1068, 1073, 25 L.Ed.2d 368.

Burden of producing evidence. The obligation of a party to introduce evidence sufficient to avoid a ruling against him on the issue. Calif.Evid.Code. Such burden is met when one with the burden of proof has introduced sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case, though the cogency of the evidence may fall short of convincing the trier of fact to find for him. The burden of introducing some evidence on all the required elements of the crime or tort or contract to avoid the direction of a verdict against the party with the burden of proof. Stuart v. D. N. Kelley & Son, 331 Mass. 76, 117 N.E.2d 160.

Burden of proof. (Lat. onus probandi.) In the law of evidence, the necessity or duty of affirmatively proving a fact or facts in dispute on an issue raised between the parties in a case. The obligation of a party to establish by evidence a requisite degree of belief concerning a fact in the mind of the trier of fact or the court.

Burden of proof is a term which describes two different concepts; first, the "burden of persuasion", which under traditional view never shifts from one party to the other at any stage of the proceeding, and second, the "burden of going forward with the evidence", which may shift back and forth between the parties as the trial progresses. Ambrose v. Wheatley, D.C.Del., 321 F.Supp. 1220, 1222.

The burden of proof may require a party to raise a reasonable doubt concerning the existence or nonexistence of a fact or that he establish the existence or nonexistence of a fact by a preponderance of the evidence, by clear and convincing proof, or by proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Except as otherwise provided by law, the burden of proof requires proof by a preponderance of the evidence. Calif.Evid.Code, § 115.

In a criminal case, all the elements of the crime must be proved by the government beyond a reasonable doubt. In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 50 S.Ct. 1068, 25 L.Ed.2d 368.

Term has been used to mean either the necessity of establishing a fact, that is, the burden of persuasion, or the necessity of making a prima facie case, that is, the burden of going forward. State Farm Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 29 Ill.App.3d 942, 331 N.E.2d 275, 278.

"Burden of establishing" a fact means the burden of persuading the triers of fact that the existence of the fact is more probable than its non-existence. U.C.C. § 1-201(8).

See also Shifting the burden of proof.

Bureaucracy /byurəokrəsi/ /byərəokrəsi/ /byərəokrəsi/ /byərəokrəsi/. An organization, such as an administrative agency or the army, with the following general traits: a chain of command with fewer people at the top than at the bottom; well defined positions and responsibilities; fairly inflexible rules and procedures; "red tape"; many forms to be filled out; and delegation of authority downward from level to level.

Bureau of Customs. Federal agency charged with responsibility of collecting importing duties for the Government.

Bureau of Land Management. The Bureau of Land Management was established July 16, 1946, by the consolidation of the General Land Office (created in 1812) and the Grazing Service (formed in 1934). The Bureau manages the national resource lands (some 450 million acres) and their resources. It also administers the mineral resources connected with acquired lands and the submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS).

Burford doctrine. Under "Burford Doctrine" of abstention, federal courts have refrained from interfering with complex state regulatory schemes. Clutchette v. Procunier, D.C.Cal., 328 F.Supp. 767, 772.

Burgage /bərˈɡeɪdʒ/ /bərˈɡeɪdʒ/ /bərˈɡeɪdʒ/ /bərˈɡeɪdʒ/. A name anciently given to a dwelling-house in a borough town.

Burgage-tenure. In English law, one of the three species of free socage holdings; a tenure whereby houses and lands which were formerly the site of houses, in an ancient borough, are held of some lord by a certain rent. There are a great many customs affecting these tenures, the most remarkable of which is the custom of Borough English. Such tenures have been abolished.

Burgator /bərˈɡeɪdər/ /bərˈɡeɪdər/ /bərˈɡeɪdər/ /bərˈɡeɪdər/. One who breaks into houses or inclosed places, as distinguished from one who committed robbery in the open country.

Burghmote /bɔːrgməʊt/. In Saxon law, a court of justice held semi-annually by the bishop or lord in a burg, which the thanes were bound to attend without summons.

Burglar. One who commits burglary.

Burglariously /bɜːrgləˈriəzli/. See Burglariter.

Burglariter /bɜːrgləˈreɪtər/. L. Lat. (Burglariously). In old criminal pleading, a necessary word in indictments for burglary.

Burglary. At common law, the crime of burglary consisted of a breaking and entering of a dwelling house of another in the nighttime with the intent to commit a felony therein. The modern statutory definitions of the crime are much less restrictive. For example, they commonly require no breaking and encompass entry at all times of all kinds of structures. In addition, certain state statutes classify the crime into first, second, and even third, degree burglary.

A person is guilty of burglary if he enters a building or occupied structure, or separately secured or occupied portion thereof, with purpose to commit a crime therein, unless the premises are at the time, open to the public or the actor is licensed or privileged to enter. It is an affirmative defense for prosecution for burglary that the building or structure was abandoned. Model Penal Code, § 221.1. See also Breaking.

Burglary tools. Any implement which may be used to commit burglary though, of itself, it is designed for legitimate use, and possession of which is a crime if accompanied by the intent to use for such illegal purpose and the knowledge of its illegal use.

Business guest. One invited to business establishment as a guest and to whom a duty of care is owed generally greater than to a social guest, though such distinctions are becoming less acceptable in the area of torts; see e.g. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43. See Guest.

Business invitee. One who is impliedly invited to premises for transacting business and to whom a duty of due care is owed. One who goes on another's premises at express or implied invitation of owner or occupant for benefit of invitee or for mutual benefit and advantage of both invitee and invitee. Campbell Sixty-Six Exp., Inc. v. Adventure Line Mfg. Co., 209 Kan. 357, 496 P.2d 1351, 1355. See Invitee.

Business league. An association is a business league if persons thereof have some common business interest. Underwriters' Laboratories v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.7, 135 F.2d 371, 374.

Business losses. Losses from sale, exchange, or other disposition of property used in trade or business. Fackler v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.6, 133 F.2d 509, 512. See also Business bad debts.

Business of peddling. Business of one relying on present solicitation of chance patrons for purchases of uncertain quantities and making concurrent deliveries.

Business of public character. Business wherein person engaged expressly or impliedly holds himself out as engaged in business of supplying his product or service to public as a class or to limited portion of public.

Business purpose. Term used on occasion to describe the use to which property may be put or not, as in a deed's restrictive covenant. A justifiable business reason for carrying out a transaction. It has long been established that mere tax avoidance is not a business purpose. The presence of a business purpose is of crucial importance in the area of corporate readjustments.

Business records. Journals, books of account and other records which may be ordered produced as part of discovery in trial or preparation of case and generally given broad interpretation for such purposes; see e.g. Fed.R.Civ.Proc. Rule 26(b)(1). See also Business entry rule; Business records exception.

Business risk. In finance, the risk of default or variability of return arising from the type of business conducted.

Business situs. A situs acquired for tax purposes by one who has carried on a business in the state more or less permanent in its nature. A situs arising when notes, mortgages, tax sale certificates and the like are brought into the state for something more than a temporary purpose, and are devoted to some business use there and thus become incorporated with the property of the state for revenue purposes. A situs arising where possession and control of property right has been localized in some independent business or investment away from owner's domicile so that its substantial use and value primarily attach to and become an asset of the outside business. State v. Atlantic Oil Producing Co., 174 Okl. 61, 49 P.2d 534, 538.

Business trust. As distinguished from a joint-stock company, a pure "business trust" is one in which the managers are principals, and the shareholders are cestuis que trust. The essential attribute is that property is placed in the hands of trustees who manage and deal with it for use and benefit of beneficiaries. Morriss v. Finkelstein, Mo.App., 127 S.W.2d 46, 49. A "Massachusetts trust" or "common law trust." See Massachusetts trust; Real estate investment trust.

Business usage. See Business purpose, supra.

Business visitor. One who is invited or permitted to enter or remain upon the premises of another for a purpose directly or indirectly connected with the business dealings between them. Kurre v. Graham Ship by Truck Co., 136 Kan. 356, 15 P.2d 463, 465. One who comes on premises at occupant's instance for purposes connected with purpose of business, or otherwise, for which occupant uses premises. See also Business guest, Business invitee, supra.

Course of business. See Course of dealing: Doing business.

Farming business. See Farming purposes.

Private business. One in which capital, time, attention, labor, and intelligence have been invested for gain and profit for private benefit, purposes and use.

Public business. An element is that the business by its nature must be such that the public must use the same, or the commodities bought and sold in such manner as to affect the community at large as to supply, price, etc. See Corporation.

Business bad debts. A tax deduction allowed for obligations obtained in connection with a trade or business which have become either partially or completely worthless. In contrast with nonbusiness bad debts, business bad debts are deductible as business expenses. See also Bad debt.
Business entry rule. Exception to hearsay rule which allows introduction of entries made in usual course of business into evidence though person who made such entry is not in court. FedRules Evid., Rule 803(6); 28 U.S.C.A. § 1732. See also Business records exception.

Business judgment rule. This rule immunizes management from liability in corporate transaction undertaken within both power of corporation and authority of management where there is reasonable basis to indicate that transaction was made in good faith. Nursing Home Bldg. Corp. v. DeHart, 13 Wash.App. 489, 535 P.2d 137, 144.

Business records exception. An exception to the "hearsay exclusion rule" that allows original, routine records (whether or not part of a "business") to be used as evidence in a trial even though they are hearsay. See also Business entry rule.

Busones comitatus /byuwsóñíyz kó(w)matéydas/. In old English law, the barons of a county.

But. Except, except that, on the contrary, or, and also, yet, still.

"But for" test. Test used in determining tort liability by applying the causative criterion as to whether the plaintiff would not have suffered the wrong "but for" the action of the defendant. Today, largely discredited as a test because of the many modifications necessary in applying it.

Butler's ordinance. In English law, a law for the heir to punish waste in the life of the ancestor.

Butt. A measure of liquid capacity, equal to one hundred and eight gallons; also a measure of land.

Buttals /bátalz/. The bounding lines of land at the end; buttals, which see.

Butted and bounded. A phrase sometimes used in conveyancing, to introduce the boundaries of lands. See Butts and bounds.

Butts. In old English law, short pieces of land left unplowed at the ends of fields, where the plow was turned about (otherwise called "headlands") as side-lings were similarly unplowed pieces on the sides. Also a place where bowmen meet to shoot at a mark.

Butts and bounds. A phrase used in conveyancing, to describe the end lines or circumscribing lines of a certain piece of land. The phrase "metes and bounds" has the same meaning.

The angles or points where these lines change their direction. See Abuttals.

Buy. To acquire the ownership of property by giving an accepted price or consideration therefor; or by agreeing to do so; to acquire by the payment of a price or value; to purchase. To obtain something for a price, usually money.

Buy American acts. Federal and state statutes which require a preference for American made goods over foreign made goods in government contracts. The purpose of such acts is to protect domestic industry, goods and labor.

Buy and sell agreement. An arrangement, particularly appropriate in the case of a closely-held corporation or a partnership, whereby the surviving owners (i.e. shareholders or partners) or the entity (i.e., corporation or partnership) agree to purchase the interest of a withdrawing or deceased owner (i.e., shareholder or partner). The buy and sell agreement provides for an orderly disposition of an interest in a business and is beneficial in setting the value of such interest for inheritance and death tax purposes.

An agreement between or among part-owners of a business that under stated conditions (usually severance of employment, disability, or death), the person withdrawing or his heirs are legally obligated to sell their interest to the remaining part-owners, and the remaining part-owners are legally obligated to sell at a price fixed in the agreement either on a dollar basis or on a formula for computing the dollar value to be paid.

Entity buy and sell agreement. A buy and sell agreement whereby the entity is to purchase the withdrawing or deceased owner's interest. When the entity is a corporation, the agreement generally involves a stock redemption on the part of the withdrawing shareholder.

Buyer. One who buys; a purchaser, particularly of chattels. A person who buys or contracts to buy goods. U.C.C. § 2–103(1)(a). See also Purchaser.

Buy in ordinary course of business. A person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. "Buying" may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a pre-existing contract for sale but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt. U.C.C. § 1–201(9).

Buyer 60 contract. A contract wherein purchaser not wishing to pay for stock purchased outright buys it at a price in excess of the market and is allowed 60 days' time to pay for stock. Herrlein v. Tocchini, 128 Cal.App. 612, 18 P.2d 73, 75.

Buyer's market. Situation where supply is greater than demand.

Buy in. See Buying in.

Buying dormant titles. The purchase of the rights or claims to real estate of a person who is not in possession of the land or is deceased. Such purchases were declared void by English statute (1541); and are similarly void in most states. See also Bracery.

Buying in. Buying of property at auction or tax or mortgage foreclosure sale by original owner or by one with interest in property.

Buying long. Purchase of stocks now with the expectation of selling them for a profit in the future.

Buying on margin. Purchase of security with payment part in cash and part by a loan. Normally, the loan is made by the broker.
By. Before a certain time; beside; close to; in close proximity; in consequence of; not later than a certain time; on or before a certain time; in conformity with; with the witness or sanction of; into the vicinity of and beyond. Through the means, act, agency or instrumentality of.

By-bidder. One employed by the seller or his agent to bid on property with no purpose to become a purchaser, so that bidding thereon may be stimulated in others who are bidding in good faith.

By-bidding. See Bid.

By bill, by bill without writ. In old English law, terms anciently used to designate actions commenced by original bill, as distinguished from those commenced by original writ, and applied in modern practice to suits commenced by capias ad respondendum. 3 Bl.Com. 285, 286. The usual course of commencing an action in the King's Bench was by a bill of Middlesex. In an action commenced by bill it is not necessary to notice the form or nature of the action.

By color of office. Acts done "by color of office" are where they are of such a nature that office gives no authority to do them. State v. National Surety Co., 162 Tenn. 547, 39 S.W.2d 581, 583. See Color of office.

Bye-bill-wuffa. In Hindu law, a deed of mortgage or conditional sale.

By estimation. In conveyancing, a term used to indicate that the quantity of land as stated is estimated only, not exactly measured; it has the same meaning and effect as the phrase "more or less."

By God and my country. In old English criminal practice, the established formula of reply by a prisoner, when arraigned at the bar, to the question, "Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?"

By-law men. In old English law, the chief men of a town, representing the inhabitants. In an ancient deed, certain parties were described as "yeomen and by-law men." They appear to have been men appointed for some purpose of limited authority by the other inhabitants, under by-laws of the corporation appointing.

By-laws. Regulations, ordinances, rules or laws adopted by an association or corporation or the like for its government. The word is also sometimes used to designate the local laws or municipal statutes of a city or town, though, more commonly the tendency is to employ the word "ordinance" exclusively for this class of enactments, reserving "by-law" for the rules adopted by corporations.

By operation of law. Effected by some positive legal rule or amendment. Terminals & Transportation Corporation v. Staté, 169 Misc. 703, 8 N.Y.S.2d 282, 284.

By reason of. Because of. By means, acts, or instrumentality of.

Byroad. An obscure or neighborhood road, not used to any great extent by the public, yet so far a public road that the public have of right free access to it at all times. A byway.

Bystander. One who stands near; a chance looker-on; hence one who has no concern with the business being transacted. One present but not taking part, looker-on, spectator, beholder, observer.

By the by (also Bye). Incidentally; without new process. A term used in former English practice to denote the method of filing a declaration against a defendant who was already in the custody of the court at the suit of a different plaintiff or of the same plaintiff in another cause. It is no longer allowed.

By virtue of. By force of, by authority of, by reason of. Phillips v. Houston Nat. Bank, Houston, Tex., C.C.A. Tex., 108 F.2d 934, 936. Because of, through, or in pursuance of. For example, money received by an officer by virtue of his office is money which that officer received under the law of his office, and not in violation thereof.
C.—ct.—cts. These abbreviations stand for “cent” or “cents,” and any one of them, placed at the top or head of a column of figures, sufficiently indicates the denomination of the figures below.

C.A.B. Civil Aeronautics Board.

Caball /kabál/. A small association for the purpose of intrigue; an intrigue. This name was given to that ministry in the reign of Charles II, formed by Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale, who concerted a scheme for the restoration of the Pope. The initials of these five names form the word “cabal;” hence the appellation.

Cabalist /kábalist/. In French commercial law, a factor or broker.

Caballaría /kábalér(i)lys/. Pertaining to a horse. It was a feudal tenure of lands, the tenant furnishing a horseman suitably equipped in time of war, or when the lord had occasion for his service.

Caballería /kábaýeríya/. In Spanish law, an allotment of land acquired by conquest, to a horse soldier. A quantity of land, varying in extent in different provinces. In those parts of the United States which formerly belonged to Spain, it is a lot of one hundred feet front, two hundred feet depth, and equivalent to five peonias.

Caballero /kábayero /kábeliýerо/. In Spanish law, a knight. So called on account of its being more honorable to go on horseback (a caballo) than on any other beast.

Caban. Cabin or small house.

Cabaret /kábaréy/. A room where musical entertainment is permitted in connection with restaurant business.

Cabaret tax. Tax imposed on operation of cabaret by government authorities.

Cabinet. The advisory board or counsel of a king or other chief executive; e.g. President’s Cabinet. The select or secret council of a prince or executive government; so called from the apartment in which it was originally held.

The President’s Cabinet is a creation of custom and tradition, going back to the First President, and functions at the pleasure of the President. Its purpose is to advise the President on any matter concerning which he wishes such advice (pursuant to Article II, section 2, of the Constitution). The Cabinet is composed of the heads of the eleven executive departments—the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and the Secretary of Transportation. Certain other officials of the executive branch have been accorded Cabinet rank. The Vice President participates in all Cabinet meetings. Others are invited from time to time for discussion of particular subjects. The Secretary to the Cabinet is designated to provide for orderly handling and followup of matters brought before the Cabinet.

Kitchen cabinet. Informal body of non-cabinet advisors which President turns to for advice.

Cabinet council. In English law, a private and confidential assembly of the most considerable ministers of state, to concert measures for the administration of public affairs; first established by Charles I.

Cabotage /kábódaj/. A nautical term from the Spanish, denoting strictly navigation from cape to cape along the coast without going out into the open sea. In International Law, cabotage is identified with coasting-trade so that it means navigating and trading along the coast between the ports thereof.

Cacheopolis /kách(i)y pólyos/ or cacherellias /káchayérélias/. An inferior bailiff, or catchpoll.

Cachet, lettres de /létrys de káshay/. Letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person. Abolished during the revolution of 1789. See Lettres de cachet.

Cáciegos /kásiyékáskows/. In Spanish-American law, property entailed on the caciques, or heads of Indian villages, and their descendants.

Cadastre /kodástar /kodástrey/. Tax inventory and assessment of real property.

Cadastru. In French law, an official statement of the quantity and value of realty made for purposes of taxation; same as cadastre (q.v.).

Cadaver /kodévar/. A dead human body; a corpse. Cadaver nullius in bonis, no one can have a right of property in a corpse.
Cadena /kادیونا/. In Spanish, literally, "a chain." In Spanish law, an afflictive penalty consisting of imprisonment at "hard and laborious work," originally with a chain hanging from the waist to the ankle and carrying with it the accessory penalties of civil interdiction, perpetual, absolute disqualification from office, and, in the case of "cadena temporal," surveillance by the authorities during life; sometimes described as "imprisonment in chains." The carrying of chains, however, by convicts sentenced to "cadena" has long fallen into disuse, in the Philippines, and in fact no such punishment has been inflicted since the earliest days of the military occupation of the Philippines by American troops; and so, commonly, the term has come to mean imprisonment, although it has also been contrasted with, or distinguished from, "prison," the Spanish technical name for simple imprisonment.

Cadena perpetua. Life imprisonment.

Cadena temporal. Imprisonment for a term less than life.

Cadere /kادداری/. Lat. To end; cease; fail; as in phrases such as cadit actio (or breve), the action (or writ) fails; cadit assisa, the assise abates; cadit questio, the discussion ends, there is no room for further argument; cadere ab actione (literally, to fall from an action), to fail in an action; cadere in partem, to become subject to a division.

To be changed; to become; to be turned into. Cadit assisa in juratum, the assise is changed into a jury.

Cadet /kادید/. Students in the military academy at West Point are styled "cadets;" students in the naval academy at Annapolis, "cadet midshipmen."

Younger brother or son.

In England, a younger brother; the younger son of a gentleman; particularly applied to a volunteer in the army, waiting for some post.

Cadil /کادیل/. A Turkish civil magistrate.

Caducea /کادیهواکا/. In the civil law, property of an inheritable quality; property such as descends to an heir. Also the tassels of a testamentary disposition or legacy. Also an escheat; escheated property.

Caducary /کادیوکاری/. Relating to or of the nature of escheat, forfeiture, or confiscation. 2 Bl.Comm. 245.

Cesarean operation /سازیریان/; /سازیریان/; /سازیریان/. Delivery of fetus by way of abdominal incision.

Ceteris tacentibus /سیدارس تاسنیباس/. The others being silent; the other judges expressing no opinion.

Ceterorum /سیداروم/. When a limited administration has been granted, and all the property cannot be administered under it, administration ceterorum (as to the residue) may be granted.

Cafetería plan. Type of fringe benefit plan whereby employee, in addition to receiving certain basic fringe benefits, is permitted to also select certain others up to a specified dollar amount.

Cahier /کاهیری/. In old French law, a list of grievances prepared for deputies in the states-general. A petition for the redress of grievances enumerated.

Calin’s Act. An English statute for enabling the court of chancery to award damages. Repealed as having been superseded by the Judicature Act of 1873.

Caisson disease /کیسون دزیز/. A dizziness accompanied with partial paralysis of the limbs, caused by too rapid reduction of air pressure to which men have been accustomed. A condition caused by excessive air pressure wherein gas emboli or bubbles in the tissues of the body may induce severe pain and paralysis.

Calaboose /کلابووس/. A term used to designate a jail or prison, particularly a town or city jail or lock-up. Supposed to be a corruption of the Spanish calabozo, a dungeon.

Calamity. A state of extreme distress or misfortune, produced by some adverse circumstance or event. Any great misfortune or cause of loss or misery, often caused by natural forces (e.g., hurricane, flood, or the like). See Act of God; Disaster.

Calcetum, calceae /کیلسفیدام/; /کالسیا/. A causeway.

Calculated. An act intended by design to produce a certain effect or result. A thought-out, premeditated act. See Premeditation.

Cale. In old French law, a punishment of sailors, resembling "keelhauling."

Calefugium /کالسفیجیام/. In old law, a right to take fuel yearly.

Calendar. The established order of the division of time into years, months, weeks, and days; or a systematized enumeration of such arrangement; an almanac. Calendar call. A court session given to calling the cases awaiting trial to determine the present status of each case and commonly to assign a date for trial. See also Trial calendar.

Calendar days. A calendar day contains 24 hours; but "calendar days" may be synonymous with "working days." Sherwood v. American Sugar Refining Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 8 F.2d 586, 588. The time from midnight to midnight. Lanni v. Grimes, 173 Misc. 614, 18 N.Y.S.2d 322, 327. So many days reckoned according to the course of the calendar.

Calendar week. A block of seven days registered on calendar beginning with Sunday and ending with Saturday. Sonoma County v. Sanborn, 1 Cal.App.2d 26, 36 P.2d 419, 422. Term may consist of any seven days of given month. Sonoma County v. Sanborn, 1 Cal.App.2d 26, 36 P.2d 419, 422.

Calendar year. The period from January 1 to December 31 inclusive. Ordinarily calendar year means 365 days except leap year, and is composed of 12 months varying in length.

Court calendar. A list of cases awaiting trial or other disposition; sometimes called "trial list" or "docket."

Special calendar. A calendar or list of causes, containing those set down specially for hearing, trial, or argument.

Calends /kælændz/. Among the Romans the first day of every month, being spoken of by itself, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together. And if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month, as pridie calend. Septemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed with it, it signifies that day in the former month which comes so much before the month named, as the tenth calends of October is the 20th day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, that 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following months.

Calends, Greek. A metaphorical expression for a time never likely to arrive, inasmuch as the Greeks had no calends.

Call, n. A request or command to come or assemble; a demand for payment of money.

Contract. As used in contract, means demand for payment of, especially by formal notice.

Conveyance. A visible natural object or landmark designated in a patent, entry, grant, or other conveyance of lands, as a limit or boundary to the land described, with which the points of surveying must correspond. Also the courses and distances designated. See also Metes and bounds.

Corporation law. A demand by directors upon subscribers for shares for payment of a portion or installment; in this sense, it is capable of three meanings: (1) The resolution of the directors to levy the assessment; (2) its notification to the persons liable to pay; (3) the time when it becomes payable.

Securities. An option or contract giving the holder the right to demand a stated number of shares of stock at a specified price on or before a certain fixed date. Cohn, Ivers & Co. v. Gross, 56 Misc.2d 491, 289 N.Y.S.2d 301. See also Call option; Put.

Call, v. To make a request or demand; to summon or demand by name; to demand immediate payment or at a specified time, to demand shareholders to pay additional capital; to demand the presence and participation of a number of persons by calling aloud their names, either in a pre-arranged and systematic order or in a succession determined by chance.

Callable. Option to pay before maturity on call. A bond issue, all or part of which may be redeemed by the issuing corporation under definite conditions before maturity. The term also applies to preferred shares which may be redeemed by the issuing corporation.

Callable bonds. Bonds which may be called for payment before their maturity. A bond for which the issuer reserves the right to pay a specified amount, the call price, to retire the obligation before maturity date. If the issuer agrees to pay more than the face amount of the bond when called, the excess of the payment over the face amount is the call premium.

Called upon to pay. Compelled or required to pay.

Call girl. A prostitute whose bookings are normally made through the use of telephone.

Calling. One's business, occupation, profession, trade or vocation.

Calling the plaintiff. In old English law, the method of non-suiting a plaintiff who did not appear when called by the crier.

Calling to the bar. In English practice, conferring the dignity or degree of barrister at law upon a member of one of the inns of court.

Calling upon a prisoner. When a prisoner has been found guilty on an indictment, the clerk of the court addresses him and calls upon him to say why judgment should not be passed upon him.

Call loan. Loan which is callable by lender at any time; usually on 24 hours notice.

Call option. A negotiable instrument whereby writer of option, for a certain sum of money (the "premium"), grants to the buyer of option the irrevocable right to demand, within a specified time, the delivery by the writer of a specified number of shares of a stock at a fixed price (the "exercise" or "striking" price). Gordon & Co. v. Board of Governors of Federal Reserve System, D.C.Mass., 317 F.Supp. 1045, 1046. An option permitting its holder (who has paid a fee for the option) to call for a certain commodity or security at a fixed price in a stated quantity within a stated period. See Option.

Call patent. One whose corners are all stakes, or all but one, or whose lines were not run out and marked at time. Combs v. Combs, 238 Ky. 362, 38 S.W.2d 243, 244.

Call premium. Amount paid by issuer over par or face value upon calling a security in for payment or redemption.

Call price. Price paid corporation for redemption of securities.

In the old common law, a claim, demand, challenge to jurors.

Calumniiæ jusjurandum /kalamniyiys jassjaranadam/. The oath of (against) calumny. An oath imposed upon the parties to a suit that they did not sue or defend with the intention of calumniating (calumniandi animo), i.e., with a malicious design, but from a firm belief that they had a good cause. The object was to prevent vexatious and unnecessary suits. It was especially used in divorce cases, though of little practical utility. A somewhat similar provision is to be found in the requirement made in some states that the defendant shall file an affidavit of merits.

Calumniator /kalumnjityeydor/. In the civil law, one who accused another of a crime without cause; one who brought a false accusation.

Calumniy /kalumniiy/. Defamation; slander; false accusation of a crime or offense. See Calumnia.

Calvin's case. Calvin v. Smith, 7 Rep. 1; 2 S.T. 559, decided in 1608, in which it was held that persons born in Scotland after the accession of James I to the crown of England in 1603 were not aliens but were capable of inheriting land in England.

Calvo doctrine. The doctrine stated by the Argentine jurist, Carlos Calvo, that a government is not bound to indemnify aliens for losses or injuries sustained by them in consequence of domestic disturbances or civil war, where the state is not at fault, and that therefore foreign states are not justified in intervening, by force or otherwise, to secure the settlement of claims of their citizens on account of such losses or injuries. Such intervention, Calvo says, is not in accordance with the practice of European States towards one another, and is contrary to the principle of state sovereignty. The Calvo Doctrine is to be distinguished from the Drago Doctrine (q.v.).

Cambiale jus /kambyiyliy jás/. The law of exchange.

Cambulator /kambyiytydar/. In old English law, an exchanger. Cambiatorum monete, exchangers of money; money-changers.

Cambio /kambyiyow/. In Spanish law, exchange.

Cannabis /kænˈbæs/. Commonly called marihuana; cannabis sativa L embraces all marihuana-producing cannabis. U. S. v. Honneus, C.A.Mass., 508 F.2d 566, 574. As defined in Uniform Narcotic Drug Act it embraces: (a) The dried flowering or fruiting tops of the pistillate plant Cannabis Sativa Linne from which the resin has not been extracted, (b) the resin extracted from such tops, and (c) every compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of such resin, or of such tops from which the resin has not been extracted. See also Marihuana.

Cannon rule. Purchase or ownership of stock, even of a controlling interest, in a domestic corporation by a foreign corporation does not constitute doing business by the foreign parent sufficient to subject it to service of process in state of subsidiary's operation. Mid-Continent Tel. Corp. v. Home Tel. Co., D.C.Miss., 307 F.Supp. 1014, 1019.

Cannot. Denotes that one is not able (to do some act). But the term is often equivalent to "shall not."

Canon /kəˈnæn/. A law, rule, or ordinance in general, and of the church in particular. An ecclesiastical law or statute. A rule of doctrine or discipline. A criterion or standard of judgment. A body of principles, standards, rules, or norms.

In England, a cathedral dignitary, appointed sometimes by the Crown and sometimes by the bishop. Canon law. A body of Roman ecclesiastical jurisprudence compiled in the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth centuries from the opinions of the ancient Latin fathers, the decrees of General Councils, and the decretal epistles and bulls of the Holy See. The canon law is contained in two principal parts,—the decrees or ecclesiastical constitutions made by the popes and cardinals; and the decretals or canonical epistles written by the pope, or by the pope and cardinals, at the suit of one or more persons. As the decrees set out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities, and decrees of ecclesiastical persons, with their manner of election, ordination, etc., so the decretals contain the law to be used in the ecclesiastical courts. The canon law forms no part of the law of England, unless it has been brought into use and acted on there.

Canons of construction. The system of fundamental rules and maxims which are recognized as governing the construction or interpretation of written instruments.

Canons of descent. The legal rules by which inheritances are regulated, and according to which estates are transmitted by descent from the ancestor to the heir.

The ability of a particular individual or entity to use, or to be brought into, the courts of a forum. Johnson v. Helicopter & Airplane Services Corp., D.C.Md., 404 F.Supp. 726, 729.

See also Competency; Disability; Earning capacity; Fiduciary capacity; Incapacity; Legal age; Legal capacity to sue; Mental capacity or competence; Person under disability; Standing to sue doctrine; Substantial capacity; Testamentary (Testamentary capacity).

Criminal capacity. Accountability for committing crime; e.g., child under 7 years of age lacks criminal capacity. Application of Gaul, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428, 1438, 18 L.Ed.2d 527.

Capacity defense. Generic term to describe lack of fundamental ability to be accountable for actions, as one under duress lacks the capacity to contract and hence when sued on such contract he interposes defense of lack of capacity. Similarly, a child accused of crime committed when he was under age of 7, his defense being lack of criminal capacity. As a defense, it tends to negate some essential element of the action required for responsibility. See also Competency proceedings; Competency to stand trial; Defense; Insanity; Intoxication.

Capax dol /kéypæks dówlay/. Lat. Capable of committing crime, or capable of criminal intent. The phrase describes the condition of one who has sufficient intelligence and comprehension to be held criminally responsible for his deeds.

Capax negoti /kéypæks ngówshiyiay/. Competent to transact affairs; having business capacity.

Cape /kéyp(i)y/. In English practice, a judicial writ, now abolished, touching a plea of lands or tenements. It was divided into cape magnum, or the grand cape, which lay before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default, and also over to the demandant and cape parvum, or petit cape, after appearance or view granted, summoning the tenant to answer the default only. It was called a "cape," from the word with which it commenced, and a "grand cape" (or cape magnum) to distinguish it from the petit cape, which lay after appearance.

Extension of land jutting out into water as a peninsula.

Cape ad valentiam /kéypi y ad valénsh(y)əm/. A species of cape magnum.

Capella /kaspela/. A box, cabinet, or repository in which were preserved the relics of martyrs. A small building in which relics were preserved; an oratory or chapel.

Capers /kéypər/. Vessels of war owned by private persons, and different from ordinary privateers only in size, being smaller.

Capias /kéypi yas/képi yas/. Lat. "That you take." The general name for several species of writs, the common characteristic of which is that they require the officer to take the body of the defendant into custody.

In English practice, the process on an indictment when the person charged is not in custody, and in cases not otherwise provided for by statute.

See also Cepl.

Capias ad audiendum judicium /kéypi yas adíyénząd juwídš(i)yəm/. A writ issued, in a case of misdemeanor, after the defendant has appeared and is found guilty, to bring him to hear judgment if he is not present when called.

Capias ad computandum /kéypi yas kóm puwtændəm/. In the action of account render, after judgment of quod computet, if the defendant refuses to appear personally before the auditors and make his account, a writ by this name may issue to compel him. The writ is now disused.

Capias ad respondendum /kéypi yas arə spəndəndəm/. A judicial writ (usually simply termed a "capias," and commonly abbreviated to ca. resp.) by which actions at law were frequently commenced; and which commands the sheriff to take the defendant, and him safely keep, so that he may have his body before the court on a certain day, to answer the plaintiff in the action. It notifies defendant to defend suit and procures his arrest until security for plaintiff's claim is furnished.

Capias ad satisfaciendum /kéypi yas að sədəsfəy shiyəndəm/. A writ of execution (usually termed, for brevity, a "ca. sa.")], which commands the sheriff to take the party named, and keep him safely, so that he may have his body before the court on a certain day, to satisfy the damages or debt and damages in certain actions. It deprives the party taken of his liberty until he makes the satisfaction awarded. A body execution enabling judgment creditor in specified types of actions to cause arrest of judgment debtor and his retention in custody until he either pays judgment or secures his discharge as insolvent debtor. Perlmutter v. DeRowe, 58 N.J. 5, 274 A.2d 283, 286.

Capias extendi facias /képlýiyas aksténday féshiyis/. A writ of execution issuable in England against a debtor to the crown, which commands the sheriff to "take" or arrest the body, and "cause to be extended" the lands and goods of the debtor.

Capias in withernam /képlýiyas in wiórnam/. A writ, in the nature of a reprisal, which lies for one whose goods or cattle, taken under a distress, are removed from the county, so that they cannot be reprieved, commanding the sheriff to seize other goods or cattle of the distrainer of equal value.

Capias pro fine /képlýiyas prôw fáiny/. (That you take for the fine or in mercy.) Formerly, if the verdict was for the defendant, the plaintiff was adjudged to be amerced for his false claim; but, if the verdict was for the plaintiff, then in all actions vi et arms, or where the defendant, in his pleading, had falsely denied his own deed, the judgment contained an award of a capiatur pro fine; and in all other cases the defendant was adjudged to be amerced. The insertion of the misericordia or of the capiatur in the judgment is now unnecessary. A writ in all respects an execution for collection of fine. Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfurt v. Rice, 249 Ky. 771, 61 S.W.2d 614, 615.

Capias ullagatum /képlýiyas ʊl'agýydam/. (You take the outlaw.) In English practice, a writ which lies against a person who has been outlawed in an action, by which the sheriff is commanded to take him, and keep him in custody until the day of the return, and then present him to the court, there to be dealt with for his contempt. 3 Bl.Comm. 284.

Capiatur pro fine /képlýiyédar prôw fáiny/. (Let him be taken for the fine.) In English practice, a clause inserted at the end of old judgment records in actions of debt, where the defendant denied his deed, and it was found against him upon his false plea, and the jury were troubled with the trial of it.

Capita /képapá/. Heads, and, figuratively, entire bodies, whether of persons or animals.

Persons individually considered, without relation to others (polls); as distinguished from stipes or stocks of descent. The term in this sense, making part of the common phrases, in capita, per capita, is derived from the civil law.

Capital. Accumulated goods, possessions, and assets, used for the production of profits and wealth. Owners' equity in a business. Often used equally correctly to mean the total assets of a business. Sometimes used to mean capital assets.

In accounting, the amount invested in a business. In economic theory there are several meanings.

"Capital" may be used to mean: capital goods, that is, the tools of production; the money available for investment, or invested; the discounted value of the future income to be received from an investment; the real or money value of total assets; money or property used for the production of wealth; sum total of corporate stock.

See also Fixed capital; Floating or circulating capital; Impaired capital; Legal capital; Stated capital.

*Capitalization (kæp'tɛələˈzeərəʃən)/. Capitalization represents the total amount of the various securities issued by a corporation. Capitalization may include bonds, debentures, preferred and common stock and surplus. Bonds and debentures are usually carried on the books of the issuing company in terms of their par or face value. Preferred and common shares may be carried in terms of par or stated value. Stated value may be an arbitrary figure decided upon by the directors or may represent the amount received by the company from the sale of the securities at the time of issuance.

To record an expenditure that may benefit a future period as an asset rather than to treat the expenditure as an expense of the period of its occurrence. See Capitalize.

Capitalization method. A method of measuring values of realty for purposes of determining values of mortgages by expertly estimating the gross income which property should realize, and separately the expenses reasonably required to carry it, and thus arriving at a fair estimate of net income and using a capitalization figure or factor, expertly chosen. Depreciation must be taken into consideration in use of such method. In re New York Title & Mortgage Co. (Series B-K), 21 N.Y.S.2d 575, 594, 595.

Capitalize. To convert a periodical payment into an equivalent capital sum or sum in hand. To compute the present value of an income extended over a period of time.

Capitaneus /kæptəˈnjuːəs/. A tenant in capite. He who held his land or title directly from the king himself. A captain; a naval commander. This latter use began A.D. 1264. Capitaneus, Admirarius. A commander or ruler over others, either in civil, military, or ecclesiastical matters.

Capita, per /pər kæpədə/. By heads; by the poll; as individuals. In the distribution of an intestate’s personality, the persons legally entitled to take are said to take per capita, that is, equal shares, when they claim, each in his own right, as in equal degree of kindred; in contradistinction to claiming by right of representation, or per stirpes. See Per capita.

Capitare /kæptəˈriːə/. In old law and surveys. To head, front, or abut; to touch at the head, or end.

Capitatum /kæpotɛˈdɑm/. Lat. By the head; by the poll; severally to each individual.

Capitation tax. A poll tax (q.v.). A tax or imposition upon the person. It is a very ancient kind of tribute, and answers to what the Latins called “tributum,” by which taxes on persons are distinguished from taxes on merchandise, called “vectigalia.”

Capite /kæpədɪ/. Lat. By the head. Tenure in capite was an ancient feudal tenure, whereby a man held lands of the king immediately. It was of two sorts,—the one, principal and general, or of the king as the source of all tenure; the other, special and subaltern, or of a particular subject. It is now abolished. As to distribution per capita, see Capita, per.

Capite minutas /kæpədiː manyʊwˈdəs/. In the civil law, one who had suffered capitis diminutio, one who lost status or legal attributes.

Caprice /kærfris/. Whim, arbitrary, seemingly unfounded motivation. Disposition to change one’s mind impulsively.

Captain. A head-man; commander; commanding officer of troops, ship, etc.

Captain of the ship doctrine. This doctrine imposes liability on surgeon in charge of operation for negligence of his assistants during period when those assistants are under surgeon’s control, even though assistants are also employees of hospital. This concept is an adaptation of the “borrowed servant” principle in law of agency to operating room of hospital. Thomas v. Hutchinson, 442 Pa. 118, 275 A.2d 23, 27.

Captation. In French law, the act of one who succeeds in controlling the will of another, so as to become master of it; used in an invidious sense. It was formerly applied to the first stage of the hypnotic or mesmeric trance.

Captator /kæptətər/. A person who obtains a gift or legacy through artifice. See Captation.

Captio /kæptʃiəu/. In old English law and practice, a taking or seizure; arrest; receiving; holding of court.

Caption /kærpshən/. The heading or introductory part of a pleading, motion, deposition, or other legal instrument which indicates the names of the parties, name of the court, docket or file number, title of the action, etc. Fed.R.Civ.P. 10(a).

Captive. Prisoner of war.

Captive audience. Any group subject to a speaker or to a performance which is not free to depart without adverse consequences.

Captor. In international law, one who takes or seizes property in time of war; one who takes the property of an enemy. In a stricter sense, one who takes a prize at sea. Oakes v. U. S., 174 U.S. 778, 19 S.Ct. 864, 43 L.Ed. 1169. The term also designates a belligerent who has captured the person of an enemy.

Capture. Act of catching or controlling by force, threats or strategy. In international law, the taking or wresting of property from one of two belligerents by the other. Also a taking of property by a belligerent from an offending neutral. Capture, in technical language, is a taking by military power; a seizure is a taking by civil authority.

Care. Watchful attention; concern; custody; diligence; discretion; caution; opposite of negligence or carelessness; prudence; regard; preservation; security; support; vigilance. To be concerned with, and to attend to, the needs of oneself or another.

In the law of negligence, the amount of care demanded by the standard of reasonable conduct must be in proportion to the apparent risk. As the danger becomes greater, the actor is required to exercise caution commensurate with it. Foy v. Friedman, 280 F.2d 724.

There are three degrees of care which are frequently recognized, corresponding (inversely) to the three degrees of negligence, viz.: slight care, ordinary care, and great care. This division into three degrees of care, however, does not command universal assent. Slight care is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of slight importance. Or it is that degree of care which a person exercises about his own concerns, though he may be a person of less than common prudence or of careless and inattentive disposition.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which persons of ordinary care and prudence are accustomed to use and employ, under the same or similar circumstances. Or it is that degree of care which may reasonably be expected from a person in the party’s situation, that is, reasonable care. See also Ordinary.

Reasonable care is such a degree of care, precaution, or diligence as may fairly and properly be expected or required, having regard to the nature of the action, or of the subject-matter, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction. It is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the conditions existing at the time he is called upon to act. Substantially synonymous with ordinary or due care.

Great care is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about affairs of their own which are of great importance; or it is that degree of care usually bestowed upon the matter in hand by the most competent, prudent, and careful persons having to do with the particular subject.

A high degree of care is not the legal equivalent of reasonable care. It is that degree of care which a very cautious, careful, and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances; a degree of care commensurate with the risk of danger.

Highest degree of care and utmost degree of care have substantially the same meaning. "Highest degree of care" only requires the care and skill exacted of persons engaged in the same or similar business. It means the highest degree required by law where human safety is at stake, and the highest degree known to the usage and practice of very careful, skillful, and diligent persons engaged in the same business by similar means or agencies.

See also Diligence; Due care; Support.

Careless. Absence of care; negligent; reckless.

Carena /kəˈrɛnə/. A term used in the old ecclesiastical law to denote a period of forty days.

Car Mile. Movement of loaded freight car one mile.

Carnal /ˈkærnəl/. Pertaining to the body, its passions and its appetites; animal; fleshly; sensual; impure; sexual. People v. Battilana, 52 Cal.App.2d 685, 126 P.2d 923, 928.

Carnal Abuse. An act of debauchery of the female sexual organs by those of the male which does not amount to penetration; the offense commonly called statutory rape consists of carnal abuse. An injury to the genital organs in an attempt at carnal knowledge, falling short of actual penetration. Carnal knowledge of a female child of tender age includes abuse. Carnal abuse and "carnal knowledge" are synonymous in many statutes. See also Carnal Knowledge.

Carnaliter /ˈkærnəlɪtər/. In old criminal law, carnally. Carnaliter cognovit, carnally knew. Technical words in indictments for rape; formerly held to be essential.

Carnal Knowledge. Coitus; copulation; the act of a man having sexual bodily connections with a woman; sexual intercourse. Carnal knowledge of a child is unlawful sexual intercourse with a female child under the age of consent. It is a statutory crime, usually a felony. Such offense is popularly known as "statutory rape". See Rape.

While penetration is an essential element, there is "carnal knowledge" if there is the slightest penetrat-tion of the sexual organ of the female by the sexual organ of the male. Martinez v. People, 160 Colo. 534, 422 P.2d 44. It is not necessary that the vagina be entered or that the hymen be ruptured; the entering of the vulva or labia is sufficient. De Armond v. State, Okl.Cr., 285 P.2d 236.

Carriage. Transportation of goods, freight or passengers.

Carriage of Goods by Sea Act. Federal act governing the most important of the rights, responsibilities, liabilities and immunities arising out of the relation of issuer to holder of the ocean bill of lading, with respect to loss or damage of goods. 46 U.S.C.A. § 1300 et seq.

Carrier. Individual or organization engaged in transporting passengers or goods for hire.

"Carrier" means any person engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by land, as a common, contract, or private carrier, or freight forwarder as those terms are used in the Interstate Commerce Act, and officers, and agents, and employees of such carriers. 18 U.S.C.A. § 831.

See also Certified carriers; Connecting carrier; Contract carrier.

Common carrier. Common carriers are those that hold themselves out or undertake to carry persons or goods of all persons indiscriminately, or of all who choose to employ it. Merchants Parcel Delivery v. Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, 150 Pa.Super. 120, 28 A.2d 340, 344. Those whose occupation or business is transportation of persons or things for hire or reward. Common carriers of passengers are those that undertake to carry all persons indiscriminately who may apply for passage, so long as there is room, and there is no legal excuse for refusal.

Private carrier. Private carriers are those who transport only in particular instances and only for those they choose to contract with.

Carrier's lien. The right to hold the consignee's cargo until payment is made for the work of transporting it.

Carroll doctrine. Rule of law to effect that existing licensee has standing to contest the grant of a competitive license because economic injury to an existing station becomes important when on the facts it spells diminution or destruction of service. Carroll Broadcasting Co. v. F. C. C., 103 U.S.App.D.C. 346, 258 F.2d 440.

Case. A general term for an action, cause, suit, or controversy, at law or in equity; a question contested before a court of justice; an aggregate of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice. A judicial proceeding for the determination of a controversy between parties wherein rights are enforced or protected, or wrongs are prevented or redressed; any proceeding judicial in its nature.

Criminal act requiring investigation by police. Disease or injury requiring treatment by physician.

Surveillance or inspection of residence, business, etc. by potential burglar or robber.

The word “case” may include applications for divorce, applications for the establishment of highways, applications for orders of support of relatives, and other special proceedings unknown to the common law. S. D. Warren Co. v. Fritz, 138 Me. 279, 25 A.2d 645, 646.

In ordinary usage, the word “case” means “event”, “happening”, “situation”, “circumstances”.

A statement of facts involved in a transaction or series of transactions, drawn up in writing in a technical form, for submission to a court or judge for decision or opinion. See below Case agreed on; Case on appeal; Case reserved; Case stated.

See also Cause of action.

Case agreed on. A formal written enumeration of the facts in a case, assented to by both parties as correct and complete, and submitted to the court by their agreement, in order that decision may be rendered without a trial, upon the court’s conclusions of law upon the facts as stated. For agreed case, or case stated, parties must agree on all material ultimate facts on which their rights are to be determined by law.

Case made. See Case reserved, infra.

Case on appeal. Status of case after it leaves trial court for appellate review and is on appellate docket.

Case reserved. A statement in writing of the facts proved on the trial of a cause, drawn up and settled by the attorneys and counsel for the respective parties under the supervision of the judge, for the purpose of having certain points of law, which arose at the trial and could not then be satisfactorily decided, determined upon full argument before the court in banc. This is otherwise called a “special case”, and it is usual for the parties, where the law of the case is doubtful, to agree that the jury shall find a general verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon such a case to be made, instead of obtaining from the jury a special verdict.

Cases and controversies. This term, as used in the Constitution of the United States, embraces claims or contentsions of litigants brought before the court for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs; and whenever the claim or contention of a party takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, it has become a case or controversy. Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 14 S.Ct. 1125, 38 L.Ed. 1047. The federal courts will only consider questions which arise in a "case or controversy"; i.e., only justiciable cases. Art. III, Sec. 2, U.S.Const. The case or controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse interests. The questions involved must not be moot or academic, nor will the courts consider collusive actions. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 228, 240, 241, 57 S.Ct. 461, 464, 81 L.Ed. 617. See also Ripeness doctrine; Standing to sue doctrine.

Case stated. See "Case agreed on"; above.

Case sufficient to go to a jury. A case that has proceeded upon sufficient proof to that stage where it must be submitted to jury and not decided against the state as a matter of law. State v. McDonough, 129 Conn. 483, 29 A.2d 582, 584.

Form of action. That category into which a case falls such as contract or tort, though under Rules of Civil Procedure, all actions are "civil" actions. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Case in chief. That part of a trial in which the party with the initial burden of proof presents his evidence after which he rests.

Case law. The aggregate of reported cases as forming a body of jurisprudence, or the law of a particular subject as evidenced or formed by the adjudged cases, in distinction to statutes and other sources of law. See Common law.

Certificate of good conduct. An official written document which determines that a person is of such good conduct as to operate licensed premises, e.g. retail liquor store. City of Chattanooga v. Tenn. Alcoholic Bev. Comm., Tenn., 525 S.W.2d 470, 480.

Certificate of holder of attached property. A certificate required by statute, in some states, to be given by a third person who is found in possession of property subject to an attachment in the sheriff's hands, setting forth the amount and character of such property and the nature of the defendant's interest in it.

Certificate of incorporation. The basic instrument by which a corporation is formed (termed "articles of incorporation" in most states), under general corporation statutes, executed by several persons as incorporators and filed in some designated public office (e.g. Secretary of State) as evidence of corporate existence. Upon filing of such, corporate existence usually begins. This is properly distinguished from a "charter," which is a direct legislative grant of corporate existence and powers to named individuals. See Articles of incorporation.

Certificate of indebtedness. An obligation sometimes issued by corporations having practically the same force and effect as a bond, though not usually secured on any specific property. It may, however, create a lien on all the property of the corporation issuing it, superior to the rights of general creditors. Compare Debenture. In banking, same as a certificate of deposit; as a government security, same as a treasury certificate.

Certificate of insurance. Document evidencing fact that an insurance policy has been written and includes a statement of the coverage of the policy in general terms.

Certificate of interest. An instrument evidencing a fractional or percentage interest in oil and gas pro-
Certificate of Need

Many states have enacted certificate-of-need laws designed to combat spiraling health care costs and the unnecessary duplication and misdistribution of health care facilities and services. Under these laws, a health care provider seeking to establish or modify a health care facility or to provide new or different institutional health care services must normally apply to the appropriate state agency for a certificate of need.

Certificate of occupancy. Document certifying that premises comply with provisions of zoning and/or building ordinances. Such is often required before premises can be occupied and title transferred. Document that certifies that what has been done actually conforms substantially to approved plans and specifications. DiPasquale v. Haskins, 25 A.D.2d 490, 286 N.Y.S.2d 955, 957.

A number of cities require a “certificate of occupancy” for apartments, which aims at preventing their deterioration in the first place. After each vacancy, the apartment must be newly inspected to make sure it’s up to standard.

Certificate of participation. A certificate issued instead of shares of stock to show a proportionate interest in an unincorporated business or in the ownership of debt of a corporation.

Certificate of public convenience and necessity. See Certificate of convenience and necessity, supra.

Certification to federal court. Method of taking case from U.S. Court of Appeals to Supreme Court in which former court may certify any question of law in any civil or criminal case as to which instructions are requested. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1254(3). Same procedure is available from Court of Claims. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1255(2).

Certification to state court. Procedure by which a Federal Court abstains from deciding a state law question until the highest court of the state has had an opportunity to rule on the question so certified by the Federal Court. Clay v. Sun Insurance Office Ltd., 363 U.S. 207, 80 S.Ct. 1222, 4 L.Ed.2d 1170. State statutes and court rules providing for such certification are generally patterned on the “Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act.”

Certificats de coutume /sɛʁtifikə də kwytyˈyɛm/. In French law, certificates given by a foreign lawyer, establishing the law of the country to which he belongs upon one or more fixed points. These certificates can be produced before the French courts, and are received as evidence in suits upon questions of foreign law.

Certified carriers. Carriers using highways of state to whom certificates of public convenience and necessity have been issued. People v. Henry, 131 Cal.App. 82, 21 P.2d 672.
Certified check. The check of a depositor drawn on a bank on the face of which the bank has written or stamped the words "accepted" or "certified" with the date and signature of a bank official. The check then becomes an obligation of the bank. The certification of a check is a statement of fact, amounting to an estoppel of the bank to deny liability; a warranty that sufficient funds are on deposit and have been set aside. It means that bank holds money to pay check and is liable to pay it to proper party. See also Certification of check; compare Cashier's check.

Certified copy. A copy of a document or record, signed and certified as a true copy by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted.

Champerty /ʃæmpərти/. A bargain by a stranger with a party to a suit, by which such third person undertakes to carry on the litigation at his own cost and risk, in consideration of receiving, if successful, a part of the proceeds or subject sought to be recovered. Schnabel v. Taft Broadcasting Co., Inc., Mo. App., 525 S.W.2d 819, 823. "Maintenance" consists in maintaining, supporting, or promoting the litigation of another.

Champion. A person who fights a combat in his own cause, or in place of another. At common law, the person who, in the trial by battel, fought either for the tenant or demandant. One who acts or speaks in behalf of a person, or a cause; defender; an advocate.

Champion of the king or queen. An ancient officer, whose duty it was at the coronation to challenge “that if any man shall deny the king’s title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat”.

Chance. Absence of explainable or controllable causation; accident; fortuity; hazard; result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces; risk; unexpected, unforeseen, or unintended consequence of an act. The opposite of intention, design, or contrivance. See Act of God.

Chance bargain. The entering into a contract for better or worse, accompanied by the taking of chances as to the true facts and situation of the thing or article bargained about. Marr v. Lawson, 290 Ky. 342, 161 S.W.2d 42, 44.

Chancellor. The name given in some states to the judge (or the presiding judge) of a court of chancery. A university president, or chief executive officer of higher education system in certain states.

Chancellor of the Exchequer. In England, an officer who formerly sat in the Court of Exchequer, but now is minister who has control over national revenues and expenditures.

Lord High Chancellor. The highest judicial functionary in England.

Chance-medley. In criminal law, a sudden affray. This word is sometimes applied to any kind of homicide by misadventure, but in strictness it is applicable to such killing only as happens in defending one’s self. 4 Bl.Comm. 184.

Chancer. To adjust according to principles of equity, as would be done by a court of chancery. The practice arose in parts of New England when the courts, without equity jurisdiction, were compelled to act upon equitable principles.

Chancery. Equity; equitable jurisdiction; a court of equity; the system of jurisprudence administered in courts of equity. See Court of Chancery; Equity.

Chance verdict. See Verdict.

Chandler Act. Federal act of 1938 making major amendments to Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C.A.). Included in amendments was provision for a debtor to arrange payments with creditors without total liquidation of debtor’s assets. See Bankruptcy Act.

Change, n. An alteration; a modification or addition; substitution of one thing for another. Exchange of money against money of a different denomination.

Change, v. Alter; cause to pass from one place to another; exchange; make different in some particular; put one thing in place of another; vacate.

Changed circumstances. In domestic relations law, used to show need for modification of custody or support orders. Betts v. Betts, 18 Or.App. 35, 523 P.2d 1055. Person may be estopped from exercising rights or defense if other person’s circumstances have changed by reliance. Fisher v. MacDonald, 332 Mass. 727, 127 N.E.2d 484.

Change in accounting method. A change in the taxpayer’s method of accounting, e.g., a change from FIFO to LIFO. Such change normally requires prior approval from the Internal Revenue Service. Generally, a request to the I.R.S. must be filed within 180 days after the beginning of the taxable year of the desired change. In some instances, the permission for change will not be granted unless the taxpayer agrees to certain terms or adjustments which are prescribed by the I.R.S.

Change of beneficiary. A divesting of beneficial interest held by one person and a vesting of that interest in another.

Change of domicile. Change of abode or residence and intention to remain.

Change of grade. Usually understood as an elevation or depression of the surface of a street, or a change of the natural contour of its face so as to facilitate travel over it. It is essential that there shall have been a previously established grade and that a new grade be physically made.

Change of location. Removal from old to new location. Weber County v. Ritchie, 96 Utah 272, 96 P.2d 744. See Change of domicile; Change of venue.

Change of venue. The removal of a suit begun in one county or district to another county or district for trial, though the term is also sometimes applied to the removal of a suit from one court to another court of the same county or district. In criminal cases a change of venue will be permitted if for example the court feels that the defendant cannot receive a fair trial in a given venue because of prejudice. Fed.R.Crim.P. 21. In civil cases a change may be permitted in the interests of justice or for the convenience of the parties. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1404(a). See also Forum non conveniens; Plea of privilege; Venue.

Changer. In England, an officer formerly belonging to the king’s mint whose business was chiefly to exchange coin for bullion brought in by merchants and others.

Channel. The bed in which the main stream of a river flows, rather than the deep water of the stream as followed in navigation. The deeper part of a river, harbor or strait. It may also be used as a generic term applicable to any water course, whether a river, creek, slough, or canal. The “channel” of a river is to be distinguished from a “branch”.

A means of expression or communication. Main channel. That bed of the river over which the principal volume of water flows. The main channel of a navigable stream, called for as a boundary between states, means the “thalweg”, or deepest and most navigable channel as it then existed.

Natural channel. The channel of a stream as determined by the natural configuration of the country through which it flows. The floor or bed on which the water flows, and the banks on each side thereof as carved out by natural causes.
Chantry /'chæntrɪ/. A church or chapel endowed with lands for the maintenance of priests to say Mass daily for the souls of the donors.

Chapel. A place of worship; a lesser or inferior church, sometimes a part of or subordinate to another church.

Chapel of ease. In English ecclesiastical law, a chapel built in aid of original church for parishioners who had fixed their residence at some distance.

Private chapels. Chapels owned by private persons, and used by themselves and their families.

Proprietary chapels. In English law, those belonging to private persons who have purchased or erected them with a view to profit or otherwise.

Public chapels. In English law, chapels founded later than the church for parishioners who fixed their residence at a distance; and chapels so circumstance were described as "chapels of ease."

Chapelry /'chæpəlri/. The precinct and limits of a chapel. The same thing to a chapel as a parish is to a church.

Chapitre /'ʃæpətər/. In English law, a summary of matters to be inquired of or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assise, or of the peace, in their sessions. Also articles delivered by the justice in his charge to the inquest.

Chaplain. A clergyman officially attached to a unit of the armed services, or to some public institution, for the purpose of performing religious services.

Chapman. An itinerant vendor of small wares. A trader who trades from place to place.

Chapter. In England, a body of dignitaries called canons attached to a cathedral church and presided over by a dean. This body constitutes the council of the bishop in both spiritual and temporal affairs. Also, a local branch of a society or fraternity.

Character. The aggregate of the moral qualities which belong to and distinguish an individual person; the general result of the one's distinguishing attributes. That moral predisposition or habit, or aggregate of ethical qualities, which is believed to attach to a person, on the strength of the common opinion and report concerning him. A person's fixed disposition or tendency, as evidenced to others by his habits of life, through the manifestation of which his general reputation for the possession of a character, good or otherwise, is obtained. The estimate attached to an individual or thing in the community. The opinion generally entertained of a person derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him. Although "character" and "reputation" are often used synonymously, the terms are distinguishable. "Character" is what a man is, and "reputation" is what he is supposed to be in what people say he is. "Character" depends on attributes possessed, and "reputation" on attributes which others believe one to possess. The former signifies reality and the latter merely what is accepted to be reality at present. See Bad character; Good character; Representation.

Class or division to which claim belongs.

Character evidence. Evidence of person's moral standing in community based on reputation.

Characterization. In conflicts, the classification, qualification, and interpretation of laws applicable to a case. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 7.

In commercial transactions, to bill or invoice; to purchase on credit. In criminal law, to indict or formally accuse.

Charge, n. An incumbrance, lien, or claim; a burden or load; an obligation or duty; a liability; an accusation. A person or thing committed to the care of another. The price of, or rate for, something. See also Charged; Charges; Floating charge; Rate; Surcharge.

Charge to jury. The final address by judge to jury before verdict, in which he sums up the case, and instructs jury as to the rules of law which apply to its various issues, and which they must observe. The term also applies to the address of court to grand jury, in which the latter are instructed as to their duties. See also Jury Instructions.

General charge. The charge or instruction of the court to the jury upon the case, as a whole, or upon its general features and characteristics.

Special charge. A charge or instruction given by the court to the jury, upon some particular point or question involved in the case, and usually in response to counsel's request for such instruction.

Criminal law. Accusation of a crime by a formal complaint, information or indictment.

Public charge. An indigent. A person whom it is necessary to support at public expense by reason of poverty alone or illness and poverty.

Chargeable. This word, in its ordinary acceptation, as applicable to the imposition of a duty or burden, signifies capable of being charged, subject to be charged, liable to be charged, or proper to be charged.

Charge account. System of purchasing goods and services on credit, under which customer agrees to settle or make payments on his balance within a specified time or periodically.

Revolving charge account. An arrangement between a seller and a buyer pursuant to which: (1) the seller may permit the buyer to purchase goods or services on credit either from the seller or pursuant to a seller credit card, (2) the unpaid balances of amounts financed arising from purchases and the credit service and other appropriate charges are debited to an account, (3) a credit service charge if made is not precomputed but is computed on the outstanding unpaid balances of the buyer's account from time to time.
time, and (4) the buyer has the privilege of paying the balances in installments. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 2.108.

Charge and discharge. Under former equity practice, in taking an account before a master, a written statement of items for which plaintiff asked credit and a counterstatement, exhibiting claims or demands defendant held against plaintiff.

Charged. Accusation of crime by complaint, indictment, or information. With respect to "notice," a person is charged with such if he has information sufficient to apprise him of the subject, e.g. under land recording acts, a person is charged with notice of a lien or attachment if it is on record.

Charge des affaires, or charge d'affaires /shahrzheh dey z afer/"/dahferr/-. The title of a diplomatic representative of inferior rank. In re Baiz, 135 U.S. 403, 10 S.Ct. 854, 34 L.Ed. 222.

Charge-off. Anything manifesting intent to eliminate an item from assets. Write-off of asset or other item, e.g. uncollectible account receivable or debt. To treat as a loss or expense an amount originally recorded as an asset; usually the term is used when the charge is not in accord with original expectations. See Bad debt.

Charges. The expenses which have been incurred, or disbursements made, in connection with a contract, suit, or business transaction. See also Charge: Costs; Fee; Fixed charges.

Charge-sheets. A record kept at a police station to receive the names of the persons brought and given custody, the nature of the accusation, and the name of the accuser in each case.

Charging lien. A lien is a charging lien where the debt is a charge upon the specific property although it remains in the debtor's possession. See Floor plan financing.

Charging order. See Order.

Charitable. Having the character or purpose of a charity. The word "charitable," in a legal sense, includes every gift for a general public use, to be applied consistent with existing laws, for benefit of an indefinite number of persons, and designed to benefit them from an educational, religious, moral, physical, or social standpoint. American Soc. for Testing and Materials v. Board of Revision of Taxes, Philadelphia County, 423 Pa. 530, 225 A.2d 557. This term is synonymous with "beneficent," "benevolent," and "eleemosynary." See also Charity; Eleemosynary.

Charitable bequest. A bequest is charitable if its aims and accomplishments are of religious, educational, political, or general social interest to mankind and if the ultimate recipients constitute either the community as a whole or an unascertainable and indefinite portion thereof.

Charitable contributions. Contributions are deductible (subject to various restrictions and ceiling limitations) if made to qualified nonprofit charitable organizations. A cash basis taxpayer is entitled to a deduction solely in the year of payment. Accrual basis corporations may accrue contributions at year-end if payment is authorized by the Board of Directors prior to the end of the year and payment is made within time specified by I.R.C. before the end of the year. See also Charitable organizations.

Charitable corporation. Non-profit corporation organized for charitable purposes; i.e. for purpose, among other things, of promoting welfare of mankind at large, or of a community, or of some class forming part of it indefinite as to numbers and individuals and is one created for or devoted to charitable purposes. Lynch v. Spilman, 67 Cal.2d 251, 62 Cal.Rptr. 12, 18, 431 P.2d 636. Such corporations must meet certain criteria to receive tax "exempt" status. I.R.C. § 501(c)(3). See Charitable organizations, infra.

Charitable deduction. In taxes, a contribution to a qualified charity or other tax exempt institution for which taxpayer may claim a deduction on his tax return. I.R.C. § 170(c). Also applicable to trusts. I.R.C. § 512(b)(1). As regards tax exempt status of recipient organization, see Charitable organizations. See also Charitable contributions.

Charitable foundation. An organization dedicated to education, health, relief of the poor, etc.; organized for such purposes and not for profit and recognized as such for tax purposes under I.R.C. § 509(a). See also Charitable organizations, infra.

Charitable gift. See Charitable deduction, supra.

Charitable immunity. A doctrine which relieves a charity of liability in tort; long recognized, but currently most states have abrogated or restricted such immunity.

Charitable institution. One which dispenses charity to all who need and apply for it, does not provide gain or profit in private sense to any person connected with it, and does not appear to place obstacles of any character in way of those who need and would avail themselves of charitable benefits it dispenses. Distinctive features are that it has no capital stock or shareholders and earns no profits or dividends; but rather derives its funds mainly from public and private charity and holds them in trust for objects and purposes expressed in its charter. Methodist Old Peoples Home v. Korzen, 39 Ill.2d 149, 233 N.E.2d 537, 541, 542; People ex rel. Nordlund v. Association of Winnebago Home for Aged, 40 Ill.2d 91, 237 N.E.2d 533, 539.

Charitable organizations. As regards "exempt" tax status, such includes: "Corporations, and any community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or to foster national or international amateur sports competition (but only if no part of its activities involve the provision of athletic facilities or equipment), or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individualal, no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation." I.R.C. § 501(c)(3). See also Benevolent associations; Benevolent corporation; Charitable corporation; Charitable foundation; Charitable institution.
Charitable purpose. "Charitable purposes" for purpose of tax exemption has as its common element the accomplishment of objectives which are beneficial to community or area, and usually recognized charitable purposes, not otherwise limited by statute, are generally classified as: relief of poverty; advancement of education; advancement of religion; protection of health; governmental or municipal purposes; and other varied purposes the accomplishment of which is beneficial to community. Bank of Carthage v. U. S., D.C.Mo., 304 F.Supp 77, 80.

A gift is for charitable purposes if it is for religious, scientific, charitable, literary, or educational purposes under tax law. 1.R.C. § 170(c)(4). These purposes are also required for a trust to qualify as a charitable trust.

See also Charitable deduction; Charitable use.

Charitable remainder. A gift over after an intervening estate to a qualified charity; qualifies as a tax deduction under certain conditions.

Charitable remainder annuity trust. A trust which must pay the noncharitable income beneficiary or beneficiaries a sum certain annually, or more frequently, if desired, which is not less than 5% of the initial net fair market value of all property placed in the trust as finally determined for federal tax purposes. In re Danforth's Will, 81 Misc.2d 452, 366 N.Y.S.2d 329, 330.

Charitable trust. Fiduciary relationship with respect to property arising as a result of a manifestation of an intention to create it, and subjecting the person by whom the property is held to equitable duties to deal with the property for a charitable purpose. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 348. See Charitable purpose.

Charitable use. Charitable uses are defined as those of religious, educational, political or general social interest to mankind, or as those for the relief of poverty, advancement of education or religion, or beneficial to the community generally. Thomason v. State, 245 C.A.2d 793, 54 Cal.Rptr. 229, 232. See also Charitable purpose.

Charity. A gift for, or institution engaged in, public benevolent purposes. A gift for benefit of indefinite number of persons under influence of religion or education, relief from disease, assisting people to establish themselves in life, or erecting or maintaining public works. Johnson v. South Blue Hill Cemetery Ass'n, Me., 221 A.2d 280, 287. A "charity", in absence of legislative definition, is attempt in good faith, spiritually, physically, intellectually, socially and economically to advance and benefit mankind in general, or those in need of advancement and benefit in particular, without regard to their ability to supply that need from other sources and without hope or expectation, if not with positive abnegation, of gain or profit by donor or by instrumentality of charity. Planned Parenthood Ass'n v. Tax Commissioner, 5 Ohio St.2d 117, 214 N.E.2d 222, 225. See also Benevolence; Benevolent; Charitable.

Public charity. A charity wherein the benefit is conferred on indefinite persons composing the public or some part of the public.

Charlatan /ˈʃærəldən/. One who pretends to more knowledge or skill than he possesses; a quack; a faker.

Charre of lead. A quantity consisting of 36 pigs of lead, each pig weighing about 70 pounds.

Chart. A map used by navigators.

Charta /ˈkʰaːtə/. In old English law, a charter or deed; an instrument written and sealed; the formal evidence of conveyances and contracts. Also any signal or token by which an estate was held.

The term came to be applied, by way of eminence, to such documents as proceeded from the sovereign, granting liberties or privileges, and either where the recipient of the grant was the whole nation, as in the case of Magna Charta, or a public body, or private individual, in which case it corresponded to the modern word "charter."

In the civil law, a paper suitable for inscription of documents or books; hence, any instrument or writing.

See also Charter.

Charta communis /ˈkʰaːtə kæmiˈvʌnəs/. In old English law, an indenture; a common or mutual charter or deed; one containing mutual covenants, or involving mutuality of obligation; one to which both parties might have occasion to refer, to establish their respective rights.

Charta cyrographata /ˈkʰaːtə kəˈrɔgɹəˌfətə/. In old English law, a chirographed charter; a charter executed in two parts, and cut through the middle (scinditur per medium), where the word “cyrographum,” or “chirographum,” was written in large letters. See Chirograph.

Charta de foresta /ˈkʰaːtə də fəˈrɛstə/. A collection of the laws of the forest, made in the 9th Hen. III, and said to have been originally a part of Magna Charta.

The charta de foresta was called the Great Charter of the woodland population, nobles, barons, freemen, and slaves, loyally granted by Henry III, early in his reign (A.D. 1217). There is a difference of opinion as to the original charter of the forest similar to that which exists respecting the true and original Magna Carta (q.v.), and for the same reason, viz., that both required repeated confirmation by the kings, despite their supposed inviolability. This justifies the remark of recent historians as to the great charter that “this theoretical sanctity and this practical insecurity are shared with 'the Great Charter of Liberties' by the Charter of the Forest which was issued in 1217.” It is asserted with great positiveness by Inerwick that no forest charter was ever granted by King John, but that Henry III issued the charter of 1217 (which he puts in the third year of the reign, which, however, only commenced Oct. 28, 1216), in pursuance of the promises of his father; and Lord Coke, referring to it as a charter on which the lives and liberties of the woodland population depended, says that it was confirmed at least thirty times between the death of John and that of Henry V.

Charta de una parte /ˈkʰaːtə də ʊnə pərˈtə/. A deed-poll; a deed of one part. Formerly used to distinguish a deed poll—that is, an agreement made by one party only—from a deed inter partes.

Charta partita /ˈkʰaːtə partɪtə/. A charter-party.

Charta de non ente non valet /ˈkʰaːtə də nɔn ɛnˈtɛ nɔn vɛlət/. A deed of a thing not in being is not valid.
CHARTÆ LIBERTATUM

Charter libertas /kárdiy libartéydam/chárdiy’/. The charters (grants) of liberties. These are Magna Carta and Charter de Foresta.

Charter non est nisi vestimentum donationis /kárdo non ést náisy věstaméntam daněshiyównas/. A deed is nothing else than the vestment of a gift.

Charterum super fidem, montus testibus, ad patriam de necessitudine recurrencum est /kartéram s(y)úvpar fáydom, mórcwás tésábas, ád pátiriyam diy nsésatyúwdény rékurenámd est/. The witnesses being dead, the truth of charters must of necessity be referred to the country, i.e., a jury.

Charte /shárt/. Fr. A chart, or plan, which mariners use at sea.

Chartel /körtél/. A variant of “cartel” (q.v.).

Charter, v. To hire, rent or lease for a temporary use; e.g. to hire or lease a vessel for a voyage.

Charter, n. An instrument emanating from the sovereign power, in the nature of a grant, either to the whole nation, or to a class or portion of the people, to a corporation, or to a colony or dependency, assuring to them certain rights, liberties, or powers. Such was the “Great Charter” or “Magna Charta,” and such also were the charters granted to certain of the English colonies in America.

A charter differs from a constitution, in that the former is granted by the sovereign, while the latter is established by the people themselves.

A city’s organic law. Charter of municipal corporation consists of the creative act of incorporation, together with all those laws in force which relate to the incorporation, whether defining the powers of the corporation or regulating the mode of exercise thereof, and statute does not fail to become part of charter simply because it is not labeled as such. Opinion of the Justices, Del., 276 A.2d 736, 739.

An act of a legislature creating a corporation, or creating and defining the franchise of a corporation. Also a corporation’s constitution or organic law; that is to say, the articles of incorporation taken in connection with the law under which the corporation was organized. The authority by virtue of which an organized body acts. A contract between the state and the corporation, between the corporation and the stockholders, and between the stockholders and the state. See Corporate charter.

Leasing or hiring of airplane, vessel, or the like. See Charter-party.

In old English law, a deed or other written instrument under seal; a conveyance, covenant, or contract.

Bank charter. Document issued by governmental authority permitting a bank to operate and transact business.

Bare boat charter. Charter where ship owner only provides ship, with charterer providing personnel, insurance and other necessary materials and expenses.

Blank charter. In old English law, a document given to the agents of the crown in the reign of Richard II with power to fill up as they pleased.

Charter agreement. See Charter party.

Charter of affreightment. See Affreightment.

Gross charter. Charter where ship owner provides all personnel and equipment and incurs other expenses such as port costs.

Time charter. Charter wherein vessel is leased for specified time rather than for specified trip or voyage. See also Time (Time charter).

Chartered ship. A ship hired or freighted; a ship which is the subject-matter of a charter-party.

Charterer. One who charters (i.e., hires, leases or engages) a vessel, airplane, etc. for transportation or voyage.

Charter-land. In English law, otherwise called “bookland.” Property held by deed under certain rents and free services. It, in effect, differs nothing from the free socage lands, and hence have arisen most of the freehold tenants, who hold of particular manors, and owe suit and service to the same. 2 Bl.Comm. 90.

Charter-party. A contract by which a ship, or some principal part thereof, is let to a merchant for the conveyance of goods on a determined voyage to one or more places.

The term “charter-party,” often shortened to “charter,” designates the document in which are set forth the arrangements and contractual engagements entered into when one person (the “charterer”) takes over the use of the whole of a ship belonging to another (the “owner”).

Chartis reddendis /kárdo rođédás/. (For returning the charters.) An ancient writ which lay against one who had charters of feufoftment intrusted to his keeping and refused to deliver them.

Chartophylax /körtófaľks/. In old European law, a keeper of records or public instruments; a chartulary; a registrar.

Chase. To pursue or follow rapidly with the intention of catching or driving away. See Fresh pursuit.

In English law, the liberty or franchise of hunting, one’s self, and keeping protected against all other persons, beasts of the chase within a specified district, without regard to the ownership of the land. The act of acquiring possession of animals ferae naturae by force, cunning, or address. A privileged place for preservation of deer and beasts of the forest. It is commonly less than a forest and of larger compass than a park. Every forest is a chase, but every chase is not a forest. It differs from a park in that it is not inclosed, yet it must have certain metes and bounds. In old English law, a “common” chase was a place where all alike were entitled to hunt wild animals.

Chaste character. Denoting purity of mind and innocence of heart; not limited merely to unlawful sexual intercourse.

Chastity. Purity; continence. Quality or state of being chaste. It means that virtue which prevents the unlawful intercourse of the sexes; the state of purity or abstinence from unlawful sexual connection.

Chattel /chádəl/. An article of personal property, as opposed to real property. A thing personal and movable. It may refer to animate as well as inanimate property. See also Goods; Property (Personal property).

Personal chattel. Movable things. Personal property which has no connection with real estate.

Real chattels. Such as concern real property, such as leasehold estates; interests issuing out of, or annexed to, real estate; such chattel interests as devolve after the manner of realty. An interest in real estate less than freehold or fee. See also Fixture.

Chattel lien. Chattel liens exist in favor of persons expending labor, skill or materials on any chattel or furnishing storage thereof at request of owner, his agent, reputed owner, or lawful possessor. See e.g. Artisan’s lien.

Chattel mortgage. A pre-Uniform Commercial Code security device whereby a security interest was taken by the mortgagee in personal property of the mortgagor. A transfer of some legal or equitable right in personal property or creation of a lien thereon as security for payment of money or performance of some other act, subject to defeasance on performance of the conditions. Such security device has generally been superseded by other types of security agreements under U.C.C. Article 9 (Secured Transactions). See Secured transaction; Security agreement.

Chattel paper. A writing or writings which evidence both a monetary obligation and a security interest in or a lease of specific goods. In many instances chattel paper will consist of a negotiable instrument coupled with a security agreement. When a transaction is evidenced both by such a security agreement or a lease and by an instrument or a series of instruments, the group of writings taken together constitutes chattel paper. U.C.C. § 9–105(1)(b). See Secured transaction; Security agreement.

Chaud-medley /ʃəʊdˈmɛdli/. A homicide committed in the heat of an affray and while under the influence of passion; it is thus distinguished from chance-medley, which is the killing of a man in a casual affray in self-defense. It has been said, however, that the distinction is of no great importance.

Chauffeur. A person employed to operate and attend motor vehicle for another.

Chantry rents /ˈchʌntri ˈrɛnts/. In old English law, money paid to the Crown by the servants or purchasers of chantry-lands. See Chantry.

Chaussée /ʃoʊˈswesɛ/. Fr. A levee of earth, made to retain the water of a river or pond; a levee made in low, wet, and swampy places to serve as a road.

Cheat, v. To deceive and defraud. It necessarily implies a fraudulent intent. The words “cheat and defraud” usually mean to induce a person to part with the possession of property by reason of intentionally false representations relied and acted upon by such person to his harm. They include not only the crime of false pretenses, but also all civil frauds, and include all tricks, devices, artifices, or deceptions used to deprive another of property or other right. See Fraud.

Cheats, punishable at common law, were such cheats (not amounting to felony) as were effected by deceitful or illegal symbols or tokens which may affect the public at large, and against such common prudence could not have guarded.

Cheaters, or escheators. In old English law, officers appointed to look after the king’s escheats, a duty which gave them great opportunities of fraud and oppression, and in consequence many complaints were made of their misconduct. Hence it seems that a cheater came to signify a fraudulent person, and thence the verb to cheat was derived.

Check, v. To control or restrain; to hold within bounds. To verify or audit, as to examine the books and records of another or a business for accuracy and proper accounting practices. Particularly used with reference to the control or supervision of one depart- ment, bureau, office, or person over another.

Check, n. A draft drawn upon a bank and payable on demand, signed by the maker or drawer, containing an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money to the order of the payee. State v. Perrigoe, 81 Wash.2d 640, 503 P.2d 1063, 1066. U.C.C. § 3–104(2)(b).

The Federal Reserve Board defines a check as “a draft or order upon a bank or banking house purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money to a certain person therein named or to him or his order or to bearer and payable instantly on demand.” It must contain the phrase “pay to the order of.” See also Bad check; Bogus check; Cancelled check; Cashier’s check; Draft; Registered check; Stale check; Travelers check.

Blank check. Check which is signed by drawer but left blank as to payee and/or amount.

Cashier’s check. A bank’s own check drawn on itself and signed by the cashier or other authorized official. It is a direct obligation of the bank. Chiefrie. In feudal law, a small rent paid to the lord paramount.

Chief, tenant in. In English feudal law, all the land in the kingdom was supposed to be holden mediatarily or immediately of the king, who was styled the "Lord Paramount," or "Lord Above All;" and those that held immediately under him, in right of his crown and dignity, were called his tenants "in capite" or "in chief," which was the most honorable species of tenure, but at the same time subjected the tenant to greater and more burdensome services than inferior tenures did. One who held directly of the king.

Child. Progeny; offspring of parentage. Unborn or recently born human being. Wilson v. Weaver, 358 F.Supp. 1147, 1154. At common law one who had not attained the age of fourteen years, though the meaning now varies in different statutes; e.g. child labor, support, criminal, etc. statutes. The term "child" or "children" may include or apply to: adopted, after-born, or illegitimate child; step-child; child by second or former marriage; issue.

See also Delinquent child; Disobedient child; Foster child; Illegitimate child; Infancy; Juvenile; Minor; Neglected child; Person; Posthumous child; Pretermitted heir; Viable child. For negligence of child, see Parental liability.

Child's part. A "child's part," which a widow, by statute in some states, is entitled to take in lieu of dower or the provision made for her by will, is a full share to which a child of the decedent would be entitled, subject to the debts of the estate and the cost of administration up to and including distribution.

Illegitimate child. Child born out of lawful wedlock.

Natural child. Child by natural relation or procreation. Child by birth, as distinguished from a child by adoption. Illegitimate children who have been acknowledged by the father.

Posthumous child. One born after the father's death.

Quasi-posthumous child. In the civil law, one who, born during the life of his grandfather, or other male ascendant, was not his heir at the time he made his testament, but who by the death of his father became his heir in his life-time.

Rights of unborn child. Medical authority has recognized long since that a child is in existence (i.e. alive) from the moment of conception, and for many purposes its existence is recognized by the law. The criminal law regards it as a separate entity, and the law of property considers it in being for all purposes which are to its benefit, such as taking by will or descent. After its birth, it has been held that it may maintain a statutory action for the wrongful death of the parent. In addition, the child, if he is born alive, is permitted to maintain an action for the consequences of prenatal injuries, and if he dies of such injuries after birth an action will lie for his wrongful death. Many states have allowed recovery even though the injury occurred during the early weeks of pregnancy, when the child was neither viable nor quick. Sylvia v. Gobeille, 1966, 101 R.I. 76, 220 A.2d 222; Hornbeck v. Plantation Pipe Co., 1956, 212 Ga. 504, 93 S.E.2d 727, confirmed to 94 Ga. App. 2d 328, 94 S.E.2d 523; Bennett v. Hymers, 1958, 101 N.H. 483, 147 A.2d 108; Sinkler v. Kneale, 1960, 401 Pa. 267, 164 A.2d 93; Smith v. Brennan, 1960, 31 N.J. 353, 157 A.2d 497.

In Roman law, an act of Valentinian, passed A.D. 426, providing that the writings of only five jurists, viz., Papinian, Paul, Gaius, Ulpian, and Modestinus, should be quoted as authorities. The majority was binding on the judge. If they were equally divided the opinion of Papinian was to prevail; and in such a case, if Papinian was silent upon the matter, then the judge was free to follow his own view of the matter.

Citatores. A set of books which provide, through letterform abbreviations or words, the subsequent judicial history and interpretation of reported decisions, inclusion of cases and legislative enactments construing, applying or affecting statutes. The most widely used set of citators is Shepard's Citations.

Cite. L. Fr. City; a city. Cite de Louadr, city of London.

Cite. To summon; to command the presence of a person; to notify a person of legal proceedings against him and require his appearance thereto. To read or refer to legal authorities, in an argument to a court or elsewhere, in support of propositions of law sought to be established. To name in citation. To mention in support, illustration, or proof of. See Citation; Citation of authorities.

Citizen. One who, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or of a particular state, is a member of the political community, owing allegiance and being entitled to the enjoyment of full civil rights. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. U.S.Const., 14th Amend.

"Citizens" are members of a political community who, in their associated capacity, have established or submitted themselves to the dominion of a government for the promotion of their general welfare and the protection of their individual as well as collective rights. Herriott v. City of Seattle, 81 Wash.2d 48, 500 P.2d 101, 109.

Citizen's arrest. A private citizen as contrasted with a police officer may, under certain circumstances, make an arrest, generally for a felony or misdemeanor or amounting to a breach of the peace. A private person may arrest another: 1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence. 2. When the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence. 3. When a felony has been in fact committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it. Calif.Penal Code, § 837.

Citizenship. The status of being a citizen. See Corporate citizenship; Diversity of citizenship; Dual citizenship; Federal citizenship.

City. A municipal corporation; in most states, of the largest and highest class. Also, the territory within the corporate limits. A political entity or subdivision for local governmental purposes; commonly headed by a mayor, and governed by a city council.

City council. The principal governmental body of a municipal corporation with power to pass ordinances, levy taxes, appropriate funds, and generally administer city government. The name of a group of municipal officers constituting primarily a legislative and administrative body, but which is often charged with judicial or quasi judicial functions, as when sitting on charges involving the removal of an officer for cause.

City courts. Court which tries persons accused of violating municipal ordinances and has jurisdiction over minor civil or criminal cases, or both.

Civil. Pertaining to a city or citizen, or to citizenship.

Civil enterprise. A project or undertaking in which citizens of a city co-operate to promote the common good and general welfare of the people of the city.

Civil. Of or relating to the state or its citizenry. Relating to private rights and remedies sought by civil actions as contrasted with criminal proceedings.

The word is derived from the Latin civilis, a citizen. Originally, pertaining or appropriate to a member of a civitas or free political community; natural or proper to a citizen. Also, relating to the community, or to the policy and government of the citizens and subjects of a state.

As to civil Bail; Commitment; Commotion; Conspiracy; Contempt; Corporation; Death; Injury; Liberty; Obligation; Officer; Possession; Remedy; Right; and War, see those titles. See also, the titles which follow.

Civil action. Action brought to enforce, redress, or protect private rights. In general, all types of actions other than criminal proceedings. Gilliken v. Gilliken, 248 N.C. 710, 104 S.E.2d 861, 863.

The term includes all actions, both those formerly known as equitable actions and those known as legal actions, or, in other phraseology, both suits in equity and actions at law. Thomason v. Thomason, 107 U.S.App.D.C. 27, 274 F.2d 89, 90.

In the great majority of states which have adopted rules or codes of civil procedure as patterned on the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, there is only one form of action known as a "civil action." The former distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and the separate forms of those actions and suits, have been abolished. Rule of Civil Proc. 2; New York CPLR § 103(a).

See also Penal action.

Civil Aeronautics Board. The Civil Aeronautics Board, an independent regulatory commission, was originally established under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 973) and continued by the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 731). The Board has broad authority to promote and regulate the civil air transport industry within the United States and between the United States and foreign countries in the interests of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, the postal service, and the national defense. Board decisions involving the domestic operations of air carriers are not subject to review or approval by the President or by any department or agency of Government, but Federal, State, or local agencies may participate in formal proceedings before the Board as parties or as intervenors. Grants of authority to operate between the United States and foreign countries require the approval of the President. Board decisions may be appealed to the United States Courts of Appeal, which have exclusive authority to affirm, modify, or set aside such orders, or to return the case to the Board for further proceedings.

Civil authority clause. Provision in fire insurance policy protecting insured from damages caused by firemen, police, and other civil authorities.

Civil bail. A bond, deposit of money or of property, to secure the release of a person who is under civil arrest for failing to pay a debt which has been reduced to court order and its effect is to insure payment of such order.

Civil Code. See Code Civil.

Civil commitment. A form of confinement order used in the civil context for those who are insane, alcoholic, drug addicted, etc. as contrasted with the criminal commitment of a sentence. Also applicable to confinement for failure to pay a debt which has been converted to a court order for payment; the failure to pay being contempt of court. See also Commitment.

Civil conspiracy. A combination of two or more persons who, by concerted action, seek to accomplish an unlawful purpose or to accomplish some purpose, not in itself unlawful by unlawful means. Lake Mortgage Co., Inc. v. Federal Nat. Mortgage Ass'n, 159 Ind.App. 605, 308 N.E.2d 739, 744.

Civil conspiracy that gives rise to cause of action is combination of two or more persons for purpose of accomplishing by concerted action either lawful purpose by unlawful means or unlawful purpose by lawful means. Wooded Shores Property Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Mathews, 37 Ill.App.3d 334, 345 N.E.2d 186, 192.

Civil contempt. A species of contempt of court which generally arises from a willful failure to comply with an order of court such as an injunction as contrasted with criminal contempt which consists generally of contumelious conduct in the presence of the court. Punishment for civil contempt may be a fine or imprisonment, the object of such punishment being compliance with the order of the court. Such contempt is committed when a person violates an order of court which requires that person in specific and definite language to do or refrain from doing an act or series of acts. Lichtenstein v. Lichtenstein, C.A.Pa., 425 F.2d 1111, 1113. See also Contempt.

Civil Damage Acts. See Dram Shop Acts.

Civil death. In some states, persons convicted of serious crimes are declared to be civilly dead which means that all rights and privileges of the convicted offender including the right to contract and to sue and be sued are forfeited. See Civil disabilities, infra.

Civil disabilities. Apart from the sentence which is imposed upon a convicted offender, numerous civil disabilities are also often imposed. These disabilities, which may affect an offender both during his incarceration and after his release, include denial of such privileges as voting, holding public office, obtaining many jobs and occupational licenses, entering judicially-enforceable agreements, maintaining family relationships, and obtaining insurance and pension benefits. See also Civil death.

Civil disobedience. A form of lawbreaking employed to demonstrate the injustice or unfairness of a particular law and indulged in deliberately to focus attention on the allegedly undesirable law. See Civil disorder.

Civil disorder. Any public disturbance involving acts of violence by assemblages of three or more persons, which causes an immediate danger of or results in damage or injury to the property or person of any other individual. 18 U.S.C.A. § 232. See also Riot.

Civil fraud. In taxation, the specific intent to evade a tax which taxpayer believes to be owing is an essential element of civil fraud. May also be applied to the tort of deceit or fraud in contrast to criminal fraud.

Civillian. Private citizen, as distinguished from such as belong to the armed services, or (in England) the church. One who is skilled or versed in the civil law.

Civilis /sívalis/. Lat. Civil, as distinguished from criminal. Civilis actio, a civil action.

Civilista /sívalista/. In old English law, a civil lawyer, or civilian.

Civiliter /sívaldår/. Civilly. In a person's civil character or position, or by civil (not criminal) process or procedure. This term is used in distinction or opposition to the word "criminaliter,"—criminally,—to distinguish civil actions from criminal prosecutions.

Civiliter mortuus /sívaldår mórchwuas/. Civilly dead; dead in the view of the law. The condition of one who has lost his civil rights and capacities, and is accounted dead in law. See Civil death.

Civilization. A law, an act of justice, or judgment which renders a criminal process civil.

A term which covers several states of society; it is relative, and has no fixed sense, but implies an improved and progressive condition of the people, living under an organized government. It consists not merely in material achievements, in accomplishment and accumulation of wealth, or in advancement in culture, science, and knowledge, but also in doing of equal and exact justice.

Civil jury trial. Trial of civil action before a jury rather than before a judge. In suits at common law in Federal court where value in controversy exceeds $20.00, there is constitutional right to jury trial. U.S. Const., 7th Amend.; Fed.R.Civil P. 38. See also Jury trial.

Civil law. That body of law which every particular nation, commonwealth, or city has established peculiarly for itself; more properly called "municipal" law, to distinguish it from the "law of nature," and from international law. Laws concerned with civil or private rights and remedies, as contrasted with criminal laws.

The system of jurisprudence held and administered in the Roman empire, particularly as set forth in the compilation of Justinian and his successors,—comprising the Institutes, Code, Digest, and Novels, and collectively denominated the "Corpus Juris Civilis,"—as distinguished from the common law of England and the canon law. The civil law (Civil Code) is followed in Louisiana. See Code Civil.

Civil liability. The amenability to civil action as distinguished from amenability to criminal prosecution. A sum of money assessed either as general, special or liquidated damages; may be either single, double or treble for violation such as overcharges.

Civil liability acts. See Dram Shop Acts.

Civil liberties. Personal, natural rights guaranteed and protected by Constitution; e.g. freedom of speech, press, freedom from discrimination, etc. Body of law dealing with natural liberties, siren of excesses which invade equal rights of others. Constitutionally, they are restraints on government. Sowers v. Ohio Civil Rights Commission, 20 Ohio Misc. 115, 252 N.E.2d 463, 476. See also Civil Rights Acts.

Civil nuisance. At common law, anything done to hurt or annoyance of lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. See Nuisance.
CIVIL OBLIGATION

Civil obligation. One which binds in law, and may be enforced in a court of justice.

Civil offense. Term used to describe violations of statutes making the act a public nuisance. Also describes an offense which is malum prohibitum and not considered reprehensible.

Civil office. A non-military public office; one which pertains to the exercise of the powers or authority of government.

Civil officer. See Officer.

Civil possession. See Possession.

Civil process. See Process.

Civil responsibility. The liability to be called upon to respond to an action at law for an injury caused by a delict or crime, as opposed to criminal responsibility, or liability to be proceeded against in a criminal tribunal.

Civil rights. See Civil liberties.

Civil Rights Acts. Federal statutes enacted after Civil War, and more recently in 1957 and 1964, intended to implement and give further force to basic personal rights guaranteed by Constitution. Such Acts prohibit discrimination based on race, color, age, or religion.

Civil servant. See Civil service.

Civil service. Term generally means employment in federal, state, city and town government with such positions filled on merit as a result of competitive examinations. Such employment carries with it certain statutory rights to job security, advancement, etc. See Civil Service Commission; Competitive civil service examination.

Civil Service Commission. The United States Civil Service Commission (CSC) was created by act of Congress on January 16, 1883. Authority is codified under 5 U.S.C.A. § 1101.

The Civil Service Act was designed to establish a merit system under which appointments to Federal jobs are made on the basis of fitness—as determined by open and competitive examination—rather than personal preference or political considerations. Over the years, additional legislation and Executive orders have broadened the Commission’s role to include such Federal personnel management activities as job classification, status and tenure, pay comparability, awards, training, labor-management relations, equal employment opportunity, health and life insurance programs, and retirement. The Commission was reorganized and restructured under the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. Similar commissions exist in most states covering state and local public employment.

Civil side. When the same court has jurisdiction of both civil and criminal matters, proceedings of the first class are often said to be on the civil side; those of the second, on the criminal side.

Civil suits. See Civil action.

Civil trials. Trials of civil as distinguished from criminal cases.

Civil war. In general, any internal armed conflict between persons of same country. War Between the States in which Federal government contended against seceding Confederate states from 1861 to 1865. Also, in England, war between Parliamentarians and Royalists from 1642 to 1652.

Civil year. See Year.

Civilis /sǐvǐs/. Lat. In the Roman law, a citizen; as distinguished from incola (an inhabitant); origin or birth constituting the former, domicile the latter.

Civilitas /sǐvīlītās/. Lat. In the Roman law, any body of people living under the same laws; a state. Jus civitatis, the law of a state; civil law. Civitates federatae, towns in alliance with Rome, and considered to be free. Citizenship; one of the three status, conditions, or qualifications of persons.

C.J. An abbreviation for chief justice; also for circuit judge.

C.J.S. Corpus Juris Secundum.

C.L. An abbreviation for civil law.

Clafin trust. A type of trust in which donor or settlor makes specific provisions for termination and the courts respect such provisions by denying the beneficiary the right to terminate. Called an indestructible trust, deriving its name from the case, Clafin v. Clafin, 149 Mass. 19, 20 N.E. 454.

Claim. To demand as one’s own or as one’s right; to assert; to urge; to insist. Cause of action. Means by or through which claimant obtains possession or enjoyment of privilege or thing. Demand for money or property, e.g. insurance claim.

Right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured; or right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach gives rise to a right to payment, whether or not such right to an equitable remedy is reduced to judgment, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, secured, or unsecured. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(4).

In conflicts of law, a receiver may be appointed in any state which has jurisdiction over the defendant who owes a claim. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 369.

See also Antecedent claim; Cause of action; Community debt; Complaint; Counterclaim; Cross-claim; False claim; Joinder; Liability; Liquidated claim; Third party complaint. For proof of claim, see Proof; for joinder of claims, see Joinder.
Claim adjuster. Independent agent or employee of an insurance company who negotiates and settles claims against the insurer. See Adjuster; Claimant adjuster.

Claim and delivery. Action at law for recovery of specific personal chattels wrongfully taken and detained, with damages which the taking or detention has causes. A modification of common-law action of replevin.

Claimant. One who claims or asserts a right, demand or claim. See Claim; Plaintiff.

Claimant adjuster. One who will obtain, secure, enforce, or establish a right, claim, or demand for an individual against an insurance company.

Claim check. Form of receipt for bailed or checked property, which normally must be surrendered when such property is recovered.

Claim in equity. In English practice, in simple cases, the summary proceeding by claim was sometimes adopted. This summary practice was created by orders 22d April, 1850. By Consolid.Ord.1860, viii, r. 4, such claims were abolished.

Claim jumping. The location on ground, knowing it to be excess ground, within the staked boundaries of another mining claim initiated prior thereto, because law governing manner of making location had not been complied with, so that location covers the workings of the prior locators. Filing of duplicate mining claims hoping that prior claim will be invalid.

Claim of cognizance or of consuance. An intervention by a third person, claiming jurisdiction or demanding judicature in cause, which plaintiff has commenced out of the claimant's court. Now obsolete. 2 Bl. Comm. 350, note; 3 Bl.Comm. 298.

Claim of liberty. In English practice, a suit or petition to the queen, in the former court of escheuer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the attorney general.

Claim of ownership, right and title. As regards adverse possession, claim of land as one's own to hold it for oneself. Claim of right, claim of title and claim of ownership are synonymous. Claimant's intention to claim in hostility to real owner. Color of title and claim of title are synonymous. Intention of disseisor to appropriate and use land as his own, irrespective of any semblance of color, or right, or title.

Claim of right doctrine. In taxation, a payment received under a claim of right is includible in income even though there is a possibility that all or part of it may have to be returned. North American Oil Consolidated v. Burnet, 286 U.S. 417, 52 S.Ct. 613, 76 L.Ed. 1197. A judicially imposed doctrine applicable to both cash and accrual basis taxpayers which holds that an amount is includible in income upon actual or constructive receipt if the taxpayer has an unrestricted claim to such amounts.

Claim property bond. A bond filed by a defendant in cases of replevin and of execution to procure return of goods.

Claims Collection Act. Federal Act which requires that each agency of the federal government attempt to collect claims of the government (e.g. overpayments) arising out of the activities of the agency.

Claims court. See Court of Claims.

Clam /klæm/. Lat. In the civil law, covertly; secretly.

Clam delinquentes magis pulnuntur quam palam /klæm délǐkwēntlɪz ymɛləs pówlnjʊntər kwɔm póləm/. Those sinning secretly are punished more severely than those sinning openly.

Clamea admissenda in itinere per attornatum /klɛmɪə ədmatɛnɔ da in ətlinɛrə pɛr ɔtɔrnətɔm/. An ancient writ by which the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit the claim by attorney of a person who was in the royal service, and could not appear in person.

Clam factum id videtur esse, quod quisque, quum controversiam habetur, habiturumve se putaret, fecit /klæm ʃɑktum ɪd vɪdɛtʊr ɛsɛ kʊd kɪskwɪk ʃæt ɪd ɪsɪk ʃæt ɪd ətɔrnətʊm ʃev ˈpʊtərət ʃɛ ˈpʊtərət ʃɪs ˈpʊtərət ʃɪs ˈpʊtərət ʃɪs ˈpʊtərət/. That appears to be covertly (secretly) done, which anyone did, when he had a legal dispute, or thought he would have one.

Clamor. In old English law, a claim or complaint; an outcry; clamor.

Clamor. In the civil law, a claimant; a debt; anything claimed from another; a proclamation; an accusation.

Clam, vi, aut precario /klæm, vʌ, ət prɛkəriʌ/. A technical phrase of the Roman law, meaning by force, stealth, or importunity.

Clandestine. Secret, hidden, concealed; usually for some illegal or illicit purpose. For example, a clandestine marriage is one contracted without observing the conditions precedent prescribed by law, such as publication of banns, procuring a license, or the like.

Clap. See Gonorrea.

Clarendon, assize of /sɛzɪz əv kələrəndən/. English statute (1166) the principal feature of which was an improvement of judicial procedure in the case of criminals. It was a part of the same scheme of reform as the Constitution of Clarendon.

Clarendon, constitutions of /kənstətjuːwʃənz əv kələrəndən/. Certain statutes made in the reign of Henry II of England, at a parliament held at Clarendon (A.D. 1164), by which the king checked the power of the pope and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the exemption they claimed from secular jurisdiction. 4 Bl.Comm. 422.

Class. A group of persons, things, qualities, or activities, having common characteristics or attributes. In re Kanawha Val. Bank, 144 W.Va. 346, 109 S.E.2d 649, 670. The order or rank according to which persons or things are arranged or assorted. Also a body of persons uncertain in number.

Class action. See Class or representative action.

Class directors. System whereby terms of directors are staggered, thus making takeover attempt difficult.
CLASSES OF STOCK

Classes of stock. Issuance of common stock in two general classes: Class A and Class B. Normally, only one class has voting rights.

Class gift. A gift of an aggregate sum to a body of persons uncertain in number at time of gift, to be ascertained at a future time, who are all to take in equal, or other definite proportions, the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number. In re Clarke’s Estate, 460 Pa. 41, 331 A.2d 408, 410.

Classarius /klæsɪəˈrɪəs/. A seaman or soldier serving at sea.

Classici /klæˈsasɪʃi/. In the Roman law, persons employed in servile duties on board of vessels.

Classification. Arrangement into groups or categories on the basis of established criteria. The word may have two meanings, one primarily signifying a division required by statutes, fundamental and substantial, and the other secondary, signifying an arrangement or enumeration adopted for convenience only.

Classification of crimes. A grouping of crimes; taxonomy which may be based on the seriousness of the crime, e.g., felony or misdemeanor, or on the nature of the crime, e.g., malum prohibitum or malum in se, or on the objects of the crime, e.g., crimes against property or crimes against the person. Felonies and misdemeanors are also sometimes classified in state statutes as Class A, B, etc., with punishments set for each class. Crimes are also commonly classified into degrees; e.g., first and second degree murder; and also as voluntary or involuntary (e.g., manslaughter).

Classification of risks. Term used in fire insurance to designate the nature and situation of the articles insured, and in accident insurance to the occupation of the applicant.

Classified. Grouped into classes. See Classification.

Classified tax. Tax system where different rates are assessed to each group of property.

Class legislation. Legislation limited in operation to certain persons or classes of persons, natural or artificial, or to certain districts of territory or state. Legislation operating upon portion of particular class of persons or things.

The term is applied to enactments which divide the people or subjects of legislation into classes, with reference either to the grant of privileges or the imposition of burdens, upon an arbitrary, unjust, or invidious principle, or which make arbitrary discriminations between those persons or things coming within the same class. Such laws commonly violate equal protection guarantees of Fourteenth Amendment.

Class or representative action. A class action provides a means by which, where a large group of persons are interested in a matter, one or more may sue or be sued as representatives of the class without needing to join every member of the class. This procedure is available in federal court and in most state courts under Rule of Civil Procedure 23. See also New York C.P.L.R. § 901.

There are general requirements for the maintenance of any class suit. These are that the persons constituting the class must be so numerous that it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, and the named representatives must be such as will fairly insure the adequate representation of them all. In addition, there must be an ascertainable class and there must be a well defined community of interest in the questions of law and fact involved affecting the parties to be represented. Daar v. Yellow Cab Co., 67 Cal.2d 695, 63 Cal.Rptr. 724, 731, 433 P.2d 732.

Prior to the revision of Civil Procedure Rule 23 in 1966, there were three categories of class actions, popularly known as “true”, “hybrid”, and “spurious.” These categories no longer exist under present Rule 23.

See Hybrid class action; Spurious class action.

Clause /kló/z/. A single paragraph or subdivision of a pleading or legal document, such as a contract, deed, will, constitution, or statute. Sometimes a sentence or part of a sentence. See Paragraph.

Clause potestative. In French law, the name given to the clause whereby one party to a contract reserves to himself the right to annul it.

Clause rolls. In old English law, rolls which contain all such matters of record as were committed to close writs; these rolls are preserved in the Tower.

Clausula /kló/z(h)yala/. A clause; a sentence or part of a sentence in a written instrument or law.

Clausula derogativa /kló/zhala ḏarōgātāva/. A clause in a will which provides that no will subsequently made is to be valid. The latter would still be valid, but there would be ground for suspecting undue influence.

Clausula generalis de residuo non ea complectitur quo non ejusdem sint generis cum ipsis quae speculat dicta fuerant /klózhala jenērəyəla dɪə razidyuyəw nən ɪəx kamləkədər kwə niŋ əjsədəm sint jenəras kəm əyas kwə spəsiyiɛdəm dɪktə (k)ʊwərənt/. A general clause of remainder does not embrace those things which are not of the same kind with those which had been specially mentioned.

Clausula generalis non referitur ad expressa /klózhala jenērəyəla nən ɹəfərdər əd əskpərə/. A general clause does not refer to things expressed.

Clausula que abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet /klózhala kwə æbrəgyəsʰiɔˈnəm əskəl(y)ʊwədət əb ənɪʃ(ɪ)əw nən vələt/. A clause [in a law] which precludes its abrogation is void from the beginning.

Clausula rebus sic stantibus /klózhala rɪˈbəs sɪk sɑntətəs/. A tacit condition said to attach to all contracts meaning that they cease to be obligatory as soon as the state of facts out of which they arose has changed. This principle was used to demand payment on a contract value for value when the currency in which payment had been specified had become worthless through inflation/depreciation.
CLEAR AND PRESENT DANGER DOCTRINE

have been) safely and properly stowed under deck. One which contains nothing in the margin qualifying the words in the bill of lading itself.

Clean hands doctrine. Under "clean hands" doctrine, equity will not grant relief to a party, who, as actor, seeks to set judicial machinery in motion and obtain summary remedy, if such party in his prior conduct has violated conscience or good faith or other equitable principle. Franklin v. Franklin, 365 Mo. 442, 283 S.W.2d 483, 486.

Clear. Obvious; beyond reasonable doubt; perspicuous; plain. Free from all limitation, qualification, question or shortcoming. Free from incumbrance, obstruction, burden, limitation, etc. Plain, evident, free from doubt or conjecture, unequivocal, also unincumbered. Free from deductions or drawbacks.

Clearance. In maritime law, the right of a ship to leave port. The act of clearing or leaving port. The certificate issued by the collector of a port evidencing the power of the ship to leave port. In contract for exhibition of motion pictures, the interval of time between conclusion of exhibition in one theater and commencement of exhibition at another theater. Waxmann v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, D.C.Pa., 40 F.Supp. 108, 111.

Clearance card. A letter given to an employee by his employer, at the time of his discharge or end of service, showing the cause of such discharge or voluntary quittance, the length of time of service, his capacity, and such other facts as would give to those concerned information of his former employment.

Clearance certificate. Issued to ship's captain showing that customs requirements have been made.

Clear and convincing proof. Generally, this phrase and its numerous variations mean proof beyond a reasonable, i.e., a well-founded doubt. Some cases give a less rigorous, but somewhat uncertain, meaning, viz., more than a preponderance but less than is required in a criminal case.

Proof which should leave no reasonable doubt in the mind of the trier of the facts concerning the truth of the matters in issue. In Interest of Jones, 34 Ill.App.3d 603, 340 N.E.2d 269, 274.

That measure or degree of proof which will produce in mind of trier of facts a firm belief or conviction as to allegations sought to be established; it is intermediate, being more than mere preponderance, but not to extent of such certainty as is required beyond reasonable doubt as in criminal cases. Fred C. Walker Agency, Inc. v. Lucas, 215 Va. 535, 211 S.E.2d 88, 92.

See also Beyond a reasonable doubt; Burden of proof; Clear evidence or proof.

Clear and present danger doctrine. Doctrine in constitutional law, first formulated in Schenck v. U. S., 249 U.S. 47, 39 S.Ct. 247, 63 L.Ed. 470, providing that governmental restrictions on freedoms of speech and press will be upheld if necessary to prevent grave and immediate danger to interests which government may lawfully protect.

Speech which incites to unlawful action falls outside the protection of the First Amendment where Clausula vel dispositio inutiliss per præsumptionem remotam, vel causam ex post facto non fuletur /klöžahlal vál dispząžh(zy)ow inyúwdač pér prážam(p)shiywonym, rámówdnam, vál köžam èks pówst fákñow nón fáš雯ar. A useless clause or disposition [one which expresses no more than the law by intendment would have supplied] is not supported by a remote presumption [or foreign intendment of some purpose, in regard whereof it might be material], or by a cause arising afterwards [which may induce an operation of those idle words].

Clausum /klöžam/. Lat. Close, closed up, sealed. Inclosed, as a parcel of land. A writ was either clausum (close) or apertum (open). Grants were said to be by litera patente (open grant) or literæ cláuse (close grant); 2 Bl.Comm. 346. Occurring in the phrase quare clausum fregit it denotes in this sense only relity in which the plaintiff has some exclusive interest, whether for a limited or unlimited time or for special or for general purposes.

Clausum fregit /klöžam frijayt/. L. Lat. (He broke the close.) In pleading and practice, technical words formerly used in certain actions of trespass, and still retained in the phrase quare clausum fregit (q.v.).

Clausum paschiae /klöžam pásksiwij/. In English law, the morrow of the utas, or eight days of Easter; the end of Easter; the Sunday after Easter-day.

Code. A systematic collection, compendium or revision of laws, rules, or regulations. A private or official compilation of all permanent laws in force consolidated and classified according to subject matter. Many states have published official codes of all laws in force, including the common law and statutes as judicially interpreted, which have been compiled by code commissions and enacted by the legislatures. See also Codification.

Code Civil. The code which embodies the civil law of France. It was promulgated in 1804. When Napoleon became emperor, the name was changed to “Code Napoleon,” by which it is still often designated though it is now officially styled by its original name of “Code Civil.” A great part of the Louisiana Civil Code is derived from the Code Napoleon.

Code de commerce. A French code, enacted in 1807, as a supplement to the Code Napoleon, regulating commercial transactions, the laws of business, bankruptcies, and the jurisdiction and procedure of the courts dealing with these subjects.

Code de procedure civil. That part of the Code Napoleon which regulates the system of courts, their organization, civil procedure, special and extraordinary remedies, and the execution of judgments.

Code noir. The black code. A body of laws which formerly regulated the institution of slavery in the French colonies.

Code of Justinian. The Code of Justinian (Codex Justinianaeus) was a collection of imperial constitutions, compiled, by order of that emperor, by a commission, and promulgated A.D. 529. It comprised twelve books, and was the first of the four compilations of law which make up the Corpus Juris Civilis. This name is often met in a connection indicating that the entire Corpus Juris Civilis is intended, or, sometimes, the Digest; but its use should be confined to the Codex.

Code penal. The penal or criminal code of France, enacted in 1810. See also Criminal law; Penal code.

Co-defendant. More than one defendant being sued in the same litigation; or, more than one person charged in same complaint or indictment with same crime.

Code Napoleon. See Code Civil.

Code of criminal procedure. Body of federal or state law dealing with procedural aspects of trial of criminal cases; e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3001 et seq. Such procedural laws are supplemented by Rules of Criminal Procedure and Rules of Evidence.

Code of Federal Regulations. The Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) is the annual cumulation of executive agency regulations published in the daily Federal Register, combined with regulations issued previously that are still in effect. Divided into 50 titles, each representing a broad subject area, individual volumes of the Code of Federal Regulations are reviewed at least once each calendar year and issued on a staggered quarterly basis. The CFR contains the general body of regulatory laws governing practice and procedure before federal administrative agencies.

Code of Military Justice. The Code is uniformly applicable in all its parts to the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Coast Guard. It covers both the substantive and the procedural law governing military justice and its administration in all the armed forces of the United States. The Code established a system of military courts, defines offenses, authorizes punishment, provides broad procedural guidance, and statutory safeguards which conform to the due process safeguards preserved and established by the constitution. As an additional safeguard for an accused person, the Code also provides for a system of automatic appellate review. A Court of Military Review is established within each service to review all court-martial cases where the sentence includes death, a punitive discharge, or confinement for one year or more. Appellate review in this court is automatic. No approved sentence of a courts-martial may be executed unless such findings and sentence are affirmed by a Court of Military Review. In addition, the Court of Military Appeals was established to review certain cases from all the Armed Forces. The latter Court consists of three civilian judges. Automatic review before the Court is provided for in all cases in which the sentence, as affirmed by a Court of Military Review, affects a general or flag officer or extends to death. In addition, the Judge Advocate General of each service may direct that a case be reviewed by the Court. An accused may petition the Court for review. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq.

Uniform Code. Many states have adopted the Uniform Code of Military Justice, and others have adopted acts substantially following the Uniform Code.

Code of Professional Responsibility. The rules of conduct that govern the legal profession. This Code contains both general ethical guidelines and specific rules prohibiting certain actions and conduct. The Code was written by the American Bar Association and subsequently adopted by most states.

Code pleading. See Pleadings.

Codex. Lat. A code or collection of laws; particularly the Code of Justinian. Also a roll of volume, and a book written on paper or parchment.

Codex Gregorianus /kow'deks gray'gor'yênəs/. A collection of imperial constitutions made by Gregory, a Roman jurist of the fifth century, about the middle of the century. It contained the constitutions from Hadrian down to Constantine.

Codex Hermogenianus /kow'deks har'mədʒən'liːənəs/. A collection of imperial constitutions made by Hermogenes, a jurist of the fifth century. It was nothing more than a supplement to the Codex Gregorius (supra), containing the constitutions of Diocletian and Maximian.

Codex Justinianus /kow'deks 'dʒastənˌiːən(ɨ)ˈəs/. A collection of imperial constitutions, made by a commission of ten persons appointed by Justinian, A.D. 528.

Codex Repetitæ Praelectionis /kow'deks rēpət/'tishəənəs/. The new code of Justinian; or the new edition of the first or old code, promulgated A.D. 534, being the one now extant.

Codex Theodosianus /kow'deks ˈðeədəsənəs/ /hiodəsənəs/. A code compiled by the emperor Theodosius the younger, A.D. 438. 1 Bl.Comm. 81. It was a collection of all the imperial constitutions then in force. It was the only body of civil law publicly received as authentic in the western part of Europe till the twelfth century, the use and authority of the Code of Justinian being during that interval confined to the East. 1 Bl.Comm. 81.

Codex Vetus /kow'deks vətəs/. The old code. The first edition of the Code of Justinian; now lost.

Codicil. A supplement or an addition to a will; it may explain, modify, add to, subtract from, qualify, alter, restrain or revoke provisions in existing will. Such does not purport to dispose of entire estate or to contain the entire will of testator, nor does it ordinarily express or by necessary implication revoke in toto a prior will. In re Crooke Estate, 388 Pa. 125, 130 A.2d 185, 187.

Codicillus /kóˈdɑsɪləs/. In the Roman law, a codicil; an informal and inferior kind of will, in use among the Romans.

Codification /kódfəˈkeɪʃən/. The process of collecting and arranging systematically, usually by subject, the laws of a state or country, or the rules and regulations covering a particular area or subject of law or practice; e.g. United States Code; Code of Military Justice; Code of Federal Regulations; California Evidence Code. The end product may be called a code, revised code or revised statutes. See also Compilation; Compiled statutes.

Coempiot /kowˈmpiˌtʃiʃə/. One of the modes in which marriage was contracted among the Romans.

Co-emption. The act of purchasing the whole quantity of any commodity.

Co-equal. To be or become equal to. To have the same quantity, the same value, the same degree of rank, or the like, with. To be commensurate with. State ex rel. Com'rs of Land Office v. Board of Com'rs of Nowata County, 166 Okl. 78, 25 P.2d 1074, 1077.

Coerce /kowrəs/. Compelled to compliance; constrained to obedience, or submission in a vigorous or forcible manner. See Coercion.

Coercion /kowrəˈʃən/. Compulsion; constraint; compelling by force or arms or threat. General Motors v. Blevins, D.C.Colo., 144 F.Supp. 381, 384. It may be actual, direct, or positive, as where physical force is used to compel act against one's will, or implied, legal or constructive, as where one party is constrained by subjugation to other to do what his free will would refuse. As used in testamentary law, any pressure by which testator's action is restrained against his free will in the execution of his testament. "Coercion" that vitiates confession can be mental as well as physical, and question is whether accused was deprived of his free choice to admit, deny, or refuse to answer. Garrity v. State of N. J., U.S.N.J., 385 U.S. 493, 87 S.Ct. 616, 618, 17 L.Ed.2d 562.
A person is guilty of criminal coercion if, with purpose to unlawfully restrict another's freedom of action to his detriment, he threatens to: (a) commit any criminal offense; or (b) accuse anyone of a criminal offense; or (c) expose any secret tendency to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business reputation; or (d) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action. Model Penal Code, § 212.5.

See also Duress; Threat.

Co-executor. One who is a joint executor with one or more others. See also Joint executors.

Coffee-house. A house of entertainment where guests are supplied with coffee and other refreshments, and sometimes with lodging. Commonly serves as an informal club for its frequent guests.

Cofferer of the queen's household /kôfâr-ar av ðâ kwîynz hâws-howid/. In English law, a principal officer of the royal establishment, next under the controller, who, in the countinghouse and elsewhere, had a special charge and oversight of the other officers, whose wages he paid.

Cognitionis penam nemo patitur /kôjatêyshiyôwnas pînynmow pâdadar/. No one is punished for his thoughts.

Cognates /kôgnêyt/. (Lat. cognati.) Relations by the mother's side, or by females. A common term in Scotch law.

Cognati /kôgnêyday/. Lat. In the civil law, cognates: relations by the mother's side. 2 Bl.Comm. 235. Relations in the line of the mother. Relations by or through females.

Cognatio /kôgnêysh(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, cognition: relationship, or kindred generally. Relationship through females, as distinguished fromagnatio, or relationship through males. Agnatio a patre sit, cognatio a mater. See Agnatio.

In canon law, consanguinity, as distinguished from affinity. Consanguinity, as including affinity.

Cognition /kôgnêyshan/. In the civil law, signifies generally the kindred which exists between two persons who are united by ties of blood or family, or both.

Civil cognition is that which proceeds alone from the ties of families, as the kindred between the adopted father and the adopted child.

Mixed cognition is that which unites at the same time the ties of blood and family, as that which exists between brothers the issue of the same lawful marriage.

Natural cognition is that which is alone formed by ties of blood; such is the kindred of those who owe their origin to an illicit connection, either in relation to their ascendants or collaterals.

Cognatus /kôgnêydas/. Lat. In the civil law, a relation by the mother's side; a cognate. A relation, or kinsman, generally.

Cognito /kôgnîsh(y)ow/. In old English law, the acknowledgment of a fine; the certificate of such acknowledgment. In the Roman law, the judicial examination or hearing of a cause.

Cognitiones /kôgnîshyôwâner. Ensigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms.

Cognitionibus mittendis /kôgnîshyôwênbas matêndas/. In English law, a writ to a justice of the common pleas, or other, who has power to take a fine, who, having taken the fine, defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it. Now abolished.

Cognitive. The mental process of comprehension, judgment, memory and reasoning, as opposed to emotional and volitional processes.

Cognitor /kôgnêdar/. In the Roman law, an advocate or defender in a private cause; one who defended the cause of a person who was present.

Cognizable /kô(g)nazzbal/. Capable of being tried or examined before a designated tribunal; within jurisdiction of court or power given to court to adjudicate controversy. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc. v. United Artists Corporation, C.C.A.Del., 113 F.2d 703, 707.

Cognizance /kô(g)nac(t)âs/. Jurisdiction, or the exercise of jurisdiction, or power to try and determine causes; judicial examination of a matter, or power and authority to make it. Judicial notice or knowledge; the judicial hearing of a cause; acknowledgment; confession; recognition.

Claim of cognizance or of conusance. See Claim of cognizance or of conusance.

Judicial cognizance. See Judicial.

Cognizee /kôgnêzi/. The party to whom a fine was levied. 2 Bl.Comm. 351.

Cognizor /kôgnêzar/. In old conveyancing, the party levying a fine. 2 Bl.Comm. 350, 351.

Cognomen /kôgnôwman/. In English law, a surname. A name added to the nomen proper, or name of the individual; a name descriptive of the family.

In Roman law, a man's family name.

The first name (prænomen) was the proper name of the individual; the second (nomen) indicated the gens or tribe to which he belonged; while the third (cognomen) denoted his family or house. The agnomen was added on account of some particular event, as a further distinction.

Cognomen majorum est ex sanguine tractum, hoc intrinsecum est; agnomen extrinsecum ab eventu /kôgnôwman majôrám ëst ëks sëngwanyi trâktam, hôk intrinzákam ëst; agnôwman ektrinzákam, ëks avênt(y)ow/. The cognomen is derived from the blood of ancestors, and is intrinsic; an agnomen arises from an event, and is extrinsic.

Cognovit actionem /kôgnôwvât âksêshyôwem/. (He has confessed the action). A defendant's written confession of action against him. It is usually upon condition; is supposed to be given in court; and implies authorized plaintiff's attorney to sign judgment and issue execution.
Cognovit Judgment

Cognovit judgment /kəʊɡˈnɒvɪt/. Confession of judgment by debtor. Written authority of debtor and his direction for entry of judgment against him in the event he shall default in payment. Such provision in a debt instrument or agreement permits the creditor or his attorney on default to appear in court and confers judgment against the debtor. Such agreements are prohibited, or greatly restricted, in many states; though, where permitted, the constitutionality of such has been upheld. D. H. Overmyer Co., Inc. v. Frick Co., 405 U.S. 174, 92 S.Ct. 775, 31 L.Ed.2d 124. See Cognovit note; Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Cognovit note. An extraordinary note which authorizes an attorney to confess judgment against person or persons signing it. It is written authority of a debtor and a direction by him for entry of a judgment against him if obligation set forth in note is not paid when due. Such judgment may be taken by any person holding the note, which cuts off every defense which maker of note may otherwise have and it likewise cuts off all rights of appeal from any judgment taken on it. Jones v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., D.C.Mich., 289 F.Supp. 930, 935. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Cohabitation. To live together as husband and wife. The mutual assumption of those marital rights, duties and obligations which are usually manifested by married people, including but not necessarily dependent on sexual relations. Boyd v. Boyd, 228 Cal.App. 374, 39 Cal.Rptr. 400, 404. See also Notorious cohabitation; Palimony.

Cohæredes una persona censentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent /kəʊˈhærəˌdiːz juːənə pərsəˈwaˌ sanˈsɛntər, proˈpərt ˈjuːnɪˌtɛtam ˈdʒuəɾə kwəd ˈnɛbənt/. Co-heirs are deemed as one person, on account of the unity of right which they possess.

Cohan Rule. Taxpayer is required to substantiate by accurate records or by sufficient evidence his claim for deduction for travel, entertainment and business gifts. I.R.C. § 274(d) (1982 Act); Cohan v. Commissioner, C.C.A.N.Y., 39 F.2d 540. Where part of expenditures by taxpayers are of deductible nature as ordinary and necessary business expense are unidentified, 50% of expenditures are allowed as deduction. Poletti v. C. I. R., C.A.Mo., 351 F.2d 345, 349.

Co-heir. One of several to whom an inheritance descends.

Co-heiress. A joint heiress. A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with another woman.

Coif /ˈkɔɪf/. A title given to serjeants at law, who are called "serjeants of the coif," from the coif they wear on their heads. The use of this coif at first was to cover the clerical tonsure, many of the practising serjeants being clergymen who had abandoned their profession. It was a thin linen cover, gathered together in the form of a skull or helmet; the material being afterwards changed into white silk, and the form eventually into the black patch at the top of the forensic wig, which is now the distinguishing mark of the degree of serjeant at law.

Order of the coif. Honorary legal fraternity made up of law students with high standing in law school class.

Coin, v. To fashion pieces of metal into a prescribed shape, weight, and degree of fineness, and stamp them with prescribed devices, by authority of government, in order that they may circulate as money. Legal Tender Cases, 79 U.S. 457, 12 Wall. 457, 20 L.Ed. 287; Thayer v. Hedges, 22 Ind. 282. To invent words or phrases.

Coin, n. Pieces of gold, silver, or other metal, fashioned into a prescribed shape, weight, and degree of fineness, and stamped, by authority of government, with certain marks and devices, and put into circulation as money at a fixed value. Metal money.

Coinage. The process or the function of coining metallic money; also the great mass of metallic money in circulation.

Coinage clause. Provision in U.S. Constitution granting to Congress the power to coin money, Art. I, § 8, par. 5.

Coinsurance. A relative division of risk between the insurer and the insured, dependent upon the relative amount of the policy and the actual value of the property insured, and taking effect only when the actual loss is partial and less than the amount of the policy; the insurer being liable to the extent of the policy for a loss equal to or in excess of that amount. Insurance policies that protect against hazards such as fire or water damage often specify that the owner of the property may not collect the full amount of insurance for a loss unless the insurance policy covers at least some specified percentage, usually about 80 percent, of the replacement cost of the property. Coinsurance clauses induce the owner to carry full, or nearly-full, coverage.

Coitus. Sexual intercourse; carnal copulation; coition.

Cojudicibus /koʊˈdʒudɪkəs/. Lat. In old English law, associate judges having equality of power with others.

Coke's Institutes. See Institutes.

Cold blood. Used in common parlance to designate a willful, deliberate, and premeditated homicide.

Cold water ordeal. The trial which was anciently used for the common sort of people, who, having a cord tied about them under their arms, were cast into a river; if they sank to the bottom until they were drawn up, which was in a very short time, then were they held guiltless; but such as did remain upon the water were held culpable, being, as they said, of the water rejected and kept up.

Colibertus /koʊliˈbɜːrəs/. In feudal law, one who, holding in free socage, was obliged to do certain services for the lord. A middle class of tenants between servile and free, who held their freedom of tenure on condition of performing certain services. Said to be the same as the conditionales.

Collaboration. The act of working together in a joint project; commonly used in connection with treasonably cooperative efforts with the enemy. See also Conspiracy.
Collapsible corporation. A corporation formed or availed of principally for the manufacture, construction, or production of property, for the purchase of property, or for the holding of stock in a corporation so formed or availed of, with a view to the sale or exchange of stock by its shareholders (whether in liquidation or otherwise), or a distribution to its shareholders, before the realization by the corporation of a substantial part of the taxable income to be derived from such property, and the realization by such shareholders of gain attributable to such property. I.R.C. §§ 337(c), 341(b)(1). These I.R.C. provisions prevent the prearranged use of a corporation to convert ordinary income into capital gain.

Collapsible partnership. A partnership formed with the intention to dissolve before any income is realized; however, the amount of money or the fair market value of any property received by a transferee partner in exchange for all or a part of his interest in the partnership attributable to unrealized receivables of the partnership, or inventory items of the partnership which have appreciated substantially in value shall be considered as an amount realized from the sale or exchange of property other than a capital asset. I.R.C. § 751(a).

Collateral, n. /kəˌlōdərəl/. Property which is pledged as security for the satisfaction of a debt. Collateral is additional security for performance of principal obligation, or that which is by the side, and not in direct line. Shaffer v. Davidson, Wyo., 445 P.2d 13, 16. Property subject to a security interest; includes accounts, contract rights, and chattel paper which have been sold. U.C.C. § 9–103(c). See also Collateral security.

Collateral, adj. By the side; at the side; attached upon the side. Not linear, but upon a parallel or diverging line. Additional or auxiliary; supplementary; co-operating; accompanying as a secondary fact, or acting as a secondary agent. Related to, complementary; accompanying as a co-ordinate. As to collateral Consanguinity; Descent; Estoppel; Guaranty; Issue; Limitation; Negligence; Power; Proceeding; and Warranty, see those titles. See also Pledge; Security.

Collateral act. Formerly, name given to any act (except the payment of money) for the performance of which a bond, recognizance, etc., was given as security.

Collateral actions. Any action which is subsidiary to another action. See Collateral attack.

Collateral ancestors. A phrase sometimes used to designate uncles and aunts, and other collateral ancestors, who are not strictly ancestors.

Collateral assurance. That which is made over and above the principal assurance or deed itself.

Collateral attack. With respect to a judicial proceeding, an attempt to avoid, defeat, or evade it, or deny its force and effect, in some incidental proceeding not provided by law for the express purpose of attacking it. May v. Casker, 188 Okl. 448, 110 P.2d 287, 289. An attack on a judgment in any manner other than by action or proceeding, whose very purpose is to impeach or overturn the judgment; or, stated affirmatively, a collateral attack on a judgment is an attack made by or in an action or proceeding that has an independent purpose other than impeaching or overturning the judgment. Travis v. Travis' Estate, 79 Wyo. 329, 334 P.2d 508, 510.

Collateral consanguinity. Persons are related collaterally when they have a common ancestor. See also Collateral heir.

Collateral contract. A contract made prior to or contemporaneous with another contract and if oral and not inconsistent with written contract is admissible within exception to parol evidence rule. High Knobb Inc. v. Allen, 205 Va. 503, 138 S.E.2d 49.

Collateral covenant. A covenant in a deed or other sealed instrument which does not pertain to the granted premises.

Collateral estoppel doctrine. Prior judgment between same parties on different cause of action is an estoppel as to those matters in issue or points controverted, on determination of which finding or verdict was rendered. E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. v. Union Carbide Corp., D.C.Ill., 250 F.Supp. 816, 819. When an issue of ultimate fact has been determined by a valid judgment, that issue cannot be again litigated between the same parties in future litigation. City of St. Joseph v. Johnson, Mo.App., 539 S.W.2d 784, 785.

As a bar to relitigating an issue which has already been tried between the same parties or their privies, it must be pleaded affirmatively. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c). It is applicable to criminal cases. Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436, 443–444, 90 S.Ct. 1189, 1194, 25 L.Ed.2d 469.

See also Issue preclusion; Res (Res judicata); Verdict, estoppel by.

Collateral facts. Such as are outside the controversy, or are not directly connected with the principal matter or issue in dispute.

Collateral fraud. See Fraud.

Collateral heir. One who is not of the direct line of deceased, but comes from a collateral line, as a brother, sister, an uncle, an aunt, a nephew, a niece, or a cousin of deceased. Ferraro v. Augustine, 45 Ill. App.2d 295, 196 N.E.2d 16, 19.

Collateral impeachment. See Collateral attack.

Collateral inheritance tax. A tax levied upon the collateral devolution of property by will or under the intestate law.

Collateral negligence. See Negligence.

Collateral note. Loan secured by pledge of specific property.

Collateral promise. A promise merely superadded to the promise of another, he remaining primarily liable.

Collateral relatives. Next of kin who are not in the direct line of inheritance, such as a cousin. See also Collateral heir.

Collateral security. A security given in addition to the direct security, and subordinate to it, intended to guarantee its validity or convertibility or insure its performance; so that, if the direct security fails, the creditor may fall back upon the collateral security. Concurrent security for another debt, whether antecedent or newly created and is subsidiary to the principal debt running parallel with and collateral to the debt. Shaffer v. Davidson, Wyo., 445 P.2d 13, 16.

Collateral source rule. Under this rule, if an injured person receives compensation for his injuries from a source wholly independent of the tort-feasor, the payment should not be deducted from the damages which he would otherwise collect from the tort-feasor. Kirtland & Packard v. Superior Court for County of Los Angeles, 59 Cal.App.3d 140, 131 Cal.Rptr. 418, 421. In other words, a defendant tortfeasor may not benefit from the fact that the plaintiff has received money from other sources as a result of the defendant's tort, e.g. sickness and health insurance.

Collateral trust bonds. Bonds of one corporation secured by its holdings of stocks, bonds, and/or notes of another corporation.

Collateral warranty. Generally applicable to real estate transactions in which a stranger warrants title and hence his warranty runs only to the covenantee, and not with the land.

Collatio bonorum /kaléysh(y)ow bánórm/. Lat. In the civil law, the obligation on successors to an inheritance to return to the common inheritance gifts received from the ancestor during his lifetime. A joining together or contribution of goods into a common fund. This occurs where a portion of money, advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into hotchpot, in order to have an equal distributory share of his personal estate at his death. See Collation.

Collation /kaléyshan/. The comparison of a copy with its original to ascertain its correctness; or the report of the officer who made the comparison. The bringing into the estate of an intestate an estimate of the value of advancements made by the intestate to his or her children in order that the whole may be divided in accordance with the statute of descendents. It is synonymous with "hotchpot."

In the civil law, the collation of goods is the supposed or real return to the mass of the succession which an heir makes of property which he received in advance of his share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided together with the other effects of the succession. The fundamental basis of doctrine is legal presumption that ancestor intended absolute equality among his descendants in final distribution of his property, that donation by him during his lifetime to any one of them was merely advancement d'horie or advance on donee's hereditary share to establish him in life or for some other useful purpose, and that ancestor intended to reestablish equality among his descendants in final partition of his estate.

Collatone factà uni post mortem alterius /kaléyshiyówniy fáxts yúwñay pówst mórdam oltiyíyas/. A writ directed to justices of the common pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop, for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the crown, where there had been a demise of the crown during a suit; for judgment once passed for the king's clerk, and he dying before admittance, the king may bestow his presentation on another.

Collatone heremitagil /kaléyshiyówniy hàramatéyíiyáy/. In old English law, a writ whereby the king conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk.

Collation of seals. When upon the same label one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other. Comparison of seals.

Collation to a benefice /kaléyshán tów á bénafas/. In ecclesiastical law, this occurs where the bishop and patron are one and the same person, in which case the bishop cannot present the clergyman to himself, but does, by the one act of collation or conferring the benefice, the whole that is done in common cases both by presentation and institution. 2 Bl.Comm. 22.

Collatio signorum /kaléysh(y)ow signóram/. In old English law, a comparison of marks or seals. A mode of testing the genuineness of a seal, by comparing it with another known to be genuine.

Collect. To gather together: to bring scattered things (assets, accounts, articles of property) into one mass or fund; to assemble. To receive payment.

To collect a debt or claim is to obtain payment or liquidation of it, either by personal solicitation or legal proceedings.

Collectible. Debts, obligations, demands, liabilities that one may be made to pay by means of legal process.

Collecting bank. Any bank handling the item for collection except the payor bank. U.C.C. § 4–105(d).

Collection. Indorsement "for collection." See For collection.

Collection of illegal fees. Collection by public official of fees in excess of those fixed by law for certain services.

Collective bargaining. As contemplated by National Labor Relations Act, is a procedure looking toward making of collective agreements between employer and accredited representative of employees concerning wages, hours, and other conditions of employment, and requires that parties deal with each other with open and fair minds and sincerely endeavor to overcome obstacles existing between them to the end that employment relations may be stabilized and obstruction to free flow of commerce prevented. National Labor Relations Act § 8(5), 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(5). Rapid Roller Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, C.C.A.7, 126 F.2d 452, 460. Negotiation between an employer and organized employees as distinguished from individuals, for the purpose of determining by joint agreement the conditions of employment. See also Area bargaining; Labor dispute; Sixty-day notice.

Collective bargaining agreement. Agreement between an employer and a labor union which regulates terms and conditions of employment. The joint and several contract of members of union made by officers of union as their agents. Such is enforceable by and against union in matters which affect all members alike or large classes of members, particularly those who are employees of other party to contract. Bogue Elec. Co. v. Board of Review of Division of Employment Sec. of Dept. of Labor and Industry, 21 N.J. 431, 122 A.2d 615, 618. See also Collective labor agreement; Trade agreement.

Collective bargaining unit. All of the employees of a single employer unless the employees of a particular department or division have voted otherwise. Re International Ass'n of Machinists, 249 Wis. 112, 23 N.W.2d 489.

Collective labor agreement. Also called "trade agreement". Bargaining agreement as to wages and conditions of work entered into by groups of employees, usually organized into a brotherhood or union on one side and groups of employers or corporations on the other side. See also Collective bargaining agreement.

Collective mark. A trade-mark or service mark used by the members of a cooperative, an association or other collective group or organization and includes marks used to indicate membership in a union, an association or other organization. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.

Collect on delivery. See C. O. D.

Collector. One appointed or authorized to receive taxes or other impositions, as: collector of taxes, collector of customs, etc. A person appointed by a private person to collect the debts due him.

Collector of decedent's estate. A person temporarily appointed by the probate court to collect rents, assets, interest, bills receivable, etc., of a decedent's estate, and act for the estate in all financial matters requiring immediate settlement. Such collector is usually appointed when there is protracted litigation as to the probate of the will, or as to the person to take out administration, and his duties cease as soon as an executor or administrator is qualified.

Collega /kaliyga/. In the civil law, one invested with joint authority. A colleague; an associate.

Collegatarius /kalèгatirias/. Lat. In the civil law, a co-legatee.

Collegatory /kò(w)lagèydarìy/. A co-legatee; a person who has a legacy left to him in common with other persons.

College. An organized assembly or collection of persons, established by law, and empowered to co-operate for the performance of some special function or for the promotion of some common object, which may be educational, political, ecclesiastical, or scientific in its character. The assemblage of the cardinals at Rome is called a "college." So, in the United States, the body of presidential electors is called the "electoral college" (q.v.).

In the most common use of the word, it designates an institution of learning (usually incorporated) which offers instruction in the liberal arts and humanities and in scientific branches, but not in the technical arts or those studies preparatory to admission to the professions. Also applied to all kinds of institutions from universities, or departments thereof, to "business colleges," "barber colleges," etc.

In England, it is a civil corporation, company or society of men, having certain privileges, and endowed with certain revenues, founded by royal license. An assemblage of several of these colleges is called a "university."

Collegia /kaliyjiya/. In the civil law, the guild of a trade.

Collegialiter /kaliyjiyéydar/. In a corporate capacity.

Collegiate church. In English ecclesiastical law, a church built and endowed for a society or body corporate of a dean or other president, and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in the said church; such as the churches of Westminster, Windsor, and others.

Collegium /kaliyjiyam/. Lat. In the civil law, a word having various meanings: e.g., an assembly, society, or company; a body of bishops; an army; a class of men. But the principal idea of the word was that of an association of individuals of the same rank and station, or united for the pursuit of some business or enterprise. Sometimes, a corporation, as in the maxim "tres faciunt collegium" (1 Bl.Comm. 469), though the more usual and proper designation of a corporation was "universitas."

Collegium ammiralitas /kaliyjiyam åmarmarátéydas/. The college or society of the admiralty.

Collegium est societas plurium corporum simul habitantium /kaliyjiyam est sasjaýatas plúriyam kóparam simul hábatjésh(y)am/. A college is a society of several persons dwelling together.

Collegium illicitum /kaliyjiyam alişadam/. One which abused its right, or assembled for any other purpose than that expressed in its charter.

Collegium licitum /kaliyjiyam lisadam/. An assemblage or society of men united for some useful purpose or business, with power to act like a single individual.

Collide. To strike or dash against; to come into collision; to clash. Collins v. Leaby, Mo.App., 102 S.W.2d 801, 809. See Collision.

Colligendum bona defuncti /kòlújéyand bòwna dafáktay/. See Ad colligendum, etc.

Collision. Striking together of two objects, one of which may be stationary. Act or instance of colliding; state of having collided. The term implies an impact or sudden contact of a moving body with an obstruction in its line of motion, whether both bodies are in motion or one stationary and the other, no matter which, in motion.

Colistriugium /kəʊləstrɪˈjʊəm/. The pillory.

Colocation /kələˈkeɪʃən/. In French law, the arrangement or marshaling of the creditors of an estate in the order in which they are to be paid according to law.

Colloquium /kələˈkwiːəm/. One of the usual parts of the declaration in an action for slander. It is a general averment that the words complained of were spoken "of and concerning the plaintiff", or concerning the extrinsic matters alleged in the inducement, and its office is to connect the whole publication with the previous statement. An averment that the words in question are spoken of or concerning some usage, report, or fact which gives to words otherwise indifferent the peculiar defamatory meaning assigned to them.

Collusion /kəl(ə)ˈwʊzʃən/. An agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain an object forbidden by law. It implies the existence of fraud of some kind, the employment of fraudulent means, or of lawful means for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose. Tomiyosu v. Golden, 81 Nev. 140, 400 P.2d 415, 417. A secret combination, conspiracy, or concert of action between two or more persons for fraudulent or deceitful purpose.

In divorce proceedings, collusion is an agreement between husband and wife that one of them shall commit, or appear to have committed, or be represented in court as having committed, acts constituting a cause of divorce, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain a divorce. But it also means conspiracy or conspiracy in initiating or prosecuting the suit, as where there is a compact for mutual aid in carrying it through to a decree. Bizik v. Bizik, Ind. App., 111 N.E.2d 823, 828. With the enactment of "no-fault" divorce statutes by most states, agreements or acts of collusion are no longer necessary.

Collusive action. An action not founded upon an actual controversy between the parties to it, but brought for purpose of securing a determination of a point of law for the gratification of curiosity or to settle rights of third persons not parties. Such actions will not be entertained for the courts will only decide "cases or controversies". City and County of San Francisco v. Boyd, 22 Cal.2d 685, 140 P.2d 666, 669, 670. See also Collusion.

Collusive joiner. See Joiner.

Collybista /ˈkɒləbɪstə/. In the civil law, a money-changer; a dealer in money.

Collybium /ˈkɒləbɪəm/. In the civil law, exchange.

Coine. In Saxon and old English law, an account or calculation.

Colonists. Persons who have emigrated from their mother country to settle in another place but who remain loyal to mother country.

Colonus /kəʊˈlɒnəs/. In old European law, a husbandman; an inferior tenant employed in cultivating the lord's land. A term of Roman origin, corresponding with the Saxon ceorl.

Colony. A dependent political community, consisting of a number of citizens of the same country who have emigrated therefrom to people another, and remain subject to the mother country. Territory attached to another nation, known as the mother country, with political and economic ties; e.g. possessions or dependencies of the British Crown (e.g. thirteen original colonies of United States).

Colonial charter. A document issued by a colonial government which permits operation of a business or school or college, e.g. charters granted by England to institutions or business in this country before War of Independence.

Colonial laws. The body of law in force in the thirteen original colonies before the Declaration of Independence.

Color. An appearance, semblance, or simulacrum, as distinguished from that which is real. A prima facie or apparent right. Hence, a deceptive appearance; a plausible, assumed exterior, concealing a lack of reality; a disguise or pretext. See also Colorable.

In pleading, ground of action admitted to subsist in the opposite party by the pleading of one of the parties to an action, which is so set out as to be apparently valid, but which is in reality legally insufficient. A term of the ancient rhetoricians, and early adopted into the language of pleading. It was an apparent or prima facie right; and the meaning of the rule that pleadings in confession and avoidance should give color was that they should confess the matter adversely alleged, to such an extent, at least, as to admit some apparent right in the opposite party, which required to the encountered and avoided by the allegation of new matter. Color was either express, i.e. inserted in the pleading, or implied, which was naturally inherent in the structure of the pleading. Wheeler v. Nickels, 168 Or. 604, 126 P.2d 32, 36.

Colorable. That which is in appearance only, and not in reality, what it purports to be, hence counterfeit, feigned, having the appearance of truth. Windle v. Flinn, 196 Or. 654, 251 P.2d 136, 146.

Colorable alteration. One which makes no real or substantial change, but is introduced only as a subterfuge or means of evading the patent or copyright law.

Colorable cause or invocation of jurisdiction. With reference to actions for malicious prosecution, a "colorable cause or invocation of jurisdiction" means that a person, apparently qualified, has appeared before a justice and made a complaint under oath and in writing, stating some facts which in connection with other facts constitute a criminal offense or bear a similitude thereto.

Colorable claim. In bankruptcy law, a claim made by one holding the property as an agent or bailee of the bankrupt: a claim in which as a matter of law, there is no adverseness. See also Color.

Colorable limitation. In the law of trademarks, this phrase denotes such a close or ingenious limitation as to be calculated to deceive ordinary persons.
Colorable transaction. One presenting an appearance which does not correspond with the reality, and, ordinarily, an appearance intended to conceal or to deceive.

Colored. By common usage in America, this term, in such phrases as "colored persons," "the colored race," "colored men," and the like, is used to designate negroes or persons of the African race, including all persons of mixed blood descended from negro ancestry.

Colore officii /kôlôrè a'fishi'yâ/. Lat. By color of office. Officer’s acts unauthorized by officer’s position, though done in form that purports that acts are done by reason of official duty and by virtue of office. See also Color of office.

Color of authority. That semblance or presumption of authority sustaining the acts of a public officer which is derived from his apparent title to the office or from a writ or other process in his hands apparently valid and regular. See Color of law; Color of office.

Color of law. The appearance or semblance, without the substance, of legal right. Misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because wrongdoer is clothed with authority of state, is action taken under "color of law." Atkins v. Lanning, D.C.Okl., 415 F.Supp. 186, 188.

Acts "under color of any law" of a State include not only acts done by State officials within the bounds or limits of their lawful authority, but also acts done without and beyond the bounds of their lawful authority; provided that, in order for unlawful acts of an official to be done "under color of any law," the unlawful acts must be done while such official is purporting or pretending to act in the performance of his official duties; that is to say, the unlawful acts must consist in an abuse or misuse of power which is possessed by the official only because he is an official; and the unlawful acts must be of such a nature or character, and be committed under such circumstances, that they would not have occurred but for the fact that the person committing them was an official then and there exercising his official powers outside the bounds of lawful authority. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983.

Color of office. Pretense of official right to do act made by one who has no such right. Kiker v. Pinson, 120 Ga.App. 784, 172 S.E.2d 333, 334. An act under color of office is an act of an officer who claims authority to do the act by reason of his office when the office does not confer on him any such authority. Maryland Cas. Co. v. McCormack, Ky., 488 S.W.2d 347, 352. See also Color of law.

Color of title. The appearance, semblance, or simulacrum of title. Also termed "apparent title." Any fact, extraneous to the act or mere will of the claimant, which has the appearance, on its face, of supporting his claim of a present title to land, but which, for some effect, in reality falls short of establishing it. Howth v. Farrar, C.C.A.Tex., 94 F.2d 654, 658. That which is a semblance or appearance of title, but is not title in fact or in law. McCoy v. Lowrie, 42 Wash.2d 24, 253 P.2d 415, 418. Any instrument having a grantor and grantee, and containing a description of the lands intended to be conveyed, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title to the lands described. Such an instrument purports to be a conveyance of the title, and because it does not, for some reason, have that effect, it passes only color or the semblance of a title.

Color of Title Act. Federal law which gives Secretary of Interior the right to issue a patent for land, exclusive of minerals, to one who has occupied it adversely and under color of right for period of time for a nominal amount of money. 43 U.S.C.A. §§ 1068-1068B.

Com. Abbreviation for "company" or "Commonwealth."

Combarones /kômbârôñiz'/. In old English law, fellow-barons; fellow-citizens; the citizens or freemen of the Cinque Ports being anciently called "barons;" the term "combarones" is used in this sense in a grant of Henry III, to the barons of the port of Fyrewash.

Combat. A forcible encounter between two or more persons; a battle; a duel. To fight with; to struggle against.

Combatierre /kômbatêhirri/. A valley or piece of low ground between two hills.

Combe. A small or narrow valley.

Combination. The union or association of two or more persons for the attainment of some common end. Albrecht v. Herald Co., C.A.Mo., 367 F.2d 517, 523. See Joint venture. As used in criminal context, means a conspiracy or confederation for unlawful or violent acts. See Conspiracy.

Combination in restraint of trade. An agreement or understanding between two or more persons, in the form of a contract, trust, pool, holding company, or other form of association, for the purpose of unduly restricting competition, monopolizing trade and commerce in a certain commodity, controlling its production, distribution, and price, or otherwise interfering with freedom of trade without statutory authority. Such combinations are prohibited by the Sherman Antitrust Act. See also Clayton Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Combination patent. Patents in which the claimed invention resides in a specific combination or arrangement of elements, rather than in the elements themselves. Kinnear-Weed Corp. v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., D.C.Tex., 150 F.Supp. 143, 162. One in which none of parts or components are new, and none are claimed as new, nor is any portion of combination less than whole claimed as new or stated to produce any given result. Borden, Inc. v. Occidental Petroleum Corp., D.C.Tex., 381 F.Supp. 1178, 1202.

Combustio /kambûsh'h(y)ól/. Burning. In old English law, the punishment inflicted upon apostates.
COMBUSTIO DOMORUM

Combustio domorum /kambəʃ(ɨ)yəw dəˈmɔːrəm/. Houseburning; arson. 4 Bl.Comm. 272.

Combustio pecunie /kambəʃχ(ɨ)yəw pokyˈwɲiːjɨ/. Burning of money; the ancient method of testing mixed and corrupt money, paid into the exchequer, by melting it down.

Come. To present oneself; to appear in court.

Comes /ˈkʌmz/, v. A word used in a pleading to indicate the defendant’s presence in court.

Comes /ˈkʌmniːz/, n. Lat. A follower, companion, or attendant; a count or earl.

Comes and defends. This phrase, anciently used in the language of pleading, and still surviving in some jurisdictions, occurs at the commencement of a defendant’s plea or demurrer; and of its two verbs the former signifies that he appears in court, the latter that he defends the action.

Comfort. Benefit, consolation, contentment, ease, enjoyment, happiness, pleasure, or satisfaction.

Comfort letter. A letter from an accounting firm stating that while certain informal procedures were followed which did not bring to light material changes in the financial statements since the date of the last audit indicated, only an audit with established auditing procedures can be relied upon to furnish such information.

Coming to rest doctrine. Under the “coming to rest doctrine” with respect to loading and unloading clauses used in automobile liability policies, coverage afforded by loading-unloading clause ceases when goods have actually come to rest and every connection of motor vehicle with process of unloading has ceased. Johnson, Drake & Piper, Inc. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., D.C.Minn., 258 F.Supp. 603, 606.

Comminus /kɔˈmınəs/. Lat. Immediately; hand-to-hand; in personal contact.

Comitas /kɔˈmıdəs/. Lat. Courtesy; civility; comity. An indulgence or favor granted another nation, as a mere matter of indulgence, without any claim of right made. Comitas inter communitates; or comitas inter gentes; comity between communities or nations; comity of nations.

Comitatumberland /kɔˈmətɛðuv kɑmɨʃˈjɨw/. In old English law, a writ or commission, whereby a sheriff was authorized to enter upon the charges of a county.

Comitatuum et castro commissio /kɔˈmətɛduw at kəˈstrɔw kɑmɨˈsəʊ/. A writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle, was committed to the sheriff.

Comitatus /kɔˈmətɛdəs/. In old English law, a county or shire; the body of a county. The territorial jurisdiction of a comes, i.e., count or earl. 1 Bl.Comm. 116. An earldom. The county court, a court of great antiquity and of great dignity in early times. Also, the retinue or train of a prince or high governmental official. The retinue which accompanied a Roman proconsul to his province. The personal following of professional warriors.

Comites /kɔˈmədiːz/. Counts or earls. Attendants or followers. Persons composing the retinue of a high functionary.

Persons who are attached to the suite of a public minister.

Comites paleys /kɔˈmədiːz pəˈlɛɪs/. Counts or earls paleatine; those who had the government of a county palatine.

Comitia /kəˈmɪʃ(ɨ)ə/. In Roman law, an assembly, either (1) of the Roman curiae, in which case it was called the “comitia curiata vel calata”; or (2) of the Roman centuries, in which case it was called the “comitia centuriata” (called also comitia majora); or (3) of the Roman tribes, in which case it was called the “comitia tributa.” Only patricians were members of the first comitia, and only plebeians of the last; but the comitia centuriata comprised the entire populace, patricians and plebeians both, and was the great legislative assembly passing the legis, properly so called, as the senate passed the senatus consultum, and the comitia tributa past the plebiscita. Under the Lex Hortensia, 287 B.C., the plebiscitum acquired the force of a lex.

Comitissa /kɔˈmɪtɪsə/. In old English law, a countess; an earl’s wife.

Comitiva /kɔˈmɪtɪvə/. In old English law, the dignity and office of a comes (count or earl); the same with what was afterwards called “comitatus.” Also a companion or fellow-traveler; a troop or company of robbers.

Comity /kɔˈmədiː/. Courtesy; complaisance; respect; a willingness to grant a privilege, not as a matter of right, but out of deference and good will. Recognition that one sovereignty allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial acts of another sovereignty, having due regard to rights of its own citizens. Nowell v. Nowell, Tex.Civ.App., 408 S.W.2d 550, 553. In general, principle of “comity” is that courts of one state or jurisdiction will give effect to laws and judicial decisions of another state or jurisdiction, not as a matter of obligation but out of deference and mutual respect. Brown v. Babbitt Ford, Inc., 117 Ariz. 192, 571 P.2d 689, 695. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Comity of nations. The recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial acts of another nation, having due regard both to international duty and convenience and to the rights of its own citizens or of other persons who are under the protection of its laws.

Judicial comity. The principle in accordance with which the courts of one state or jurisdiction will give effect to the laws and judicial decisions of another, not as a matter of obligation, but out of deference and respect.

Command. An order, imperative direction, or behest. To direct, with authority. Power to dominate and control.

Commandement /kɔˈmɔndəmən/. In French law, a writ served by the huissier pursuant to a judgment or to an executory notarial deed. Its object is to give notice to the debtor that if he does not pay the sum to which he has been condemned by the judgment, or which he engaged to pay by the notarial deed, his property will be seized and sold.

Commander in chief. One who holds supreme or highest command of armed forces. By Article II, § 2, of the Constitution it is declared that the President shall be commander in chief of the army and navy of the United States. The term implies supreme control of military operations not only with respect to strategy and tactics, but also in reference to the political and international aspects of the war.

Commandery. In old English law, a manor or chief messuage with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, in England; he who had the government of such a manor or house was styled the "commander," who could not dispose of it, but to the use of the priory, only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem were given to Henry the Eighth by 32 Hen. VIII, c. 20, about the time of the dissolution of abbeys and monasteries; so that the name only of commanderies remains, the power being long since extinct.

Commanditaires /kaməndətɛrz/. Special partners; partners en commandité. See Commandité.

Commandité /komənditɛ/. In French law, a partnership in which some furnish money, and others furnish their skill and labor in place of capital.

A special or limited partnership, where the contract is between one or more persons who are general partners, and jointly and severally responsible, and one or more other persons who merely furnish a particular fund or capital stock, and thence are called "commanditaires," or "commanditaires," or "partners en commandité," the business being carried on under the social name or firm of the general partners only, composed of the names of the general or complementary partners, the partners in commandité being liable to losses only to the extent of the funds or capital furnished by them. The term includes a partnership containing dormant rather than special partners.

Commandment. In old English law, an authoritative order of a judge or magisterial officer. Also, the act or offense of one who commanded another to transgress the law, or do anything contrary to law, as theft, murder, or the like. Particularly applied to the act of an accessory before the fact in inciting, procur-ning, setting on, or stirring up another to do the fact or act. See also Command.

Comence. To initiate by performing the first act. To institute or start.

Civil action in most jurisdictions is commenced by filing a complaint with the court. Fed.R. Civil P. 3.

Commencement of building or improvement, within the meaning of mechanic's lien statute, is the visible commencement of actual operations on the ground for the erection of the building, which every one can readily recognize as commencement of a building, and which is done with intention to continue the work until building is completed. Diversified Mort-

Criminal action is commenced within statute of limitations at time preliminary complaint or information is filed with magistrate in good faith and a warrant issued thereon. Knott v. State, Okt.Cr., 387 P.2d 142, 144. A criminal prosecution is "commenced" (1) when information is laid before magistrate charging commission of crime, and a warrant of arrest is issued, or (2) when grand jury has returned an indictment. Halberstadt v. Nelson, 34 Misc.2d 472, 226
N.Y.S.2d 100, 103.

Commencement of action. See Commence.

Commencement of prosecution. See Commence.

Commenda /kamęnda/. In French law, the delivery of a benefice to one who cannot hold the legal title, to keep and manage it for a time limited and render an account of the proceeds. In commercial law, an association in which the management of the property was intrusted to individuals.

Commenda est facultas recipiendi et retinendi beneficlium contra jus positivum a suprema potestate kamęnda est fakštas raspiyęndy ėt rėdanęndy bėnfish(ly)xom kūntra jäs pōzatąyvam ėy s(y)xpryłma pōwδstędyi/. A commenda is the power of receiving and retaining a benefice contrary to positive law, by supreme authority.

Commendam /kamęndam/. In ecclesiastical law, the appointment of a suitable clerk to hold a void or vacant benefice or church living until a regular pastor be appointed.

In commercial law, a species of limited partnership.
The limited partnership (or société en commandité) of the French law has been introduced into the Code of Louisiana under the title of "Partnership in Com-2839).

Commendatio /kɔmandɛysh(ly)ow/. In the civil law, commendation, praise, or recommendation, as in the maxim "simplex commendatio non obligat," meaning that mere commendation or praise of an article by the seller of it does not amount to a warranty of its qualities.

Commendation. In feudal law, the act by which an owner of alodial land placed himself and his land under the protection of a lord, so as to constitute himself his vassal or feudal tenant.

Commendators /kɔmandɛyarz/. Secular persons upon whom ecclesiastical benefices were bestowed; called so because the benefices were commended and intrusted to their supervision. They are merely trustees.

Commendatory. He who holds a church living or preferment in commendam.

Commendatory letters. In ecclesiastical law, such as are written by one bishop to another on behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese traveling thither, that they may be received among the faithful, or that the clerk may be promoted, or necessary administered to others, etc.

Commendatus /kɔmandɛydas/. In feudal law, one who intrusts himself to the protection of another. A person who, by voluntary homage, put himself under the protection of a superior lord.

Comment. The expression of the judgment passed upon certain alleged facts by a person who has applied his mind to them, and who while so commenting assumes that such allegations of fact are true. The assertion of a fact is not a “comment.”

Comment upon the evidence. Means that trial judge is prohibited from conveying to jury trial judge’s personal opinion as to the truth or falsity of any evidence, but prohibition does not prohibit judges from giving counsel relative for rulings on questions presented during progress of trial, or prohibit them in all cases from stating, when necessary, the facts upon which they base their conclusions. State v. Brown, 19 Wash.2d 195, 142 P.2d 257, 259, 260.

Intercourse by way of trade and traffic between different peoples or states and the citizens or inhabitants thereof, including not only the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities, but also the instrumentalities and agencies by which it is promoted and the means and appliances by which it is carried on, and transportation of persons as well as of goods, both by land and sea. Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U.S. 280, 14 S.Ct. 829, 38 L.Ed. 718; Railroad Co. v. Fullers, 84 U.S. (17 Wall.) 568, 21 L.Ed. 710; Hoke v. United States, 227 U.S. 308, 32 S.Ct. 281, 57 L.Ed. 523. Also interchange of ideas, sentiments, etc., as between man and man.

The term “commerce” means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several States, or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State or other Territory, or between any foreign country and any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign country. National Labor Relations Act, § 2.

For purposes of Fair Labor Standards Act, “commerce” means trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among several states or between any state and any place outside thereof. Wirtz v. B. B. Saxon Co., C.A.Fla., 365 F.2d 457, 460.

See also Affecting commerce; Chamber of Commerce; Interstate and foreign commerce; Interstate commerce; Interstate Commerce Act; Interstate Commerce Commission; Intrastate commerce.

Commerce with Indian tribes. Commerce with individuals belonging to such tribes, in the nature of buying, selling, and exchanging commodities, without reference to the locality where carried on, though it be within the limits of a state. U. S. v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407, 18 L.Ed. 182.

Domestic commerce. Commerce carried on wholly within the limits of the United States, as distinguished from foreign commerce. Also, commerce carried on within the limits of a single state, as distinguished from interstate commerce.

Foreign commerce. Commerce or trade between the United States and foreign countries. The term is sometimes applied to commerce between ports of two sister states not lying on the same coast, e.g., New York and San Francisco.

Internal commerce. Such as is carried on between individuals within the same state, or between different parts of the same state. Now more commonly called “intrastate commerce”.

International commerce. Commerce between states or nations entirely foreign to each other.

Interstate commerce. Such as is carried on between different states of the Union or between points lying in different states. See Interstate commerce.

Intrastate commerce. Such as is begun, carried on, and completed wholly within the limits of a single state. Contrasted with “interstate commerce” (q.v.).

Commerce clause. The provision of U.S.Const. (Art. I, § 8, cl. 3) which gives Congress exclusive powers over interstate commerce. See Commerce; Cooley Doctrine; Interstate commerce.

ties are exchanged, bought or sold. State ex rel. Kansas City Power & Light Co. v. Smith, 342 Mo. 75, 111 S.W.2d 613, 618.

Commercial frustration. Excuse of party from performance if contract depends on existence of given person or thing and such person or thing perishes, and if contract is rendered impossible by act of God, the law, or other party. Wood v. Bartolino, 48 N.M. 175, 146 P.2d 883, 885, 890. In theory it amounts to no more than a condition of a contract which the law implies to take the place of a covenant that it is assumed would have been inserted by the parties had the contingency which arose occurred to them at the time they made the contract. Lloyd v. Murphy, Cal. App., 142 P.2d 939, 942, 943. And doctrine is predicated upon premise of giving relief in a situation where parties could not reasonably protect themselves by terms of a contract against happening of subsequent events. Berline v. Waldschmidt, 159 Kan. 585, 156 P.2d 865, 867. Hence doctrine has no application where events were reasonably foreseeable and controllable by the parties. U.C.C. § 2–613. See Commercial impracticability; Impossibility (Imposslbility of performance of contract).

Commercial impracticability. U.C.C. § 2–615 excuses either party from performing a contract where three conditions exist: (1) a contingency must occur, (2) performance must thereby be made "impracticable," and (3) the nonoccurrence of the contingency must have been a basic assumption on which the contract was made. Neal-Cooper Grain Co. v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., C.A.III., 508 F.2d 283. See also Commercial frustration.

Commercial insolvency. Inability of a businessman to pay his debts as they become due in the regular and ordinary course of business. See also Bankrupt.

Commercial instrument. See Commercial paper.

It includes matters of learning, experience, history, and facts of which judicial notice may be taken. Shelley v. Chilton’s Adm’r, 236 Ky. 221, 32 S.W.2d 974, 977. See also Judicial notice.

Common law. As distinguished from law created by the enactment of legislatures, the common law comprises the body of those principles and rules of action, relating to the government and security of persons and property, which derive their authority solely from usages and customs of immemorial antiquity, or from the judgments and decrees of the courts recognizing, affirming, and enforcing such usages and customs; and, in this sense, particularly the ancient unwritten law of England. The "common law" is all the statutory and case law background of England and the American colonies before the American revolution. People v. Rehman, 253 C.A.2d 119, 61 Cal.Rptr. 65, 85. "Common law" consists of those principles, usage and rules of action applicable to government and security of persons and property which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declaration of the will of the legislature. Bishop v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 334 F.Supp. 415, 418.

As distinguished from ecclesiastical law, it is the system of jurisprudence administered by the purely secular tribunals. Calif. Civil Code, Section 22.2, provides that the "common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this State, is the rule of decision in all the courts of this State."

In a broad sense, "common law" may designate all that part of the positive law, juristic theory, and ancient custom of any state or nation which is of general and universal application, thus marking off special or local rules or customs.

For "Federal common law," see that title.

As a compound adjective "common-law" is understood as contrasted with or opposed to "statutory," and sometimes also to "equitable" or to "criminal." See examples below.

Common-law action. Action governed by common law, rather than statutory, equitable, or civil law.

Common-law assignments. Such forms of assignments for the benefit of creditors as were known to the common law, as distinguished from such as are of modern invention or authorized by statute.

Common-law cheat. The obtaining of money or property by means of a false token, symbol, or device; this being the definition of a cheat or "cheating" at common law.

Common-law contempt. A name sometimes applied to proceedings for contempt which are criminal in their nature, as distinguished from those which are intended as purely civil remedies ordinarily arising out of the alleged violation of some order entered in the course of a chancery proceeding.

Common-law copyright. An intangible, incorporeal right in an author of literary or artistic productions to reproduce and sell them exclusively and arises at the moment of their creation as distinguished from federal or statutory copyrights which exist for the most part only in published works. Common law copyright is perpetual while statutory copyright is for term of years. Equitable relief is available for violation of common law copyright. Edgar H. Wood Associates Inc. v. Skene, 347 Mass. 351, 197 N.E.2d 886. The distinction which formerly existed between common law copyrights and statutory copyrights was abolished by the 1976 Copyright Act revision; though § 301 of the new Act specifically preserves common law copyrights accruing prior to January 1, 1978. See also Copyright.

Common-law courts. In England, those administering the common law.

Common-law crime. One punishable by the force of the common law, as distinguished from crimes created by statute.

Common-law dedication. A "statutory dedication" is in nature of grant based on substantial compliance with terms of applicable statute, while "common law dedication" is generally held to rest upon doctrine of estoppel in pais. Tinaglia v. Ittzes, S.D., 257 N.W.2d 724, 729.

Common-law extortion. Corrupt collection of unlawful fee by an office under color of office.

Common-law jurisdiction. Jurisdiction of a court to try and decide such cases as were cognizable by the courts of law under the English common law. The jurisdiction of those courts which exercise their judicial powers according to the course of the common law.

Common-law larceny. See Larceny.

Common-law lien. One known to or granted by the common law, as distinguished from statutory, equitable, and maritime liens; also one arising by implication of law, as distinguished from one created by the agreement of the parties. It is a right extended to a person to retain that which is in his possession belonging to another, until the demand or charge of the person in possession is paid or satisfied. Whiteside v. Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., C.C.A.Colo., 101 F.2d 765, 769.

Common-law marriage. One not solemnized in the ordinary way (i.e. non-ceremonial) but created by an agreement to marry, followed by cohabitation. A consummated agreement to marry, between persons legally capable of making marriage contract, per verba de præsenti, followed by cohabitation. Such marriage requires a positive mutual agreement, permanent and exclusive of all others, to enter into a marriage relationship, cohabitation sufficient to warrant a fulfillment of necessary relationship of man and wife, and an assumption of marital duties and obligations. Marshall v. State, Okl.Cr., 357 P.2d 423, 429. Such marriages are invalid in many states; e.g. Missouri (after 1921), Indiana (after 1958), Maryland, Massachusetts, Nebraska (after 1939), Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York (after 1933), North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota (after 1959), Virginia, Washington, W. Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Common-law trade-mark. One appropriated under common-law rules, regardless of statutes. Stratton & Terstegge Co. v. Stiglitz Furnace Co., 258 Ky. 678, 81 S.W.2d 1, 3.

Common-law trust. A business trust which has certain characteristics in common with corporations and in which trustees hold the property and manage the business and the shareholders are the trust beneficiaries or cestui que trust; sometimes known as a Massachusetts trust. See Massachusetts trust.

Common-law wife. A woman who was party to a common-law marriage; or one who, having Communio bonorum /kamyúñw(i)yow banoram/. In the civil law, a community of goods.

Communis error factit jus /kamyúñwnas éhrar féyset jás/. Common error, repeated many times, makes law.

Communism. A system of social organization in which goods are held in common, the opposite of the system of private property; communalism, any theory or system of social organization involving common ownership of agents of production of industry, the latter of which theories is referred to in the popular use of the word "communism" while the scientific usage sometimes conforms to the first alone and sometimes alternates between the first and second; also the principles and theories of the Communist Party. A system by which the state controls the means of production and the distribution and consumption of industrial products.

Communis opinio /kamyúñwnas spin(i)yow/. Common opinion; general professional opinion. According to Lord Coke (who places it on the footing of observance or usage), common opinion is good authority in law.

Communis parsies /kamyúñwnas páriyiyyz/. In the civil law, a common or party wall.

Communis rixatrix /kamyúñwnas rixsatraks/. In old English law, a common scold (q.v.). 4 Bl.Comm. 168.

Communis scriptura /kamyúñwnas skript(y)úra/. In old English law, a common writing; a writing common to both parties; a chirograph.

Communis stipes /kamyúñwna stáypiyyz/. A common stock of descent; a common ancestor.

Communist. Member of the Communist party or movement. Adherent or advocate of Communism.

Communitas regni anglie /kamyúñwntæs régnay ëngliyi/. The general assembly of the kingdom of England. One of the ancient names of the English parliament. 1 Bl.Comm. 148. See also Commune concillium regni.

Community account. A bank account consisting of separate and community funds commingled in such manner that neither can be distinguished from the other. Smith v. Buss, 135 Tex. 566, 144 S.W.2d 529, 532.

Community antenna television (CATV). System of television reception in which signals from distant stations are picked up by large antenna and transmitted by cable to individual paying customers.

Community debt. One chargeable to the community (of husband and wife) rather than to either of the parties individually.

Community house. A house occupied by two or more persons or families. A tenement.

Community lease. Exists where a number of lessors owning interests in separate tracts execute a lease in favor of a single lessee. Howell v. Union Producing Co., C.A.Tex., 392 F.2d 95.

Community of interest. Term as applied to relation of joint adventure means interest common to both or all parties, that is, mixture or identity of interest in venture wherein each and all are reciprocally concerned and from which each and all derive material benefit and sustain a mutual responsibility. Carboneau v. Peterson, 1 Wash.2d 347, 95 P.2d 1043, 1055.

Community of profits. This term, as used in the definition of a partnership (to which a community of profits is essential), means a proprietorship in them as distinguished from a personal claim upon the other associate as much as in the other. Moore v. Williams, 26 Tex.Civ.App. 142, 62 S.W. 977.

Community property. Property owned in common by husband and wife each having an undivided one-half interest by reason of their marital status. The eight states with community property systems are: Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Washington, Idaho, and Nevada. The rest of the states are classified as common law jurisdictions. The difference between common law and community property systems centers around the property rights possessed by married persons. In a common law system, each spouse owns whatever he or she earns. Under a community property system, one-half of the earnings of each spouse is considered owned by the other spouse.

Commutation /kömyatéyshán/. Alteration; change; substitution; the act of substituting one thing for another. In criminal law, the change of a punishment to one which is less severe; as from execution to life imprisonment. In commercial law, substituting one form of payment for another.

In civil law, the conversion of the right to receive a variable or periodical payment into the right to receive a fixed or gross payment; a substitution of one sort of payment for another, or of money payment in lieu of a performance of a compulsory duty or labor. Commutation may be effected by private agreement, but it is usually done under a statute.

Commutation of taxes. Payment of a designated lump sum (permanent or annual) for the privilege of exemption from taxes, or the settlement in advance of a specific sum in lieu of an ad valorem tax.

Commutation of tithes. Signifies the conversion of tithes into a fixed payment in money.

Commutation ticket. A railroad ticket giving the holder the right to travel at a certain rate for a limited number of trips (or for an unlimited number within a certain period of time) for a less amount than would be paid in the aggregate for so many separate trips.
Commutative contract. In civil law, one in which each of the contracting parties gives and receives an equivalent; e.g., the contract of sale. See Contract.

Commutative justice. See Justice.

Commed value. The present value of a future interest in property used in taxation and in evaluating damages. Present value of future payments when discounted.

Compact, n. An agreement or contract between persons, nations or states. Commonly applied to working agreements between and among states concerning matters of mutual concern. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced, and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. A mutual consent of parties concerned respecting some property or right that is the object of the stipulation, or something that is to be done or foreborne. See also Compact clause; Confederacy; Interstate compact; Treaty.

Compact, adj. Closely or firmly united or packed, as the particles of solid bodies; firm; solid; dense, as a compact texture in rocks; also, lying in a narrow compass or arranged so as to economize space; having a small surface or border in proportion to contents or bulk; close, as a compact estate, or a compact order or formation of troops.

Compact clause. Art. I, Section 10, Cl. 3, of U.S. Constitution provides: "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, . . . enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State . . . ."

Compact school district. One so closely united and so nearly adjacent to the school building that all the students residing in the district may conveniently travel from their homes to the school building and return the same day in a reasonable length of time and with a reasonable degree of comfort. People ex rel. Tudor v. Vance, 374 Ill. 415, 29 N.E.2d 673; People ex rel. Frailey v. McNeely, 376 Ill. 64, 32 N.E.2d 608, 610.

Companage. All kinds of food, except bread and drink.

Companies Clauses Consolidation Act. An English statute (8 Vict. c. 16), passed in 1845, which consolidated the clauses of previous laws still remaining in force on the subject of public companies. It is considered as incorporated into all subsequent acts authorizing the execution of undertakings of a public nature by companies, unless expressly excepted by such later acts. Its purpose is declared by the preamble to be to avoid repeating provisions as to the constitution and management of the companies, and to secure greater uniformity in such provisions.

Company. Union or association of persons for carrying on a commercial or industrial enterprise; a partnership, corporation, association, joint stock company.

Company town. A residential and commercial community opened by a company for public use and operated under color of state law. Illinois Migrant Council v. Campbell Soup Co., C.A.III., 519 F.2d 391. Community exists primarily because of company; with major part of housing and stores owned by company.

Company union. Union whose membership is limited to the employees of a single company. Union under company domination.

Joint stock company. An association of individuals for purposes of profit, possessing a common capital contributed by the members composing it, such capital being commonly divided into shares which each member possesses one or more, and which are transferable by the owner. One having a joint stock or capital, which is divided into numerous transferable shares, or consists of transferable stock. A partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares so as to be transferable without the express consent of the co-partners.

Limited company. A company in which the liability of each shareholder is limited by the number of shares he has taken, so that he cannot be called on to contribute beyond the amount of his shares. In England, the memorandum of association of such company may provide that the liability of the directors, manager, or managing director thereof shall be unlimited.

Comparatio literarum /kompréysh(iy)ow lil'daráram/. In the civil law, comparison of writings, or handwritings. A mode of proof allowed in certain cases.

Comparative. Proceeding by the method of comparison; founded on comparison; estimated by comparison.

Comparative interpretation. That method of interpretation which seeks to arrive at the meaning of a statute or other writing by comparing its several parts and also by comparing it as a whole with other like documents proceeding from the same source and referring to the same general subject.

Comparative jurisprudence. The study of the principles of legal science by the comparison of various systems of law.

Comparative negligence. Under comparative negligence statutes or doctrines, negligence is measured in terms of percentage, and any damages allowed shall be diminished in proportion to amount of negligence attributable to the person for whose injury, damage or death recovery is sought. Many states have replaced contributory negligence acts or doctrines with comparative negligence. Where negligence by both parties is concurrent and contributes to injury, recovery is not barred under such doctrine, but plaintiff's damages are diminished proportionately, provided his fault is less than defendant's, and that, by exercise of ordinary care, he could not have avoided conse-
Comparative negligence. The consequences of defendant's negligence after it was or should have been apparent.

Comparative rectitude. Doctrine wherein relief by divorce is granted to the party least in fault when both have shown grounds for divorce. Weber v. Weber, 256 Ark. 549, 508 S.W.2d 725, 729.

Comparison of handwriting. A comparison by the juxtaposition of two writings, in order, by such comparison, to ascertain whether both were written by the same person.

A method of proof resorted to where the genuineness of a written document is disputed; it consists in comparing the handwriting of the disputed paper with that of another instrument which is proved or admitted to be in the writing of the party sought to be charged, in order to infer, from their identity or similarity in this respect, that they are the work of the same hand. Expert testimony with respect to such proof is permitted by Fed.Evid. Rule 702, and non-expert testimony is governed by Rule 901.

Compascuum /kämpäs̄kywam/. Belonging to commingage Jus compascuum, the right of common pasture.

Compassing. Imagining or contriving, or plotting. In English law, "compassing the king's death" is treason. 4 Bl.Comm. 76.

Compaterntitas /kömpatärntäs̄/. In the canon law, a kind of spiritual relationship contracted by baptism.

Compaterntity. Spiritual affinity, contracted by sponsorship in baptism.

Compatibility. As applied to offices, such relation and consistency between the duties of two offices that they may be held and filled by one person. Harmonious relationship as between husband and wife.

Compel. To urge forcefully; under extreme pressure. Word "compel" as used in constitutional right to be free from being compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against one's self means to be subjected to some coercion, fear, terror, inducement, trickery or threat—either physically or psychologically, blatantly or subtly; the hallmark of compulsion is the presence of some operative force producing an involuntary response. U. S. v. Escandar, C.A.Fla., 465 F.2d 438, 442.

Compellativus /kompelatäyvas̄/. An adversary or accuser.

Compelling state interest. Term used to uphold state action in the face of attack grounded on Equal Protection or First Amendment rights because of serious need for such state action. Also employed to justify state action under police power of state. Printing Industries of Gulf Coast v. Hill, 382 F.Supp. 801 (D.C.Tex.).

Compensable death. Within Worker's Compensation Acts is one which results to employee from injury by accident arising out of and in course of employment.

Compensable injury. A "compensable injury" within Worker's Compensation Act is one caused by an accident arising out of and in course of the employment. McCauley v. Harris, 164 Neb. 216, 82 N.W.2d 30, 32; Seymour v. Journal-Star Printing Co., 174 Neb. 150, 116 N.W.2d 297, 299.

Compensation /kömpensäsi(y)öwn/. In Spanish law, compensation; set-off. The extinction of a debt by another debt of equal dignity between persons who have mutual claims on each other.

Compensating balance. The balance a borrower from a bank is required by the bank to keep on deposit.

Compensating tax. See Use tax.

Compensatio /kömpanséysh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, compensation, or set-off. A proceeding resembling a set-off in the common law, being a claim on the part of the defendant to have an amount due to him from the plaintiff deducted from his demand. 3 Bl.Comm. 305.

Compensatio criminis /kömpanséysh(i)yow krímanas/. (Set-off of crime or guilt). The compensation or set-off of one crime against another; the plea or defense of recrimination in a suit for a divorce; that is, that the complainant is guilty of the same kind of offense with which the respondent is charged.

Compensation. Indemnification; payment of damages; making amends; making whole; giving an equivalent or substitute of equal value. That which is necessary to restore an injured party to his former position. Remuneration for services rendered, whether in salary, fees, or commissions. Consideration or price of a privilege purchased.

Equivalent in money for a loss sustained; equivalent given for property taken or for an injury done to another; giving back an equivalent in either money which is but the measure of value, or in actual value otherwise conferred; recompense in value; recompense or reward for some loss, injury, or service, especially when it is given by statute; remuneration for the injury directly and proximately caused by a breach of contract or duty; remuneration or satisfaction for injury or damage of every description. An act which a court orders to be done, or money which a court or other tribunal orders to be paid, by a person whose acts or omissions have caused loss or injury to another, in order that thereby the person damaged may receive equal value for his loss, or be made whole in respect of his injury. Hughson Condensed Milk Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 23 Cal.App.2d 281, 73 P.2d 290, 292. See also Damages.

Compensation and worker's compensation. Payments to an unemployed or injured worker or his dependents.

Compensation period. Period fixed by unemployment or worker's compensation statutes during which unemployed or injured worker is to receive compensation.

Compensatory damages. See Damages.
COMPETITORS

Competent authority. As applied to courts and public officers, this term imports jurisdiction and due legal authority to deal with the particular matter in question.

Competent court. A court, either civil or criminal, having lawful jurisdiction.

Competent evidence. That which the very nature of the thing to be proven requires, as, the production of a writing where its contents are the subject of inquiry. Also, generally, admissible (i.e. relevant and material) as opposed to "incompetent" or "inadmissible" evidence. Frick v. State, Okl.Cr., 309 P.2d 135, 136. See also Competency; Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Competent witness. One who is legally qualified to be heard to testify in a cause. As used in statutes relating to the execution of wills, the term means a person who, at the time of making the attestation, could legally testify in court to the facts which he attests by subscribing his name to the will. See also Competency.

Competition. Contest between two rivals. The effort of two or more parties, acting independently, to secure the business of a third party by the offer of the most favorable terms. It is the struggle between rivals for the same trade at the same time; the act of seeking or endeavoring to gain what another is endeavoring to gain at the same time. The term implies the idea of endeavoring by two or more to obtain the same object or result. See also Compete.

Unfair competition in trade. See Combination in restraint of trade; Price-fixing; Sherman Antitrust Act; Unfair competition.

Competitive bidding. Requires that all bidders be placed on a plane of equality, and that they bid upon the same terms and conditions. State Highway Commission of Kentucky v. King, 259 Ky. 414, 82 S.W.2d 443.

Competitive civil service examination. Examination which conforms to measures or standards which are sufficiently objective to be capable of being challenged and reviewed by other examiners of equal ability and experience. Such exam may be open in which case all may take it or may be promotional in which case only those in service may compete against others in service.

Competitive traffic. Traffic which, as to any one carrier, originates at a point served also by another carrier, which other carrier handles the traffic at equal line-haul rates from origin to destination.

Competitors. Persons endeavoring to do the same thing and each offering to perform the act, furnish the merchandise, or render the service better or cheaper than his rival.

able; adequate; suitable; sufficient; capable; legally fit. A testator may be said to be "competent" if he or she understands (1) the general nature and extent of his property; (2) his relationship to the people named in the will and to any people he disinherits; (3) what a will is; and (4) the transaction of simple business affairs. See also Capacity; Competency; Incompetency.

Competency. In the law of evidence, the presence of those characteristics, or the absence of those disabilitie...
Compilation /kɔmplɛʃən/. A bringing together of preexisting statutes in the form in which they appear in the books, with the removal of sections which have been repealed and the substitution of amendments in an arrangement designed to facilitate their use. A literary production composed of the works or selected extracts of others and arranged in methodical manner. Compare Code; Codification. See also Compiled statutes; Revised statutes.

Compile. See Compilation.

Compiled statutes. A collection of the statutes existing and in force in a given state; all laws and parts of laws relating to each subject-matter being brought together under one head and the whole arranged systematically, either under an alphabetical arrangement or some other plan of classification. Compare Code; Codification. See also Revised statutes.

Complainant. One who applies to the courts for legal redress by filing complaint (i.e. plaintiff). Also, one who instigates prosecution or who prefers accusation against suspected person.

Complaint. The original or initial pleading by which an action is commenced under codes or Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed.R. Civil P. 3. The pleading which sets forth a claim for relief. Such complaint (whether it be the original claim, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim) shall contain: (1) a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court’s jurisdiction depends, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new grounds of jurisdiction to support it, (2) a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and (3) a demand for judgment for the relief to which he deems himself entitled. Relief in the alternative or of several different types may be demanded. Fed.R. Civil P. 8(a). The complaint, together with the summons, is required to be served on the defendant. Rule 4. See also Counterclaim; Cross-claim; Supplemental complaint; Third party complaint.

In criminal law, a charge, preferred before a magistrate having jurisdiction, that a person named (or an unknown person) has committed a specified offense, with an offer to prove the fact, to the end that a prosecution may be instituted. In some instances “complaint” is interchangeable with “information.” The complaint is a written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged. It shall be made upon oath before a magistrate. Fed.R.Crim.P. 3. If it appears from the complaint that probable cause exists that the person named in the complaint committed the alleged crime, a warrant (q.v.) for his arrest will be issued. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4.

Complete, v. To finish; accomplish that which one starts out to do.

Complete, adj. Full; entire; including every item or element of the thing spoken of, without omissions or deficiencies; as, a “complete” copy, record, schedule, or transcript.

Perfect; consummate; not lacking in any element or particular; as in the case of a “complete legal title” to land, which includes the possession, the right of possession, and the right of property (i.e. fee sim-

Compensation for services rendered. Payment made to a public employee for services rendered.

Compensation for work done. Payment made to a public employee for work done.

Compensation for value produced. Payment made to a public employee for value produced.
Comply. To yield; to accommodate, or to adapt oneself to; to act in accordance with; to accept.

Composed of. Formed of; consisting of.

Composite work. Within Copyright Act means work to which a number of authors have contributed distinguishable parts.

Compositio mensurarum /kɔmpɔzิʃиɔn меншарёрам/. The ordinance of measures. The title of an ancient ordinance, not printed, mentioned in the statute 23 Hen. VIII, c. 4; establishing a standard of measures. 1 Bl.Comm. 275.

Composition deed. An agreement embodying the terms of a composition between a debtor and his creditors.

Composition in bankruptcy. See Composition with creditors.

Composition of matter. In patent law, a substance composed of two or more different substances, without regard to form. A mixture or chemical combination of materials.

Composition of tithes, or real composition. This arises in English ecclesiastical law, when an agreement is made between the owner of lands and the incumbent of a benefice, with the consent of the ordinary and the patron, that the lands shall, for the future, be discharged from payment of tithes, by reason of some land or other real recompense given in lieu and satisfaction thereof. 2 Bl.Comm. 28. See Composition with creditors.

Composition with creditors. An agreement, made upon a sufficient consideration, between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, whereby the latter, for the sake of immediate or sooner payment, agree to accept a payment less than the whole amount of their claims, to be distributed pro rata, in discharge and satisfaction of the whole. It constitutes an agreement not only between the debtor and his creditors but also one between the creditors themselves that each shall accept the lesser sums from the assets of the embarrassed debtor. The entering into of a composition agreement is not in and of itself an act of bankruptcy. Where, however, the composition agreement expressly or secretly prefers certain creditors, the composition constitutes the second act of bankruptcy—a preferential transfer. See Act of bankruptcy.

Similar statutory arrangements are provided for under the Bankruptcy Act. See Arrangement with creditors; Assignment (Assignment for benefit of creditors); Wage earner's plan.

The difference between a common-law "composition with creditors" and a "composition in bankruptcy" is that in a composition with creditors the creditors voluntarily release the principal debtor and therefore release co-debtors, while in the case of a bankruptcy composition the discharge is by operation of law and not by act of the creditors who assent to the composition. Barker v. Ackers, 29 Cal.App.2d 182, 84 P.2d 264, 271.

"Composition" should be distinguished from "accord." The latter properly denotes an arrangement between a debtor and a single creditor for a discharge of the obligation by a part payment or on different terms. The former designates an arrangement between a debtor and the whole body of his creditors (or at least a considerable proportion of them) for the liquidation of their claims by the dividend offered.

Compos mentis /kɔmpɔs ɲɛntɪs/. Sound of mind. Having use and control of one's mental faculties.

Compos sui /kɔmpɔs sju/way/. Having the use of one's limbs, or the power of bodily motion. Si fuit ita compos sui quod itinerare potuit de loco in locum, if he had so far the use of his limbs as to be able to travel from place to place.

Compotarius /kɔmpɔtɛɾiəɾɪs/... in old English law, a party accounting.

Compound, v. To compromise; to effect a composition with a creditor; to obtain discharge from a debt by the payment of a smaller sum. To put together as elements, ingredients, or parts, to form a whole; to combine, to unite. To form or make up as a composite product by combining different elements, ingredients, or parts, as to combine a medicine. See Compounding crime.

Compound, n. A combination of two or more elements or things by means of human agency; an artificial or synthetic product.

Compounder. In Louisiana, the maker of a composition, generally called the "amicable compounder."

Compounding a felony. See Compounding crime.

Compounding crime. Compounding crime consists of the receipt of some property or other consideration in return for an agreement not to prosecute or inform on one who has committed a crime. There are three elements to this offense at common law, and under the typical compounding statute: (1) the agreement not to prosecute; (2) knowledge of the actual commission of a crime; and (3) the receipt of some consideration.

The offense committed by a person who, having been directly injured by a felony, agrees with the criminal that he will not prosecute him, on condition of the latter's making reparation, or on receipt of a reward or bribe not to prosecute.

The offense of taking a reward for forbearance to prosecute a felony; as where a party robbed takes his goods again, or other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute.

Compound Interest. Interest upon interest; i.e., when the interest of a sum of money is added to the principal, and then bears interest, which thus becomes a sort of secondary principal.

Compound larceny. See Compounding crime; Larceny.

Comprehensive zoning plan. A general plan to control and direct the use and development of property in a municipality or in a large part thereof by dividing it into districts according to the present and potential use of the properties. Damick v. Planning and Zoning Commission of Town of Southington, 158 Conn. 78, 256 A.2d 428. See also Planned unit development.

Compromesso /kɔmˈpremsəʊ/. In Italian law, the instrument whereby parties agree to submit to arbitration a dispute between them. The equivalent of "compromissum" under the Roman Law, the principles of which have been carried into the common law and are to be found in agreements of accord and satisfaction and compromise and settlement.

Comprint. A surreptitious printing of another bookseller's copy of a work, to make gain thereby, which was contrary to common law, and is illegal. See Infringement.

Comprise. To comprehend; include; contain; embrace; cover.

Comprivigni /kɔmprɪˈvɪgnɪ/. In the civil law, children by a former marriage, (individually called "privigni," or "privigni") considered relatively to each other. Thus, the son of a husband by a former wife, and the daughter of a wife by a former husband, are the compriovigni of each other.

Compromise and settlement. An arrangement arrived at, either in court or out of court, for settling a dispute upon what appears to the parties to be equitable terms, having regard to the uncertainty they are in regarding the facts, or the law and the facts together. An agreement or arrangement by which, in consideration of mutual concessions, a controversy is terminated. Putnam v. Otsego Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 41 A.D.2d 981, 343 N.Y.S.2d 736, 738.

In the civil law, an agreement whereby two or more persons mutually bind themselves to refer their legal dispute to the decision of a designated third person, who is termed "umpire" or "arbitrator."

See Arbitration; Mediation; Settlement.

Offer of compromise. See Offer, n.

Compromise verdict. One which is reached only by the surrender of conscientious convictions on one material issue by some jurors in return for a relinquishment of matters in their like settled opinion on another issue, and the result is one which does not hold the approval of the entire panel. See also Allen charge; Verdict.

Compromissaril sunt judices /kɔmprɪˈmɛsərɪl sənt jɔwˈdɑsliːz/. Arbitrators are judges.

Compromissarius /kɔmprɪˈmɛsəriəs/. In the civil law, an arbitrator.

Compte arrêté /kɔm(p)ʃɛt aʁətɛ/. Fr. An account stated in writing, and acknowledged to be correct on its face by the party against whom it is stated.

Comptroller /kɔrtˈrɔlər/ kɒˈntrər/. A public officer of a state or municipal corporation, or an officer of a business, charged with certain duties in relation to the fiscal affairs of the same, principally to examine and audit the accounts, to keep records, and report the financial situation from time to time. There are also officers bearing this name in the Treasury Department of the United States.

Comptroller General. Government official (head of G. A. O.) whose main function is to audit governmental agencies.

Comptroller of currency. The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency was created by act of Congress approved February 25, 1863 (12 Stat. 665), as an integral part of the national banking system. The Comptroller, as the administrator of national banks, is responsible for the execution of laws relating to national banks and promulgates rules and regulations governing the operations of national and District of Columbia banks. Approval of the Comptroller is required for the organization of new national banks, conversion of State-chartered banks into national banks, consolidations or mergers of banks where the surviving institution is a national bank, and the establishment of branches by national banks.

Compulsa /kɔmpʊˈlɑːsə/. A judicially attested copy of a testimonio.

Compulsion. Constraint; objective necessity; duress. Forcible inducement to the commission of an act. The act of compelling or the state of being compelled; the act of driving or urging by force or by physical or moral constraint; subjection to force. The compulsion which will excuse a criminal act must be present, imminent and impending and of such a nature as to induce a well-grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily harm. To constitute "compulsion" or "coercion" rendering payment involuntary, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposedly possessed, by payee over payer's person or property, from which payer has no means of immediate relief except by advancing money. See Coercion; Duress.

Compulsory, n. In ecclesiastical procedure, a compulsory is a kind of writ to compel the attendance of a witness, to undergo examination.

Compulsory, adj. Involuntary; forced; coerced by legal process or by force of statute.

Compulsory arbitration. That which takes place where the consent of one of the parties is enforced by statutory provisions.

Compulsory attendance. Refers to legal obligation to attend; e.g. school attendance is compulsory up to certain age.

Compulsory counterclaim. For claim to constitute a compulsory counterclaim, it must be logically related to original claim and arise out of same subject matter on which original claim is based; many of same factual legal issues, or offshoots of same basic controversy between parties must be involved in a compulsory counterclaim. Tasner v. Billera, D.C.III., 379 F.Supp. 809, 813. See Fed.R.Civil P. 13(a).
Compulsory disclosure. Term with variety of meanings; may refer to court order compelling disclosure of matters within scope of discovery rules (see Fed.R.Civil P. 26, 37, 45; Fed.R.Crim.P. 16, 17); may also refer to obligation of public officers or candidates for public office to reveal assets and income from private sources. See also Subpoena.

Compulsory insurance. Motor vehicle liability coverage which is required in most states as a condition to registration of such vehicle.

Compulsory nonsuit. An involuntary nonsuit. See Nonsuit.

Compulsory payment. One not made voluntarily, but exacted by duress, threats, the enforcement of legal process, or unconscionably taking advantage of another. May also refer to legal obligations, such as payment of taxes or support; or to creditor remedies such as garnishment or attachment.

Compulsory process. Process to compel the attendance in court of a person wanted there as a witness or otherwise; including not only the ordinary subpoena, but also a warrant of arrest or attachment if needed. See e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 45. See Bench warrant; Subpoena.

The 6th Amend., U.S.Const., provides that the accused shall have the right to "have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor".

Compulsory sale or purchase. Term used to characterize the transfer of title to property under the exercise of the power of eminent domain, or by reason of judicial sale for nonpayment of taxes, or the like.

Compulsory self-incrimination. Any form of coercion, physical or psychological, which renders a confession of crime or an admission involuntary, is in violation of the 5th Amend., U.S.Const. and due process clause of 14th Amend. Such practices contravene the very basis of our criminal jurisprudence which is accusatorial, not inquisitorial. Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534, 81 S.Ct. 735, 5 L.Ed.2d 760.

Compurgator /kompərˈgərədər/. One of several neighbors of a person accused of a crime, or charged as a defendant in a civil action, who appeared and swore that they believed him on his oath. 3 Bl.Comm. 341.

Computation. The act of computing, numbering, reckoning, or estimating. The account or estimation of time by rule of law, as distinguished from any arbitrary construction of the parties.

Computation of time. For purpose of calculating time under Rules of Civil Procedure, the day of the act, event or default from which the designated period of time begins to run shall not be included, though the last day of the period so computed shall be included unless it is a Saturday, Sunday or legal holiday. Fed.R. Civil P. 6(a); Fed.R.Crim.P. 45.

Computo /kəmpyúˈdow/. Lat. To compute, reckon, or account. Used in the phrases insinul computasent, "they reckoned together," (see Insinul); plene computavit, "he has fully accounted," (see Plene); quod computet, "that he account," (see Quod computet).

As to conclusive proof, see Proof.

Conclusive evidence. That which is incontrovertible, either because the law does not permit it to be contradicted, or because it is so strong and convincing as to overbear all proof to the contrary and establish the proposition in question beyond any reasonable doubt. See Conclusive presumption; Judicial notice; Presumption; Proof.

Conclusive presumption. An artificially compelling force which requires trier of fact to find such fact as is conclusively presumed and which renders evidence to the contrary inadmissible. Sometimes referred to as irrebuttable presumption. See Presumption.

Concomitant actions. Civil actions which are brought together generally for some type of relief.

Concord. An agreement between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other, settling what amends shall be made for the breach or wrong. A compromise or an accord.

In the old process of levying a fine of lands, the concord was an agreement between the parties (real or feigned) in which the deforciant (or he who keeps the other out of possession) acknowledges that the lands in question are the right of complainant; and, from the acknowledgment or admission of right thus made, the party who levies the fine is called the "cognizor," and the person to whom it is levied the "cognizee." 2 Bl.Comm. 350. An agreement between two or more, upon a trespass committed, by way of amends or satisfaction for it.

Concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus /kækərdɛrɛ /liːˈʒɪːz /liˈjoʊbəs /ˈɛst ˈɒptəməs əntərprɛtəndə mɔʊˈdəs/. To make laws agree with laws is the best mode of interpreting them.

Concordat. A compact, covenant or convention between two or more independent governments.

An agreement made by a temporal sovereign with the pope, relative to ecclesiastical matters.

In French law, a compromise effected by a bankrupt with his creditors, by virtue of which he engages to pay within a certain time a certain proportion of his debts, and by which the creditors agree to discharge the whole of their claims in consideration of the same.

Concupinatus /kɑŋkjuˈpɪnætəs/. In Roman law, an informal, unsanctioned, or "natural" marriage, as contradistinguished from the justa nuptiae, or justum matrimonium, the civil marriage.

Concubine /ˈkɒŋkjuˈbain/. A woman who cohabits with a man to whom she is not married. A mistress. A sort of inferior wife, among the Romans, upon whom the husband did not confer his rank or quality.

Concur. To agree; accord; act together; consent. In the practice of appellate courts, a "concurring opinion" is one filed by one of the judges or justices, in which he agrees with the conclusions or the result of another opinion filed in the case (which may be either the opinion of the court or a dissenting opinion) though he states separately his views of the case or his reasons for so concurring.

In Louisiana law, to join with other claimants in presenting a demand against an insolvent estate.

Concurator /ˈkɒŋkjuˈrətɚ/. In the civil law, a joint or co-curator, or guardian.

Concurrence. A meeting or coming together; agreement or union in action; meeting of minds; union in design; consent. Babyvak v. Alten, 106 Ohio App. 191, 154 N.E.2d 14, 18.

Concurrence delayale. A term of the French law nearly equivalent to "unfair trade competition:" and used in relation to the infringement of rights secured by trade-marks, etc. It signifies a dishonest, perfidious, or treacherous rivalry in trade, or any manoeuvre calculated to prejudice the good will of a business or the value of the name of a property or its credit or renown with the public, to the injury of a business competitor.

Concurrent. Running together; having the same authority; acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act or opinion; pursuit of same course; contributing to the same event; contemporaneous. Co-operating, accompanying, conjoined, associated, concomitant, joint and equal, existing together, and operating on the same subject. United in agreement. State ex rel. School Dist. No. 8 v. Lensman, 108 Mont. 118, 88 P.2d 63, 68.

As to concurrent Covenant; Insurance; Lease; Resolution; and Writ, see those titles.

Concurrent causes. Causes acting contemporaneously and together causing injury, which would not have resulted in absence of either. Two distinct causes operating at the same time to produce a given result, which might be produced by either, are "concurrent causes": but two distinct causes, successive and unrelated in an operation, cannot be concurring, and one will be regarded as the proximate and efficient and responsible cause, and the other will be regarded as the remote cause. See also Cause.
CONCURRENT CONDITIONS

Concurrent conditions. When each party to a transaction is subject to mutual conditions precedent, these are concurrent conditions. McFadden v. Wilder, 6 Ariz.App. 60, 429 P.2d 694. See also Conditions concurrent.

Concurrent estates. Ownership or possession of property by two or more persons at the same time; e.g. joint tenancy, tenancy in common.

Concurrent interests. See Concurrent estates.

Concurrent jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of several different tribunals, each authorized to deal with the same subject-matter at the choice of the suitor. Authority shared by two or more legislative, judicial, or administrative officers or bodies to deal with the same subject matter. Jurisdiction exercised by different courts, at same time, over same subject matter, and within same territory, and wherein litigants may, in first instance, resort to either court indifferently. State v. Stueve, 260 Iowa 1023, 150 N.W.2d 597, 602.

Concurrent liens. Two or more liens or possessory rights in the nature of liens on the same property and possessing the same priority.

Concurrent negligence. Consists of the negligence of two or more persons concurring, not necessarily in point of time, but in point of consequence, in producing a single indivisible injury. Travelers Indemnity Co. v. Towbridge, Com.Pl., 38 Ohio Misc. 55, 311 N.E.2d 901, 905.

Concurrent power. The power of either Congress or the State legislatures, each acting independently of the other, to make laws on the same subject matter.

Concurrent sentences. Two or more terms of imprisonment, all or part of each of which is served simultaneously and the prisoner is entitled to discharge at the expiration of the longest term specified. State ex rel. Lillemoe v. Tahash, 280 Minn. 176, 195 N.W.2d 99, 102.

Concurrent tortfeasors. Those whose independent, negligent acts combined or concurred at one point in time to injure a third party. Radford-Shelton & Associates Dental Laboratory, Inc. v. Saint Francis Hospital, Inc., Okl.App., 569 P.2d 506, 509.

Concurring opinion. A separate opinion delivered by one or more judges which agrees with the decision of the majority of the court but offering own reasons for reaching that decision. See also Concur.

Concurso /kaŋkəˈsɔːr/. In the law of Louisiana, the name of a suit or remedy to enable creditors to enforce their claims against an insolvent or failing debtor. Litigation or opportunity of litigation between various creditors, each claiming adversely to one another to share in a fund or an estate, object being to assemble in one accounting all claimants on the fund.

Concursus /kaŋkəˈræsər/. In the civil law, a running together; a collision, as concursus creditorum, a conflict among creditors. A concurrence, or meeting, as concursus actionum, concurrence of actions. A proceeding in Louisiana similar to interpleader.

Concussio /kaŋkəˈʃiːoʊ/. In the civil law, the offense of extortion by threats of violence.

Concussion. In the civil law, the unlawful forcing of another by threats of violence to give something of value. It differs from robbery, in this: That in robbery the thing is taken by force, while in concussion it is obtained by threatened violence. Loss or alteration of consciousness from a direct, closed head injury.

Condedit /kəndɪˈdɪt/. In ecclesiastical law, the name of a plea entered by a party to a libel filed in the ecclesiastical court, in which it is pleaded that the deceased made the will which is the subject of the suit, and that he was of sound mind.

Condemn. To find or adjudge guilty. To adjudge or sentence. To declare a building or ship unfit for use or occupation. To adjudge (as an admiralty court) that a vessel is a prize, or that she is unfit for service. To set apart or expropriate property for public use, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain.

Condemnation /ˈkɒndɛmneɪʃən/. Process of taking private property for public use through the power of eminent domain. "Just compensation" must be paid to owner for taking of such (5th Amend., U.S. Constitution). See also Constructive taking; Damages; Eminent domain; Expropriation; Just compensation; Public use; Similar sales; Take.

Admiralty law. The judgment or sentence of a court having jurisdiction and acting in rem, by which: (1) it is declared that a vessel which has been captured at sea as a prize was lawfully so seized and is liable to be treated as prize; or (2) that property which has been seized for an alleged violation of the revenue laws, neutrality laws, navigation laws, etc., was lawfully so seized, and is, for such cause, forfeited to the government; or (3) that the vessel which is the subject of inquiry is unfit and unsafe for navigation.

Civil law. A sentence or judgment which condemns some one to do, to give, or to pay something, or which declares that his claim or pretensions are unfounded. State v. Harr, 24 Tenn.App. 298, 143 S.W.2d 883, 895.

Excess condemnation. Taking of property not strictly needed for a public use, or taking of more property than is needed for a public use.

Inverse condemnation. Condemnation of property near a parcel so as to cause the parcel to lose much of its value. In such a case the parcel is, in effect, constructively condemned, and just compensation must be paid to the owner, even though formal eminent domain proceedings were not actually taken against that particular parcel.

Quick condemnation. Under this procedure the municipality takes immediate possession of owner's property with estimated just compensation placed in escrow until actual compensation has been ascertained.

Condemnation money. Former term for damages which the party failing in an action was adjudged or condemned to pay; sometimes simply called the "condemnation."
Condictio /kandi(k)sh(i)y)ow/. In Roman law, a general term for actions of a personal nature, founded upon an obligation to give or do a certain and defined thing or service. It is distinguished from vindicatio rei, which is an action to vindicate one’s right of property in a thing by regaining (or retaining) possession of it against the adverse claim of the other party.

Condictio certi /kandi(k)sh(i)y)ow sárdai/. An action which lies upon a promise to do a thing, where such promise or stipulation is certain (si certa sit stipulatio).

Condictio ex lege /kandi(k)sh(i)y)ow éks liyijiy/. An action arising where the law gave a remedy, but provided no appropriate form of action.

Condictio indebitati /kandi(k)sh(i)y)ow andébátéyday/. An action which lay to recover anything which the plaintiff had given or paid to the defendant, by mistake, and which he was not bound to give or pay, either in fact or in law.

Condictio rei furthwe /kandi(k)sh(i)y)ow ri'yar far-táyiyiy/. An action which lay to recover a thing stolen, against the thief himself, or his heir.

Condictio sine causa /kandi(k)sh(i)y)ow sániyiy kózə/. An action which lay for a person who had given or promised a thing without consideration (causa).

Conditio /kandish(i)y)ow/. Lat. A condition.

Conditio beneficialis, quæ statum construct, benigne secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odio sa autem, quæ statum destruct, stricte secundum verborum proprietatem acclienda /kandish(i)y)ow bēnəfis'hijiy'ylas kwîw stēydam kōnsrûwat bánigiy sákəndam varbôrəm īnśənshiyównam ęst ıntărprətəndə; ödədyiwəsə ôdam, kwîw stēydam dəsrûwat, strik_PY sákəndam varbôrəm prəprəsytəydəm akşipiyəndə/. A beneficial condition, which creates an estate, ought to be construed favorably, according to the intention of the words; but that condition which destroys an estate is odious, and ought to be construed strictly according to the letter of the words.

Conditio dicitur, cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse, conferetur /kandish(i)y)ow dîsədə kəm kwîd in kêrsəm insərdam kwîw pōwdast têndarîy əd âsiy ət nôn âsiy kənfârdər/. It is called a “condition” when something is given on an uncertain event, which may or may not come into existence.

Conditio illicita habetur pro non adjecta /kandish(i)y)ow slîsəsə habiyədar prəw non əjəkə/. An unlawful condition is deemed as not annexed.

Condition. A future and uncertain event upon the happening of which is made to depend the existence of an obligation, or that which subordinates the existence of liability under a contract to a certain future event. Provision making effect of legal instrument contingent upon an uncertain event. See also Constructive condition; Contingency; Contingent; Proviso.

A clause in a contract or agreement which has for its object to suspend, rescind, or modify the principal obligation, or, in case of a will, to suspend, revoke, or modify the devise or bequest. A qualification, restriction, or limitation modifying or destroying the original act with which it is connected; an event, fact, or the like that is necessary to the occurrence of some other, though not its cause; a prerequisite; a stipulation.

A qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated.

An "estate on condition" arises where an estate is granted, either in fee simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated, upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition.

In insurance parlance, the printed conditions on the inside of the policy which serve generally as a limitation of risk or of liability or impose various conditions requiring compliance by the insured.

Mode or state of being; state or situation; essential quality; property; attribute; status or rank.

Civil law. Conditions in the civil law are of the following types:

The casual condition is that which depends on chance, and is in no way in the power either of the creditor or of the debtor. Civ.Code La. art. 2023.

A mixed condition is one that depends at the same time on the will of one of the parties and on the will of a third person, or on the will of one of the parties and also on a casual event. Civ.Code La. art. 2025.

The potestative condition is that which makes the execution of the agreement depend on an event which it is in the power of the one or the other of the contracting parties to bring about or to hinder. Civ. Code La. art. 2024.

A resolutive or dissolving condition is that which, when accomplished, operates the revocation of the obligation, placing matters in the same state as though the obligation had not existed. It does not suspend the execution of the obligation. It only obliges the creditor to restore what he has received in case the event provided for in the condition takes place. Civ.Code La. art. 2045.

A suspensory condition is that which depends, either on a future and uncertain event, or on an event which has actually taken place, without its being yet known to the parties. In the former case, the obligation cannot be executed till after the event; in the latter, the obligation has its effect from the day on which it was contracted, but it cannot be enforced until the event be known. Civ CODE La. art. 2043; New Orleans v. Railroad Co. 171 U.S. 312. 18 S.Ct. 875, 43 L.Ed. 178. A condition which prevents a contract from going into operation until it has been fulfilled.

Classification. Conditions are either express or implied, the former when incorporated in express terms in the deed, contract, lease, or grant; the latter, when inferred or presumed by law, from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the parties, to have been tacitly understood between them as a part of the agreement, though not expressly mentioned.
They are possible or impossible: the former when they admit of performance in the ordinary course of events; the latter when it is contrary to the course of nature or human limitations that they should ever be performed.

They are lawful or unlawful: the former when their character is not in violation of any rule, principle, or policy of law; the latter when they are such as the law will not allow to be made.

They are consistent or repugnant: the former when they are in harmony and concord with the other parts of the transaction; the latter when they contradict, annul, or neutralize the main purpose of the "contract". Repugnant conditions are also called "insensible".

They are affirmative or negative: the former being a condition which consists in doing a thing, as provided that the lessee shall pay rent, etc.; the latter being a condition that consists in not doing a thing, as provided that the lessee shall not alien, etc.

They are precedent or subsequent. A condition precedent is one which must happen or be performed before the estate to which it is annexed can vest or be enlarged; or it is one which is to be performed before some right dependent thereon accrues, or some act dependent thereon is performed. A fact other than mere lapse of time which must exist or occur before a duty of immediate performance of a promise arises. U.S.v. Schaeffer, C.A.Wash., 319 F.2d 907, 911. A "condition precedent" is one that is to be performed before the agreement becomes effective, and which calls for the happening of some event or the performance of some act after the terms of the contract have been arrested on, before the contract shall be binding on the parties; e.g. under disability insurance contract, insured is required to submit proof of disability before insurer is required to pay. Sherman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 297 Mass. 330, 8 N.E.2d 892. A condition subsequent is one annexed to an estate already vested, by the performance of which such estate is kept and continued, and by the failure or non-performance of which it is defeated; or it is a condition referring to a future event, upon the happening of which the obligation becomes no longer binding upon the other party, if he chooses to avail himself of the condition. Co.Litt. 201; Carroll v. Carroll's Ex'r, 248 Ky. 386, 58 S.W.2d 670, 672. A condition subsequent is any condition which divests liability which has already attached on the failure to fulfill the condition as applied in contracts, a provision giving one party the right to divest himself of liability and obligation to perform further if the other party fails to meet condition, e.g., submit dispute to arbitration. In property law, a condition which causes defeasance of estate on failure to perform, e.g. fee simple on condition. In lease, a provision giving lessor right to terminate for tenant's failure to perform condition.

Conditions may also be positive (requiring that a specified event shall happen or an act be done) and restrictive or negative, the latter being such as impose an obligation not to do a particular thing, as, that a lessee shall not alien or sub-let or commit waste, or the like.

They may be single, copulative, or disjunctive. Those of the first kind require the performance of one specified thing only; those of the second kind require the performance of divers acts or things; those of the third kind require the performance of one of several things.

Conditions may also be independent, dependent, or mutual. They belong to the first class when each of the two conditions must be performed without any reference to the other; to the second class when the performance of one condition is not obligatory until the actual performance of the other; and to the third class when neither party need perform his condition unless the other is ready and willing to perform his, or, in other words, when the mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides and each is precedent to the other.

The following varieties may also be noted: A condition collateral is one requiring the performance of a collateral act having no necessary relation to the main subject of the agreement. A compulsory condition is one which expressly requires a thing to be done, as, that a lessee shall pay a specified sum of money on a certain day or his lease shall be void. Concurrent conditions are those which are mutually dependent and are to be performed at the same time or simultaneously. A condition imposed is one not annexed to the rent reserved out of the land whereof the estate is made, or rather, to the estate in the land, in respect of rent.

French law. Conditions in French law are of the following types:

The following peculiar distinctions are made: (1) A condition is casuelle when it depends on a chance or hazard; (2) a condition is postestive when it depends on the accomplishment of something which is in the power of the party to accomplish; (3) a condition is mixte when it depends partly on the will of the party and partly on the will of others; (4) a condition is suspensive when it is a future and uncertain event, or present but unknown event, upon which an obligation fails or takes effect; (5) a condition is resolutoire when it is the event which undoes an obligation which has already had effect as such.

Synonymous distinguished. A "condition" is to be distinguished from a limitation, in that the latter may be to or for the benefit of a stranger, who may then take advantage of its determination, while only the grantor, or those who stand in his place, can take advantage of a condition. Also, a limitation ends the estate without entry or claim, which is not true of a condition. It also differs from a conditional limitation. In determining whether, in the case of estates greater than estates for years, the language constitutes a "condition" or a "conditional limitation," the rule applied is that, where an estate is so expressly limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than until the condition happens on which the estate is to fail, this is limitation, but when the estate is expressly granted on condition in deed, the law permits it to endure beyond the time of the contingency happening, unless the grantor takes advantage of the breach of condition, by making entry. It differs also from a covenant, which can be made by either grantor or grantee, while only the grantor can make a condition. The chief distinction between a condition subsequent in a deed and a covenant pertains to the remedy in event of breach, which, in the former case, subjects the estate to a forfeiture, and in the latter is merely a ground for recovery of damages. A charge is a device of land with a bequest out of the subject-matter, and a charge upon the devise personally, in respect of the estate devised, gives him an estate on condition. A condition also differs from a remainder; for, while the former may operate to defeat the estate before its natural termination, the latter cannot take effect until the completion of the preceding estate.

Conditional. That which is dependent upon or granted subject to a condition.

As to conditional Acceptance; Appearance; Bequest; Contract; Delivery; Devise; Fee; Guaranty; Judgment; Legacy; Limitation; Obligation; Pardon and Privilege, see those titles.

Conditional assault. A threatening gesture with words accompanying it expressing a threat on condition, e.g. “your money or your life”.

Conditional creditor. In the civil law, a creditor having a future right of action, or having a right of action in expectancy.

Conditional indorsement. See Indorsement.

Conditional Intent. Intend to do or not to do something if some condition exists.

Conditionally privileged communication. One made in good faith on any subject matter in which the person publishing has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, even though it contains matter which otherwise would be actionable. Cook v. East Shore Newspapers, 327 Ill.App. 559, 64 N.E.2d 751, 760. The essential elements of a conditionally privileged communication are good faith, an interest to be upheld, a statement limited in its scope to such purpose, a proper occasion, and publication in a pro-er manner to proper persons. Cook v. East Shore Newspapers, 327 Ill.App. 559, 64 N.E.2d 751.

Conditional payment. Payment of an obligation only on condition that something be done. Generally, right is reserved to demand back payment if condition fails.

Conditional promise. In law of contracts, a promise to perform based on condition; held to be valid consideration even if condition fails.

Conditional release. A discharge of obligation based on some condition, the failure of which defeats the release. Term may also be applied to a substituted form of release from custody subject to applicable statutes and rules and regulations of board of parole.

Conditional right. Right to something subject to a condition, e.g. parent has right to chastise child on condition that the punishment is reasonable.

Conditional sale contract. Form of sales contract in which seller reserves title until buyer pays for goods, at which time, the condition having been fulfilled, title passes to buyer. Such contract under Uniform Commercial Code is a purchase money security agreement. § 9–105(h). See also Sale.

Conditional sentence. A sentence to confinement if defendant fails to fulfill conditions of probation.

Conditional will. A will so drawn that it takes effect only on happening of specified contingency which becomes a condition precedent to operation of will.
Methodist Church of Sturgis Inc. v. Templeton, 254
Miss. 197, 181 So.2d 129.

Conditions quelibet odiose; maxime autem contra matrimonium et commercium /kandishyownyiz kwilylab òwdiyôwisì, mënksamîy ôdam kôntra mâtramôwînyam êt kamârsh(y)am/. Any conditions are odious, but especially those which are against [in restraint of] marriage and commerce.

Condition of employment. Qualification required for a particular job; circumstances under which employment may be secured. See also Probation.

Conditions concurrent. In contract law, conditions which must be performed by each party simultaneously; e.g. in a cash sale, payment for the goods and delivery are conditions concurrent. See also Concurrent conditions.

Conditions of sale. The terms upon which sales are made at auction; usually written or printed and exposed in the auction room at the time of sale.

Conditio praeecess adimpleri debet prius quam sequatur effectus /kandish(y)ow prasiydenz adimpliray debat práyas kwëm sakwényâr aféktas/. A condition precedent must be fulfilled before the effect can follow.

Condominia /kòndamínîya/. In the civil law, co-ownerships or limited ownerships, such as emphyteusis, superficies, pignus, hypotitio, usufruit, usus, and habitatio. These were more than mere jura in re alienâ, being portion of the dominium itself, although they are commonly distinguished from the dominium strictly so called.

Condominium /kòndamínîyam/. System of separate ownership of individual units in multiple-unit building. A single real property parcel with all the unit owners having a right in common to use the common elements with separate ownership confined to the individual units which are serially designated. Kaufman and Broad Homes of Long Island, Inc. v. Albertson, 73 Misc.2d 84, 341 N.Y.S.2d 321, 322. The condominium concept was not rooted in English common law and most condominiums in the United States are formed in accordance with specific state enabling statutes.

A condominium is an estate in real property conisting of an undivided interest in common in a portion of a parcel of real property together with a separate interest in space in a residential, industrial, or commercial building on such real property, such as an apartment, office or store. A condominium may include in addition a separate interest in other portions of such real property. Such estate may, with respect to the duration of its enjoyment, be either (1) an estate of inheritance or perpetual estate, (2) an estate for life, or (3) an estate for years, such as a leasehold or a subleasehold. Calif. Civil Code, § 783.

Condonacion /kòndansasjon(y)ow/. In Spanish law, the remission of a debt, either expressly or tacitly.

Condonation /kòndanéyshan/. The conditional remission or forgiveness, by means of continuance or resumption of marital cohabitation, by one of the married parties, of a known matrimonial offense committed by the other, that would constitute a cause of divorce; the condition being that the offense shall not be repeated. Condonation to constitute valid defense in divorce action, must be free, voluntary, and not induced by duress or fraud. Condonation means pardon of offense, voluntary overlooking implied forgiveness by treating offender as if offense had not been committed. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Ohio App.2d 148, 237 N.E.2d 421, 425. This defense has been abolished in those jurisdictions which recognize "no fault" divorce.

Condone /kandówn/. To make condonation of.

Conduce. To contribute to as a result.

Conduct, v. To manage; direct; lead; have direction; carry on; regulate; do business. Scholz v. Leuer, 7 Wash.2d 76, 109 P.2d 294, 301.

Conduct, n. Personal behavior; deportment; mode of action; any positive or negative act. An action or omission and its accompanying state of mind, or, where relevant, a series of acts and omissions. Model Penal Code, § 1.13.

See also Disorderly conduct; Tortious.

Conduct, estoppel by. See Equitable estoppel.

Conducti actio /kándáktaeksh(yl)yow/. In the civil law, an action which the hirer (conductor) of a thing might have against the letter (locatory).

Conductio /kándásh(yl)yow/. In the civil law, a hiring. Used generally in connection with the term locatio, a letting. Locatio et conductio (sometimes united as a compound word "locatio-conductio"), a letting and hiring.

Conduct money. In English practice, money paid to a witness who has been subpoenaed on a trial, sufficient to defray the reasonable expenses of going to, staying at, and returning from the place of trial.

Conductor. In the civil law, a hirer.

Conductor operarum /kándáktrapērērəm/. In the civil law, a person who engages to perform a piece of work for another, at a stated price.

Conductus /kándátəs/. A thing hired.

Conduit concept. An approach the tax law assumes in the tax treatment of certain entities and their owners. The approach permits specified tax characteristics to pass through the entity without losing their identity. Under the conduit concept, for example, long-term capital losses realized by a partnership are passed through as such to the individual partners. The same result does not materialize if the entity is a corporation. Varying forms of the conduit concept are applicable in the case of partnerships, trusts, estates, and Subchapter S corporations.

Cone. Area built up by a stream, near the mouth of a canyon of boulders, small stones, gravel, sand and other detritus.

Cone and key. In old English law, a woman at fourteen or fifteen years of age could take charge of her house and receive cone and key; that is, keep the accounts and keys. Said by Lord Coke to be cover and keye, meaning that at that age a woman knew what in her house should be kept under lock and key.

Confarreatio /kafərəriːəʃ(yl)yow/. In Roman law, a sacrificial rite resorted to by marrying persons of high patrician or priestly degree, for the purpose of clothing the husband with the manus over his wife; the civil modes of effecting the same thing being coemptio (formal), and usus mulieris (informal).

Confectio /kænfekt(yl)yow/. The making and completion of a written instrument.

Confederacy. The association or banding together of two or more persons for the purpose of committing an act or furthering an enterprise which is forbidden by law, or which, though lawful in itself, becomes unlawful when made the object of the confederacy. More commonly called a "conspiracy."

A league or agreement between two or more independent states whereby they unite for their mutual welfare and the furtherance of their common aims. The term may apply to a union so formed for a temporary or limited purpose, as in the case of an offensive and defensive alliance; but it is more commonly used to denote that species of political connection between two or more independent states by which a central government is created, invested with certain powers of sovereignty (mostly external), and acting upon the several component states as its units, which, however, retain their sovereign powers for domestic purposes and some others. See Compact; Confederate states; Federal government.

Confederate states. The band of eleven states formed in 1861 which waged war against the United States in the War Between the States or Civil War.

Confederation. A league or compact for mutual support, particularly of nations, or states. Such was the colonial government during the Revolution. See Confederacy.

Confederation articles. See Articles of Confederation.

Conference. A meeting of several persons for deliberation, for the interchange of opinion, or for the removal of differences or disputes.

In the practice of legislative bodies, when the two houses cannot agree upon a pending measure, each appoints a committee of "conference," and the committees meet and consult together for the purpose of removing differences, harmonizing conflicting views, and arranging a compromise which will be accepted by both houses.

Representative assembly of a denomination; association of athletic teams.

A personal meeting between the diplomatic agents of two or more nations for the purpose of making statements and explanations that will obviate the delay and difficulty attending the more formal conduct of negotiations.

Confess. To admit as true; to assent to; to concede. To admit the truth of a charge or accusation. Usually spoken of charges of tortious or criminal conduct. See Confession.
Confessing error. A plea to an assignment of error, admitting the same.

Confessio / konfəs(h)iəˈw/. Lat. A confession. Confessio in judicio, a confession made in or before a court.

Confessio facta in judicio omni probatione major est /konfəs(h)iəˈw fæktə ɪn ˈdjuːdɪʃiəʊ iəˈw əmnɪ ˈprɒbɛʃəliəˈwni ˌmɛjər ɛst/. A confession made in court is of greater effect than any proof.

Confession. A voluntary statement made by a person charged with the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, communicated to another person, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act or the share and participation which he had in it.

A statement made by a defendant disclosing his guilt of crime with which he is charged and excluding possibility of a reasonable inference to the contrary. People v. Anderson, 236 Cal.App.2d 419, 46 Cal.Rptr. 1, 7. Voluntary statement made by one who is defendant in criminal trial at time when he is not testifying in trial and by which he acknowledges certain conduct of his own constituting crime for which he is on trial; a statement which, if true, discloses his guilt of that crime and excludes possibility of reasonable inference to contrary. People v. Beverly, 233 Cal.App.2d 702, 43 Cal.Rptr. 743, 749.

See also Interrogation.

Constitutional protections. See Escobedo Rule; Malory Rule; Miranda Rule.

Classification of confessions. Confessions are divided into judicial and extra-judicial. The former are such as are made before a magistrate or court in the due course of legal proceedings; they include confessions made in preliminary examinations before magistrates. The latter is one made by the party out of court, or to any person, official or otherwise, when made not in the course of a judicial examination or investigation. See also Extra-judicial.

An implied confession is where the defendant does not plead guilty but indirectly admits his guilt by placing himself at the mercy of the court and asking for a light sentence. An indirect confession is one inferred from the conduct of the defendant. An involuntary confession is one induced by hope, promise, fear, violence, torture, or threat. Lyons v. State, 77 Okt. Cr. 197, 138 P.2d 142, 148; Lyons v. State, 140 P.2d 248. A naked confession is an admission of the guilt of the party, but which is not supported by any evidence of the commission of the crime. A voluntary confession is one made spontaneously by a person accused of crime, free from the influence of any extraneous disturbing cause, and in particular, not influenced, or extorted by violence, threats, or promises.

See also Involuntary confession; Oral confession.

Distinguished from admission. A confession is a statement admitting or acknowledging all facts necessary for conviction of the crime. An admission, on the other hand, is an acknowledgment of a fact or facts tending to prove guilt which falls short of an acknowledgment of all essential elements of the crime. Gladden v. Unsworth, 9th Cir. 396 F.2d 373, 375 n. 2; People v. Fitzgerald, 56 Cal.2d 855, 861, 17 Cal.Rptr. 129, 132, 366 P.2d 481, 484.

Confession and avoidance. A plea in confession and avoidance is one which avows and confesses the truth of the averments of fact in the complaint or declaration, either expressly or by implication, but then proceeds to allege new matter which tends to deprive the facts admitted of their ordinary legal effect, or to obviate, neutralize, or avoid them. Sievers v. Brown, 216 Miss. 801, 63 So.2d 217, 219.

Confession of defense. In English practice, where defendant alleges a ground of defense arising since the commencement of the action, the plaintiff may deliver confession of such defense and sign judgment for his costs up to the time of such pleading, unless it be otherwise ordered.

Confession of judgment. See Cognovit judgment; Judgment.

Confesso, bill taken pro. In equity practice, an order which the court of chancery makes when the defendant does not file an answer, that the plaintiff may take such a decree as the case made by his bill warrants.

Confessor. A priest who receives auricular confessions of sins from persons under his spiritual charge, and pronounces absolution upon them. The secrets of the confessional were not privileged communications at common law, but are so classified by statute or court decision in many states.

Confessoria actio / konˈʃeːəriə ˈæktio/. Lat. In the civil law, an action for enforcing a servitude.

Confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur, et quodammodo sua sententia damnatur / konˈʃeːəs ɪn ˈdjuːdɪʃiəʊ pɾo ˈdʒuːdɪkaʊtə ˈhæbətər, ɛt kʊˈdɒmˌmɒdəʊ sʊ ˈsɛntɛntɪə ˈðæmnətər/. A person confessing his guilt when arraigned is deemed to have been found guilty, and is, as it were, condemned by his own sentence.

Confide. A synonym of the word "trust"; meaning to put into one's trust, keeping, or confidence.

Confidence. Trust; reliance; relation of trust. Reliance on discretion of another. In the construction of wills, this word is considered peculiarly appropriate to create a trust.

Confidence game. Obtaining of money or property by means of some trick, device, or swindling operation in which advantage is taken of the confidence which the victim reposes in the swindler. The elements of the crime of "confidence game" are: (1) an intentional false representation to the victim as to some present fact, (2) knowing it to be false, (3) with intent that the victim rely on the representation, (4) the representation being made to obtain the victim's confidence and thereafter his money and property, (5) which confidence is then abused by defendant. U. S. v. Brown, D.C.App., 309 A.2d 256, 257.

For distinction between false pretenses and confidence game, see False pretenses. See also Film-flam.

Confidential. Intrusted with the confidence of another or with his secret affairs or purposes; intended to be held in confidence or kept secret; done in confidence.
CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATION

Confidential communication. Privileged communications such as those between spouses, attorney-client, confessor-penitent, etc. Such are privileged at the option of the spouse-witness, client-witness and penitent-witness. Confidential communication is statement made under circumstances showing that speaker intended statement only for ears of person addressed; thus if communication is made in presence of third party whose presence is not reasonably necessary for the communication, it is not privileged.
See also Communication; Privileged communications.

Confidentiality. State or quality of being confidential; treated as private and not for publication.

Confidential relation. A fiduciary relation. It is a peculiar relation which exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, landlord and tenant, parent and child, guardian and ward, ancestor and heir, husband and wife, trustee and cestui que trust, executors or administrators and creditors, legatees, or distributing, appointor and appointee under powers, and partners and part owners.
In these and like cases, the law, in order to prevent undue advantage from the unlimited confidence or sense of duty which the relation naturally creates, requires the utmost degree of good faith in all transactions between the parties. It is not confined to any specific association of parties. It appears when the circumstances make it certain that the parties do not deal on equal terms, but on the one side there is an overmastering influence, or, on the other, weakness, dependence, or trust, justifiably reposed. The mere existence of kinship does not, of itself, give rise to such relation. It covers every form of relation between parties wherein confidence is reposed by one in another, and former relies and acts upon representations of the other and is guilty of no derelictions on S.W.2d 408, 416.

Confidential relations are deemed to arise whenever two persons have come into such a relation that confidence is necessarily reposed by one and the influence which naturally grows out of the confidence is possessed by the other, and this confidence is abused or the influence is exerted to obtain an advantage at expense of confiding party. Ruebsamen v.
Maddocks, Me., 340 A.2d 31, 34.

See also Fiduciary or confidential relation.

Confinement. State of being confined; shut in; imprisoned. Confinement may be by either a moral or a physical restraint, by threats of violence with a present force, or by physical restraint of the person.

See also Commitment; Solitary confinement.

Confirm. To complete or establish that which was imperfect or uncertain; to ratify what has been done without authority or insufficiency. To make firm or certain; to give new assurance of truth or certainty; to put aside past doubt; to give approval to. See also Confirmation.

Confirmare est id firmum facere quod prius infrafirmum fuit /kônfarméry est id fárma fêzaries kwôd pryaz ânfárma fyuwa/. To confirm is to make firm that which was before infirm.

Confirmare nemo potest prius quam jus ei acciderit /kônfarméry nîymow pôwsst pryaz kwâm jâs iyay âksadâr/. No one can confirm before the right accrues to him.

Confirmatio /kônfarmeysh(uty)ow/. The conveyance of an estate, or the communication of a right that one hath in or unto lands or tenements, to another that hath the possession thereof, or some other estate therein, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased or enlarged. 2 Bl.Comm. 325.

Confirmatio chartarum /kônfarméysh(uty)ow kartáram/.
Lat. Confirmation of the charters. A statute passed in the 25 Edw. I., whereby the Great Charter is declared to be allowed as the common law; all judgments contrary to it are declared void; copies of it are ordered to be sent to all cathedral churches and read twice a year to the people; and sentence of excommunication is directed to be as constantly denounced against all those that, by word or deed or counsel, act contrary thereto or in any degree infringe
it. 1 Bl.Comm. 128.

Confirmatio crescens /kônfarméysh(uty)ow krésænz/. An enlarging confirmation; one which enlarges a rightful estate.

Confirmatio diminuens /kônfarméysh(uty)ow domínyu-wenz/. A diminishing confirmation. A confirmation which tends and serves to diminish and abridge the services whereby a tenant doth hold, operating as a release of part of the services.

Confirmatio est nulla ubi donum precedens est invalid-dum /kônfarméysh(uty)ow èst nàlà wíwëy dwônam prasiyend(uty) èst inváládom/. Confirmation is void where the preceding gift is invalid.

Confirmation. A contract, or written memorandum thereof, by which that which was infirm, difficult of proof, void, imperfect, or subject to be avoided is ratified, rendered valid and binding, made firm and unavoidable. To give formal approval. Act or process of confirming. See also Approval; Ratification; Verification.

A conveyance of an estate or right in esse, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased.

The ratification or approval of executive acts by a legislature or one house. In order to be valid, Presidential appointments of important officers of the United States require approval by a majority of the Senate, and treaties must be approved by two-thirds

A formal memorandum delivered by the customers or suppliers of a company to its independent auditor verifying the amounts shown as receivable or payable. The confirmation document is originally sent by the auditor to the customer.

Confirmation of sale. The confirmation of a judicial sale by the court which ordered it is a certification in some way (usually by the entry of an order) or the court's approval of the terms, price, and conditions of the sale.

Confirmatio omnes suppet defectus, licet id quod actum est ab initio non valuit /kônfarméysh(uty)ow ömny
Confractori rates. With respect to utilities, are rates which do not afford a reasonable return on value of property at time it is used in public service; rates which do not afford net return sufficient to preserve utility's property and to attract capital necessary to enable utility to discharge its public duties.

Confisk. An old form of confiscate.

Confittens reuz /kônťęfęn(d)z rıyäs/. An accused person who admits his guilt.

Conflicting evidence. Evidence offered by plaintiff and defendant, or prosecutor and defendant which is inconsistent and cannot be reconciled.

Conflict of authority. A division between two or more courts (generally courts of last resort) on some legal principal or application of law. May also refer to disparity between authorities on a subject. See also Choice of law; Conflict of laws.

Conflict of interest. Term used in connection with public officials and fiduciaries and their relationship to matters of private interest or gain to them. Ethical problems connected therewith are covered by statutes in most jurisdictions and by federal statutes on the federal level. Generally, when used to suggest disqualification of a public official from performing his sworn duty, term "conflict of interest" refers to a clash between public interest and the private pecuniary interest of the individual concerned. Gardner v. Nashville Housing Authority of Metropolitan Government of Nashville and Davidson County, Tenn., 514 F.2d 38, 41.

Conflict of laws. Inconsistency or difference between the laws of different states or countries, arising in the case of persons who have acquired rights, incurred obligations, injuries or damages, or made contracts, within the territory of two or more jurisdictions. Hence, that branch of jurisprudence, arising from the diversity of the laws of different nations, states or jurisdictions, in their application to rights and remedies, which reconciles the inconsistency, or decides which law or system is to govern in the particular case, or settles the degree of force to be accorded to the law of another jurisdiction, (the acts or rights in question having arisen under it) either where it varies from the domestic law, or where the domestic law is silent or not exclusively applicable to the case in point. See also Center of gravity doctrine; Choice of law; Grouping of contacts; Kilberg doctrine; Lex celebrationis; Lex contractus; Lex fori; Lex loci; Lex loci celebrationis; Lex loci contractus; Lex situs; Lex solutions; Lex validitatis; Renvoi.

Conflict of Laws is that part of the law of each state which determines what effect is given to the fact that the case may have a significant relationship to more than one state. Restatement, Second, Conflicts of Law, § 2.

Conflict of personal laws. Term used to describe conflicts within a particular state arising from application of general law to racial and religious groups which have their own laws, e.g. tribal laws of the Indians.

Conformed copy. An exact copy of a document on which has been written explanations of things that could not or were not copied; e.g. written signature might be replaced on conformed copy with notation that it was signed by the person whose signature appears on the original.

Conforming. In law of sales, goods or conduct including any part of a performance are conforming or conform to the contract when they are in accordance with the obligations under the contract. U.C.C. § 2-106(2).

Conforming use. In zoning and land use planning, a use of a structure which is in conformity with those uses permitted by the particular zoning classification of the area. Compare Nonconforming use.

Conformity. Correspondence in form, manner, or use; agreement; harmony; congruity.

Conformity Act, or statute. A term used to designate Act June 1, 1872, c. 255, § 5, 17 Stat. 197, providing that the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding in civil causes, other than equity and admiralty causes, in the federal district courts shall conform, as near as may be, to those existing in like causes in the courts of the state within which such district courts are held. Since the adoption of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C.A., the Conformity Act is no longer effective. Hydraulic Press Mfg. Co. v. Williams, White & Co., C.C.A.III. 1947, 165 F.2d 489.

Conformity, Bill of. See Bill (Equity pleading and practice).

Conformity hearing. Hearing ordered by court to determine whether judgment or decree directed to be prepared by the prevailing party conforms with decision of court. Commonly after court makes its findings it directs prevailing party to draw judgment or decree in conformity with such findings and decision.

Confrarie /konfrarij/konfréri/. Fr. In old English law, a fraternity, brotherhood, or society.

Conferees /konfererz/konferérs/. Brethren in a religious house; fellows of one and the same society.

Confrontation. In criminal law, the act of setting a witness face to face with the prisoner, in order that the latter may make any objection he has to the witness, or that the witness may identify the accused. The constitutional right of confrontation (6th Amend.) does not mean merely that witnesses are to be made visible to the accused, but imports the constitutional privilege to cross-examine them. In fact, the essence of the right of confrontation is the right to cross examination. Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 39 L.Ed.2d 347. A disruptive defendant may however lose his right to be present in the courtroom, and, as a result, lose his right to confront witnesses. Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 90 S.Ct. 1037, 25 L.Ed.2d 353.

Confusio /kanfjûwiz(h)i(y)ow/. In the civil law, the inseparable intermixture of property belonging to different owners; it is properly confined to the pouring together of fluids, but is sometimes also used of a melting together of metals or any compound formed by the irrecoverable commixture of different substances. It is distinguished from commixtion by the fact that in the latter case a separation may be made, while in a case of confusio there cannot be. 2 Bl. Comm. 405.

Confusion. This term, as used in the civil law and in compound terms derived from that source, means a blending or intermingling, and is equivalent to the term "merger" as used at common law. See also Commingling.

Confusion of boundaries. The title of that branch of equity jurisdiction which relates to the discovery and settlement of conflicting, disputed, or uncertain boundaries.

Confusion of debts. A mode of extinguishing a debt, by the concurrence in the same person of two qualities or adverse rights to the same thing which mutually destroy each other. This may occur in several ways, as where the creditor becomes the heir of the debtor, or the debtor the heir of the creditor, or either accedes to the title of the other by any other mode of transfer.

Confusion of goods. Results when goods belonging to two or more owners become intermixed to the point where the property of any of them no longer can be identified except as part of a mass of like goods. Johnson v. Covey, 1 Utah 2d 180, 264 P.2d 283. See also Commingling.

Confusion of rights. A union of the qualities of debtor and creditor in the same person. The effect of such a union is, generally, to extinguish the debt. Baylor University v. Bradshaw, Tex.Civ.App., 52 S.W.2d 1094, 1101.

Confusion of titles. A civil-law expression, synonymous with "merger," as used in the common law, applying where two titles to the same property unite in the same person.

Confute /kanfjuwt/. To prove to be false, defective, or invalid.

Con game. A swindle or any arrangement in which a person is deliberately defrauded because of his trust in the one who is swindling. See also Confidence game; Film-flam.

Congé /konjè/konzhè/. Fr. In French law, permission, leave, license; a passport or clearance to a vessel; a permission to arm, equip, or navigate a vessel.

Congeable /konjiyabal/. L. Fr. Lawful; permissible; allowable.

Congé d’accorder /konzhè dâkordè/. Leave to accord. A permission granted by the court, in the old process of levying a fine, to the defendant to agree with the plaintiff.

Congé d’eslier /konzhè delir/. Also spelled congé d’élie, congé délire. A permission or license from the British sovereign to a dean and chapter to elect a bishop, in time of vacation; or to an abbey or priory which is of royal foundation, to elect an abbot or prior.

Congenital. A condition present at birth.
Congildones /kɔŋgildōnˈiːz/. In Saxon law, fellow-members of a guild.

Congius /kɒnˈdʒiəs/. An ancient measure containing about a gallon and a pint.

Conglomerate /kæŋɡˈlɔːmərət/. A corporation that has diversified its operations usually by acquiring enterprises in widely varied industries.

Conglomerate merger. Merger among firms which operate in separate and distinct markets; e.g. merger of companies with different product lines. A merger in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Kennecott Copper Corp. v. F. T. C., C.A.10, 467 F.2d 67, 75. A merger other than a horizontal or vertical merger. U. S. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., D.C.Conn., 306 F.Supp. 766, 774. See also Conglomerate; Merger.

Congregate. To come together; to assemble; to meet.

Congregation. An assembly or gathering; specifically, an assembly or society of persons who together constitute the principal supporters of a particular parish, or habitually meet at the same church for religious exercises.

Congress /kɒŋˈɡres/. Formal meeting of delegates or representatives. The Congress of the United States was created by Article I, Section 1, of the Constitution, adopted by the Constitutional Convention on September 17, 1787, providing that “All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.” The first Congress under the Constitution met on March 4, 1789, in the Federal Hall in New York City. The membership then consisted of 20 Senators and 59 Representatives. See House of Representatives; Senate.

Congressional apportionment. See Apportionment (Representatives).

Congressional committee. A committee of the House of Representatives or of the Senate or a joint committee formed for some particular public purpose.

Congressional district. A geographical unit of a State from which one member of the House of Representatives is elected.

Congressional immunity. See Legislative immunity.

Congressional powers. The authority vested in the Senate and House of Representatives to enact laws, etc. as provided in U.S.Const., Art. I.

Congressional Record. Proceedings of Congress are published in the Congressional Record, which is issued daily when Congress is in session. Publication of the Record began March 4, 1873; it was the first series officially reported, printed, and published directly by the Federal Government. The Daily Digest of the Congressional Record, printed in the back of each issue of the Record, summarizes the proceedings of that day in each House, and before each of their committees and subcommittees, respectively. The Digest also presents the legislative program for each day, and at the end of the week, gives the program for the following week. Its publication was begun March 17, 1947. Members of Congress are allowed to edit their speeches before printing and may insert material never actually spoken by securing from their respective houses leave to print or to extend their remarks.

Congressman. Strictly, a member of the Congress of the United States. But the common tendency is to apply this term only to a member of the House of Representatives, as distinguished from a senator.

Congressus /kɒŋˈɡrɛsəs/. The extreme practical test of the truth of a charge of impotence brought against a husband by a wife. It is now disused.

Conjectio /kɒnˈdʒɛkʃ(ə)nˈoʊ/. In the civil law of evidence, a throwing together. Presumption; the putting of things together, with the inference drawn therefrom.

Conjectio cause /kɒnˈdʒɛkʃ(ə)nˈoʊ ˈkoʊzi/. In the civil law, a statement of the case. A brief synopsis of the case given by the advocate to the judge in opening the trial.

Conjectural choice, rule of /ˈruːvi əv konˈdʒɛkʃərəl ˈkʰɔɪs/. Where all theories of causation rest only on conjecture, no jury question is presented.

Conjecture. A slight degree of credence, arising from evidence too weak or too remote to cause belief. Supposition or surmise. The idea of a fact, suggested by another fact; as a possible cause, concomitant, or result. An idea or notion founded on a probability without any demonstration of its truth; an idea or surmise inducing a slight degree of belief founded upon some possible, or perhaps probable fact of which there is no positive evidence. Oklahoma City v. Wilcoxson, 173 Okl. 433, 48 P.2d 1039, 1043. An explanation consistent with but not deducible as a reasonable inference from known facts or conditions. In popular use, synonymous with “guess.” Also, the bringing together of the circumstances, as well as the result obtained.

Conjoint robbery. Where the act is committed by two or more persons.

Conjoints. Persons married to each other.

Conjudex /kɔnˈdʒudɛks/. In old English law, an associate judge.

Conjugal /kɔnˈdʒʊɡəl/. Of or belonging to marriage or the married state; suitable or appropriate to the married state or to married persons; matrimonial; connubial.

Conjugal rights. Matrimonial rights; the right which husband and wife have to each other's society, comfort, and affection.

Conjugium /kɔnˈdʒjuːiəm/. One of the names of marriage, among the Romans.

Conjuncta /kɔnˈdʒʌŋktə/. In the civil law, things joined together or united; as distinguished from disjuncta, things disjoined or separated.

Conjunctam /kɔnˈdʒʌŋktəm/. Lat. In old English law, jointly.

Conjunctam et divisim /kɔnˈdʒʌŋktəm et dəˈvɪzəm/. L. Lat. In old English law, jointly and severally.
CONJUNCTIO ET DIVISIM

Conjectio /kanjākshiyow/. In the civil law, conjunction; connection of words in a sentence.

Conjectio marii et feminæ est de jure nature /kanjākshiyow marâydy at fēmānīy ēst dī jūrīy nachūrīy/. The union of husband and wife is of the law of nature.

Conjunctive. Connecting in a manner denoting union. A grammatical term for particles which serve for joining or connecting together. Thus, the word "and" is called a "conjunctive," and "or" a "disjunctive," conjunction.

Conjunctive denial. Where several material facts are stated conjunctively in the complaint, an answer which undertakes to deny their averments as a whole, conjunctively stated, is called a "conjunctive denial."

Conjunctive obligation /kanjākṣṭvat ñablāgyaṣṭhan/. See Obligation.

Conjuration /kōnjārēyshiyow/. In old English law, a swearing together; an oath administered to several together; a combination or confederacy under oath.

In old European law, a compact of the inhabitants of a commune, or municipality, confirmed by their oaths to each other and which was the basis of the commune.

Conjunction /kōnjārēyshan/. In old English law, a plot or compact made by persons combining by oath to do any public harm.

The offense at common law of having conference or commerce with evil spirits, in order to discover some secret, or effect some purpose. The English Witchcraft Act of 1735, which made conjuration an offense, was repealed by the Fraudulent Mediums Act of 1951.

Conjuratur /kōñjārēydar/. In old English law, one who swears or is sworn with others; one bound by oath with others; a compurgator; a conspirator.

Connect. To join or fasten together as by something intervening; to associate as in occurrence or in idea; to combine; to unite or link together, as in an electrical circuit; to establish a bond or relation between; to meet or make connections for transference of passengers or change of means of communication.

Connected. Joined; united by junction, by an intervening substance or medium, by dependence or relation, or by order in a series.

Connecting carrier. One of several common carriers whose united lines or parts constitute the route over which shipment is to pass, and which participates in transportation of such shipment as a common carrier furnishing a necessary link in transportation. Herman v. Railway Exp. Agency, 17 N.J.Super. 10, 85 A.2d 284.

Connecting factors. In conflict of laws, legal categories such as the place of making a contract which serve to determine the choice of law in a particular case.

Connecting up doctrine. A thing may be put into evidence (including testimony) subject to its being connected up with later evidence that will show its relevance.

Connection. The state of being connected or joined; union by junction, by an intervening substance or medium, by dependence or relation, or by order in a series.

Connections. Relations by blood or marriage, but more commonly the relations of a person with whom one is connected by marriage. In this sense, the relations of a wife are "connections" of her husband. The term is vague and indefinite.

Connexité /konēksiyté/. In French law, this exists when two actions are pending which, although not identical as in lis pendens, are so nearly similar in object that it is expedient to have them both adjudicated upon by the same judges.

Connivance /kanāyvaŋ/. The secret or indirect consent or permission of one person to the commission of an unlawful or criminal act by another. A winking at; voluntary blindness; an intentional failure to discover or prevent the wrong; forbearance or passive consent. Pierce v. Crisp, 260 Ky. 519, 86 S.W.2d 293, 296.

As constituting defense in divorce action, is plaintiff's corrupt consent, express or implied, to offense charged against defendant. Muir v. Muir, Del.Super., 7 Terry 578, 86 A.2d 857, 858. This defense has been abolished by many states with the enactment of no-fault divorce laws.

Connive /kanāyv/. To co-operate secretly with, or to have a secret or clandestine understanding with. To take part or co-operate privily with another, to aid or abet. To look upon with secret favor; it implies both knowledge and assent, either active or passive. See Connivance.

Connoisement /kōneyśmön/. In French law, an instrument, signed by the master of a ship or his agent, containing a description of the goods loaded on a ship, the persons who have sent them, the persons to whom they were sent, and the undertaking to transport them; similar to the English and American bill of lading.

Connuum /kan(y)ūbwyam/. In the civil law, marriage. Among the Romans, a lawful marriage as distinguished from "concubinage" (q.v.), an inferior marriage.

Conociamento /konōsiyaměntow/. In Spanish law, a recognition.

Conocimiento /konōsiyam(i)yěntow/. In Spanish law, a bill of lading. In the Mediterranean ports it is called "poliza de cargamento."

Conposessio /kōmpazēshiyow/. In civil law, a joint possession.

Conquereur /kōŋkarar/. In Norman and old English law, the same as "conqueror" (q.v.).

Conqueror. In old English and Scotch law, the first purchaser of an estate; he who first brought an estate into his family, or into the family owning it. 2 Bl.Comm. 242, 243.

Conquest /kōŋkwěst/. In feudal law, acquisition by purchase; any method of acquiring the ownership of an estate other than by descent. Also an estate acquired otherwise than by inheritance.
In international law, the acquisition of the sovereignty of a country by force of arms, exercised by an independent power which reduces the vanquished to the submission of its empire. To conquer a territory or nation by means of force.

Conquestor /kóŋkwɛstər/konkwéstər/. Conqueror. The title given to William of Normandy.

Conquête /kaŋkwɛst/kankɛt/. In French law, the name given to every acquisition which the husband and wife, jointly or severally, make during the conjugal community. Thus, whatever is acquired by the husband and wife, either by his or her industry or good fortune, inures to the extent of one-half for the benefit of the other. In Louisiana, these gains are called acquêts.

Conquisito /kóŋkwɛsz(t)yøw/. In feudal and old English law, acquisition. 2 BL.Comm. 242.

Conquisitor /kóŋkwæzjʊdɑr/. In feudal law, a purchaser, acquirer, or conqueror. 2 BL.Comm. 242, 243.

Consanguineus /kɔnsæŋɡwɪniəs/. Lat. A person related by blood; a person descended from the same common stock.

Consanguineus est quasi eodem sanguine natus /kɔnsæŋɡwɪniəs est kwɛsəi ɪˈwɒdɑm sæŋɡwɪˈniːs nɛdəs/. A person related by consanguinity is, as it were, sprung from the same blood.

Consanguineus frater /kɔnsæŋɡwɪniəs fraɪdər/. In civil and feudal law, a half-brother by the father's side, as distinguished from frater uterinus, a brother by the mother's side. 2 BL.Comm. 231.

Consanguinity /kɔnsæŋɡwɪnədi/. Kinship; blood relationship; the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor. Consanguinity is distinguished from "affinity," which is the connection existing in consequence of a marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other.

Lineal and collateral consanguinity. Lineal consanguinity is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between son, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Collateral consanguinity is that which subsists between persons who have the same ancestors, but who do not descend (or ascend) one from the other. Thus, father and son are related by lineal consanguinity, uncle and nephew by collateral sanguinity.

Conscience. The moral sense; the faculty of judging the moral qualities of actions, or of discriminating between right and wrong; particularly applied to one's perception and judgment of the moral qualities of his own conduct, but in a wider sense, denoting a similar application of the standards of morality to the acts of others. The sense of right and wrong inherent in every person by virtue of his existence as a social entity; good conscience being a synonym of equity. In law, especially the moral rule which requires probity, justice, and honest dealing between man and man, as when we say that a bargain is "against conscience" or "unconscionable," or that the price paid for property at a forced sale was so inadequate as to "shock the conscience." This is also the meaning of the term as applied to the jurisdiction and principles of decision of courts of chancery, as in saying that such a court is a "court of conscience," that it proceeds "according to conscience," or that it has cognizance of "matters of conscience."

Conscience, courts of. In English law, courts, not of record, constituted by act of parliament in the city of London, and other towns, for the recovery of small debts; otherwise and more commonly called "Courts of Requests." Such courts have been superseded by county courts.

Conscience of the court. When an issue is sent out of chancery to be tried at law, to "inform the conscience of the court," the meaning is that the court is to be supplied with exact and dependable information as to the unsettled or disputed questions of fact in the case, in order that it may proceed to decide it in accordance with the principles of equity and good conscience in the light of the facts thus determined. Watt v. Starke, 101 U.S. 247, 25 L.Ed. 826.

Conscience, right of. As used in some constitutional provisions, this phrase is equivalent to religious liberty or freedom of conscience.

Consentia dictur a con et scio, quasi scire cum deo /kɔns(ə)tʃiˈdɪtər æk ən ət səʊəʊˌkwaɪzi kəm ˈdiːəʊ/ dissār eɪ kɒn ët ˈseɪəʊˌkwɪsər kɪəm ˈdɪəʊ/. Conscience is called from con and scio, to know, as it were, with God.

Conscientious objector. One who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war. Such person need not be a member of a religious sect whose creed forbids participation in war to be entitled to classification as a conscientious objector. U. S. v. Bowles, C.C.A.N.J., 131 F.2d 818. It is sufficient if he has a conscientious scruple against war in any form. Phillips v. Downer, C.C.A.N.Y., 135 F.2d 521, 524, 525. Such objection must however be shown to be sincere. U. S. v. Miller, D.C.N.D., 337 F.Supp. 1402, 1403.

Conscientious scruple. A conscientious scruple against taking an oath, serving as a juror in a capital case, doing military duty, or the like, is an objection or repugnance growing out of the fact that the person believes the thing demanded of him to be morally wrong, his conscience being the sole guide to his decision; it is thus distinguished from an "objection on principle," which is dictated by the reason and judgment, rather than the moral sense, and may relate only to the propriety or expediency of the thing in question.

Conscription. Compulsory enrollment and induction into military service; drafted.

Consecrate. In ecclesiastical law, to dedicate to sacred purposes, as a bishop by imposition of hands, or a church or churchyard by prayers, etc. Consecration is performed by a bishop or archbishop.

Consecratio est periodus electionis; electio est preambula consecrationis. Consecration is the termination of election; election is the preamble of consecration.
Consecutive. Successive; succeeding one another in regular order; to follow in uninterrupted succession.

Consecutive sentences. When one sentence of confinement is to follow another in point of time, the second sentence is deemed to be consecutive. May also be applied to suspended sentences. Also called "from and after" sentences.

Conseo /konsędow/. Sp. A term used in conveyances under Mexican law, equivalent to the English word "grant."

Conseil de famille /konséyl da fämilë/. In French law, a family council. Certain acts require the sanction of this body. For example, a guardian can neither accept nor reject an inheritance to which the minor has succeeded without its authority (Code Nap. 461); nor can he accept for the child a gift inter vivos without the like authority (Code Nap. 463).

Conseil de prud'hommes /konséyl da pruvdoùm/. In French law, one of a species of trade tribunals, charged with settling differences between masters and workmen. They endeavor, in the first instance, to conciliate the parties. In default, they adjudicate upon the questions in dispute. Their decisions are final up to 200f. Beyond that amount, appeals lie to the tribunals of commerce.

Conseil d'état /konséyl deytá/. Council of state. One of the oldest of French institutions, its origin dating back to 1302. It decides or advises upon state questions and measures proposed for legislation, submitted to it by the President of the Republic, by the members of the Cabinet, and by Parliament.

Conseil judiciaire /konséyl zhudis(i)jer/. In French law, when a person has been subjected to an interdiction on the ground of his insane extravagance, but the interdiction is not absolute, but limited only, the court of first instance, which grants the interdiction, appoints a council, called by this name, with whose assistance the party may bring or defend actions, or compromise the same, alienate his estate, make or incur loans, and the like.

Consensual contract /kansénshuwal kontraktr/. A term derived from the civil law, denoting a contract founded upon and completed by the mere consent of the contracting parties, without any external formality or symbolic act to fix the obligation.

Consensual marriage /kansénshuwal màräj/. Marriage resting simply on consent per verba de praesi, between competent parties. See also Common-law marriage.

Consensus ad idem /kansénsas aëd áydam/. An agreement of parties to the same thing; a meeting of minds.

Consensus est voluntas plurium ad quos res pertinet, simul juncta /kansénsas est válántás plúřiyam aëd kwóws rìyò pàrdanat, sàyýmal jàkhta/. Consent is the conjoint will of several persons to whom the thing belongs.

Consensus facit legem /kansénsas fëyst lijøjam/. Consent makes the law. (A contract is law between the parties agreeing to be bound by it.)

Consensus, non concubitus, facit nuptias vel matrimoni- um, et consentire non possunt ante annos nubiles /kansénsas, nón kanyakûwbadas, fëyst népshihas vël màtrámòwn(i)jàm, èt kënsantsäyri nón pòssàn àntiy ànjons n(y)ùwbalyjì/. Consent, and not cohabitation (or coition), constitutes nuptials or marriage, and persons cannot consent before marriageable ages. 1 Bl.Comm. 434.

Consensus tollit errem /kansénsas tòlad arôram/. Consent (acquiescence) removes mistake.

Consensus voluntas multorum ad quos res pertinet, simul juncta /kansénsas válántæs multóram aëd kwòws rìyò pàrdanat sàyýmal jàkhta/. Consent is the united will of several interested in one subject-matter.

Consent. A concurrence of wills. Voluntarily yielding the will to the proposition of another; acquiescence or compliance therewith. Agreement; the act or result of coming into harmony or accord. Consent is an act of reason, accompanied with deliberation, the mind weighing as in a balance the good or evil on each side. It means voluntary agreement by a person in the possession and exercise of sufficient mental capacity to make an intelligent choice to do something proposed by another. It supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious, determined, and free use of these powers. Consent is implied in every agreement. It is an act unclouded by fraud, duress, or sometimes even mistake.

Willingness in fact that an act or an invasion of an interest shall take place. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 10A.

As used in the law of rape "consent" means consent of the will, and submission under the influence of fear or terror cannot amount to real consent. There must be an exercise of intelligence based on knowledge of its significance and moral quality and there must be a choice between resistance and assent. And if woman resists to the point where further resistance would be useless or until her resistance is overcome by force or violence, submission thereafter is not "consent".

See also Acquiescence; Age of consent; Assent; Connivance; Informed consent.

Consent decree. See Decree.

Consent judgment. See Judgment.

Express consent. That directly given, either viva voce or in writing. It is positive, direct, unequivocal consent, requiring no inference or implication to supply its meaning. Pacific Nat. Agricultural Credit Corporation v. Hagerman, 40 N.M. 116, 55 P.2d 667, 670. Express or implied consent. Under motor vehicle liability insurance law providing that policy should cover any person responsible for operation of insured vehicle with insured's express or implied consent, words "express or implied consent" primarily modify not the word "operation", but the word "responsible", and imply possession of vehicle with consent of owner and responsibility to him.

Implied consent. That manifested by signs, actions, or facts, or by inaction or silence, which raise a presumption that the consent has been given. For example, when a corporation does business in a state it impliedly consents to be subject to the jurisdiction of that state’s courts in the event of tortious conduct, even though it is not incorporated in that state.

Most every state has a statute implying the consent of one who drives upon its highways to submit to some type of scientific test or tests measuring the alcoholic content of the driver’s blood. In addition to implying consent, these statutes usually provide that if the result of the test shows that the alcohol content exceeds a specified percentage, then a rebuttable presumption of intoxication arises.

Consentible lines /konséntábl láynz/. See Line.

Consentientes et agentes pari pena plecetentur /konséntshiyéntíy ed ajéntíy párry plyná plék-ten-tár/. They who consent to an act, and they who do it, shall be visited with equal punishment.

Consentire matrimonio non possunt infra [ante] annos nubiles /kónséntshiríy mátramónnìyow nón pósént infra [éntíy] áñows nyúwbálíyí/. Parties cannot consent to marriage within the years of marriage [before the age of consent].

Consent judgment. See Judgment.

Consent jurisdiction. Parties may agree in advance to submit their controversy to a given forum, in which case the forum is the consent jurisdiction.

Consent of victim. The submission of a victim is generally no defense to a crime unless, as in the case of rape, the victim’s consent negatives an element of the crime itself.

Consent rule. An entry of record by the defendant, confessing the lease, entry, and ouster by the plaintiff in an action of ejectment. A superseded instrument, in which a defendant in an action of ejectment specified for what purpose he intended to defend, and undertook to confess not only the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster, but that he was in possession.

Consent search. A search made by police after the subject of the search has consented; such consent, if freely and intelligently given, will validate a warrantless search.

Consent to be sued. Agreement in advance to be sued in a particular form. See Cognovit judgment; Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Consent to notice. In documents which treat of the requirement of notice, (e.g. lease) a party may consent to notice beforehand or agree that notice to some other person will satisfy the requirement of notice to him.

Consequence. The result following in natural sequence from an event which is adapted to produce, or to aid in producing, such result, the correlative of “cause”. Board of Trustees of Firemen’s Relief and Pension Fund for City of Tulsa v. Miller, 186 Okl. 586, 99 P. 2d 146, 147. See also Natural and probable consequences.

Consequentia non est consequentia /kónséktʃwénksiyítíy nón est kónséktʃwénkshiy(i)yá/. The consequence of a consequence exists not.

Consequential contempt. The ancient name for what is now known as “constructive” contempt of court. See Contempt.

Consequential damages. See Damages.

Conservator. A guardian; protector; preserver. Appointed by court to manage affairs of incompetent or to liquidate business. One who is appointed by a Court to manage the estate of a protected person. Uniform Probate Code § 1-201(6).

Conservators of the peace. Officers authorized to preserve and maintain the public peace. In England, these officers were locally elected by the people until the reign of Edward III, when their appointment was vested in the king. Their duties were to prevent and arrest for breaches of the peace, but they had no power to arraign and try the offender until about 1360, when this authority was given to them by act of parliament, and “then they acquired the more honorable appellation of justices of the peace”. 1 Bl. Comm. 351.

Conserve. To save and protect from loss or damage.

Consider. To fix the mind on, with a view to careful examination; to examine; to inspect. To deliberate about and ponder over. To entertain or give heed to. See also Considered.

Considerable. Worthy of consideration; required to be observed. A “considerable” number, as of persons, does not necessarily mean a very great or any particular number of persons; the term “considerable” being merely relative.

Consideratio curia /kónsíðárévsh(i)yow kyúríyíyí/. The judgment of the court.

Consideration. The inducement to a contract. The cause, motive, price, or compelling influence which induces a contracting party to enter into a contract. The reason or material cause of a contract. Some right, interest, profit or benefit accruing to one party; or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility, given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. Richman v. Brookhaven Servicing Corp., 80 Misc.2d 563, 363 N.Y.S.2d 731, 733.

See also Adequate consideration; Failure of consideration; Fair and valuable consideration; Fair consideration; Good consideration; Inadequate consideration; Love and affection; Past consideration; Valuable consideration; Want of consideration.

Considerations are either executed or executory; express or implied; good or valuable. See definitions infra.

Concurrent consideration. One which arises at the same time or where the promises are simultaneous.

Continuing consideration. One consisting in acts or performances which must necessarily extend over a considerable period of time.

Equitable or moral considerations. Considerations which are devoid of efficacy in point of strict law, but are founded upon a moral duty, and may be made the basis of an express promise.

Executed or executory considerations. The former are acts done or values given before or at the time of making the contract; the latter are promises to give or do something in future.

Express or implied considerations. The former are those which are specifically stated in a deed, contract, or other instrument; the latter are those inferred or supposed by the law from the acts or situation of the parties. Express consideration is a consideration which is distinctly and specifically named in the written contract or in the oral agreement of the parties.

Good consideration. Such as is founded on natural duty and affection, or on a strong moral obligation. A consideration for love and affection entertained by and for one within degree recognized by law. Motives of natural duty, generosity, and prudence come under this class. The term is sometimes used in the sense of a consideration valid in point of law, and it then includes a valuable or sufficient as well as a meritorious consideration. Generally, however, good is used in antithesis to valuable consideration (q.v.).

Gratuitous consideration. One which is not founded upon any such loss, injury, or inconvenience to the party to whom it moves as to make it valid in law.

Illegal consideration. An act which if done, or a promise which if enforced, would be prejudicial to the public interest or contrary to law.

Implied considerations. See Express or implied considerations, supra.

Impossible consideration. One which cannot be performed.

Legal consideration. One recognized or permitted by the law as valid and lawful; as distinguished from such as are illegal or immoral. The term is also sometimes used as equivalent to "good" or "sufficient" consideration.

Meritorious consideration. See Good consideration, supra.

Moral considerations. See Equitable or moral considerations, supra.

Nominal consideration. One bearing no relation to the real value of the contract or article, as where a parcel of land is described in a deed as being sold for "one dollar," no actual consideration passing, or the real consideration being concealed. This term is also sometimes used as descriptive of an inflated or exaggerated value placed upon property for the purpose of an exchange.

Past consideration. An act done before the contract is made, which is ordinarily by itself no consideration for a promise. As to time, considerations may be of the past, present, or future. Those which are present or future will support a contract not void for other reasons.

Pecuniary consideration. A consideration for an act of forbearance which consists either in money presently passing or in money to be paid in the future, including a promise to pay a debt in full which otherwise would be released or diminished by bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings.

Sufficient consideration. One deemed by the law of sufficient value to support an ordinary contract be-Consilia multorum queruntur in magnis. The counsels of many are required in great things.

Consiliarius. In the civil law, a counselor, as distinguished from a pleader or advocate. An assistant judge. One who participates in the decisions.

Consilium. A day appointed to hear the counsel of both parties. A case set down for argument. It is commonly used for the day appointed for the argument of a demurrer, or errors assigned.

Consimil casu. In old English law, a writ of entry, framed under the provisions of the statute Westminster 2, 13 Edw. I c. 24, which lay for the benefit of the reversioner, where a tenant by the curtesy aliened in fee or for life. Many other new writs were framed under the provisions of this statute; but this particular writ was known emphatically by the title here defined. The writ is now practically obsolete. 3 Bl. Comm. 51.

Consist. To stand together, to be composed of or made up of. See Consisting.

Consistent. Having agreement with itself or something else; accordant; harmonious; congruous; compatible; compliable; not contradictory.

Consisting. Being composed or made up of. This word is not synonymous with "including", for the latter, when used in connection with a number of specified objects, always implies that there may be others which are not mentioned.

Consistor. A magistrate.

Consistorium. The state council of the Roman emperors.

Consistory. An assembly of cardinals convoked by the pope.

A tribunal (prætorium).

Consistory courts. In England, the courts of diocesan bishops held in their several cathedrals (before the bishop's chancellor, or commissary, who is the judge) for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their respective dioceses, and also for granting probates and administrations. From the sentence of these courts an appeal lies to the Provincial Court of the archbishop of each province respectively.

Consobrin. In the civil law, cousins-german, in general; brothers' and sisters' children, considered in their relation to each other.

Consciato. Lat. An association, fellowship, or partnership. Applied by some of the older writers to a corporation, and even to a nation considered as a body politic.

Consol. A bond that never matures but is redeemable on call.

Consolation. Comfort, contentment, ease, enjoyment, happiness, pleasure, satisfaction.

Consolato del mare. The name of a code of sea-laws, said to have been compiled by order of the kings of Aragon (or, according to other authorities, at Pisa or Barcelona) in the fourteenth century, which comprised the maritime ordinances of the Roman emperors, of France and Spain, and of the Italian commercial powers. This compilation exercised a considerable influence in the formation of European maritime law.

Consolidate. In a general sense, to unite or unify into one mass or body, as to consolidate several small school districts into a large district, or to consolidate various funds. In legislative usage, to consolidate two bills is to unite them into one. The term means something more than to rearrange or redivide.

To make solid or firm; to unite, compress, or pack together and form into a more compact mass, body, or system. To cause to become united and extinguished in a superior right or estate by both becoming vested in the same person. Swaim v. Smith, 174 Tenn. 688, 130 S.W.2d 116, 120.

See also Commingle; Consolidation; Joinder; Merger.

Consolidated appeal. If two or more persons are entitled to appeal from a judgment or order of a district court and their interests are such as to make joinder practicable, they may file a joint notice of appeal, or may join in appeal after filing separate timely notices of appeal, and they may thereafter proceed on appeal as a single appellant. Appeals may be consolidated by order of the court of appeals upon its own motion or upon motion of a party, or by stipulation of the parties to the several appeals. Fed.R.App.P. 3(b).

Consolidated balance sheets. See Consolidated statements.

Consolidated bonds. Issued to replace two or more existing issues; thus, consolidating debt into single issue.

Consolidated corporations. See Consolidation of corporations.

Consolidated laws. A compilation of all the laws of a State in force arranged according to subject matter. See Code; Codification; Compilation.

Consolidated mortgage. Uniformity of several outstanding mortgages.

Consolidated securities. An issue of securities sufficiently large to provide the funds to retire two or more outstanding issues of debt securities.

Consolidated statements. The financial reports for a group of affiliated corporations or enterprises, eliminating intercorporation debts and profits and showing minority stockholders' interests.

Consolidated tax returns. A procedure whereby certain affiliated corporations may file a single return, combine the tax transactions of each corporation, and arrive at a single income tax liability for the group. The election to file a consolidated return is usually binding on future years. I.R.C. §§ 1501–1505.

Consolidation. Act of consolidating, or the status of being consolidated. Unification of two or more actions. See Consolidation of actions.

In the civil law, the union of the usufruct with the estate out of which it issues, in the same person; which happens when the usufructuary acquires the estate, or vice versa. In either case the usufruct is extinct.

In ecclesiastical law, the union of two or more benefices in one.

In corporate law, the combination of two or more corporations into a newly created corporation. Thus, A Corporation and B Corporation combine to form C Corporation. A consolidation may qualify as a non-taxable reorganization if certain conditions are satisfied. See also Articles of consolidation; Consolidation of corporations; Merger.

Consolidation of actions. The act or process of uniting several actions into one trial and judgment, by order of the court, or by agreement, in case the parties, pending in the same court, and involving substantially the same subject-matter, issues and defenses; or the court may order that one of the actions be tried, and the others decided without trial according to the judgment in the one selected.

When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated; and it may make such orders concerning proceedings therein as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay. Fed.R. Civil P. 42(a); New York C.P.L.R. § 902.

See also Joinder (Joinder of claims).

Consolidation of cases. See Consolidation of actions.

Consolidation of corporations. Occurs when two or more corporations are extinguished, and by the same process a new one is created, taking over the assets and assuming the liabilities of those passing out of existence. A unifying of two or more corporations into a single new corporation having the combined capital, franchises, and powers of all its constituents. Merger distinguished. In a "merger", one corporation absorbs the other and remains in existence while the other is dissolved, and in a "consolidation" a new corporation is created and the consolidating corporations are extinguished. See also Merger.

Consonant statement. A prior declaration of a witness whose testimony has been attacked and whose credibility stands impeached, which the court will allow to be proved where the witness is the party to whom the declaration was made in order to support the credibility of the witness and which but for the existence of such impeachment would ordinarily be excluded as hearsay.

Consortio malorum me quoque malum facti /kan-sorsh(i)yowo mai kwowkyi mjob la fëysat/. The company of wicked men makes me also wicked.

Consortium /kan-sorsh(i)yam/. Conjugal fellowship of husband and wife, and the right of each to the company, society, co-operation, affection, and aid of the other in every conjugal relation. Roseberry v. Starkovich, 73 N.M. 211, 387 P.2d 321, 322, Nicholson v. Blachette, 239 Md. 168, 210 A.2d 732, 740. Damages for loss of consortium are commonly sought in wrongful death actions, or when spouse has been seriously injured through negligence of another, or by spouse against third person alleging that he or she has caused breaking-up of marriage. "Loss of consortium" means loss of society, affection, assistance and conjugal fellowship, and includes loss or impairment of sexual relations. Deems v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 247 Md. 95, 231 A.2d 514, 517. Cause of action for "consortium" occasioned by injury to marriage partner, is a separate cause of action belonging to the spouse of the injured married partner and though derivative in the sense of being occasioned by injury to spouse, is a direct injury to the spouse who has lost the consortium. Peeples v. Sargent, 77 Wis.2d 612, 253 N.W.2d 459, 471. See also Alienation of affections.

In the civil law, a union of fortunes; a lawful Roman marriage. The joining of several persons as parties to one action.

In old English law, the term signified company or society, and in the language of pleading, as in the phrase per quod consortium amisit, it has substantially the same meaning, viz., the companionship or society of a wife. 3 Bl.Comm. 140.

Consortship. In maritime law, an agreement or stipulation between the owners of different vessels that they shall keep in company, mutually aid, instead of interfering with each other, in wrecking and salvage, whether earned by one vessel or both.

Conspicuous place. Within the meaning of a statute relating to the posting of notices, a "conspicuous place" means one which is reasonably calculated to impart the information in question.

Conspicuous term or clause. A term or clause is conspicuous when it is so written that a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to have noticed it. A printed heading in capitals (as: NON-NEGOTIABLE BILL OF LADING) is conspicuous. Language in the body of a form is "conspicuous" if it is in larger or other contrasting type or color. But in a telegram any stated term is "conspicuous". A term or clause is conspicuous when it is so written that a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to have noticed it. Whether a term or clause is "conspicuous" or not is for decision by the court. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 1.301(6); U.C.C. § 1–201(10).

Conspiracy /kan-spar-yay/. A combination or confederacy between two or more persons formed for the purpose of committing, by their joint efforts, some unlawful or criminal act, or some act which is lawful in itself, but becomes unlawful when done by the concerted action of the conspirators, or for the purpose of using criminal or unlawful means to the commission of an act not in itself unlawful.

A person is guilty of conspiracy with another person or persons to commit a crime if with the purpose of promoting or facilitating its commission he: (a) agrees with such other person or persons that they or one or more of them will engage in conduct which constitutes such crime or an attempt or solicitation to commit such crime; or (b) agrees to aid such other person or persons in the planning or commission of such crime or of an attempt or solicitation to commit such crime. Model Penal Code, § 5.03.

Crime of conspiracy is distinct from the crime contemplated by the conspiracy (target crime). Com. v.

A conspiracy may be a continuing one; actors may drop out, and others drop in; the details of operation may change from time to time; the members need not know each other or the part played by others; a member need not know all the details of the plan or the operations; he must, however, know the purpose of the conspiracy and agree to become a party to a plan to effectuate that purpose. Craig v. U. S., C.C. A.Cal., 81 F.2d 816, 822.

See also Combination in restraint of trade; Confederacy; Wharton Rule.

Civil conspiracy. The essence of a “civil conspiracy” is a concert or combination to defraud or cause other injury to person or property, which results in damage to the person or property of plaintiff. See also Civil conspiracy.

Conspiracy in restraint of trade. Term which describes all forms of illegal agreements such as boycotts, price fixing, etc., which have as their object interference with free flow of commerce and trade. See Clayton Acts; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Conspire. To engage in conspiracy. Term carries with it the idea of agreement, concurrence and combination, and hence is inapplicable to a single person or thing, and one cannot agree or conspire with another who does not agree or conspire with him. See Conspiracy.

Constable. An officer of a municipal corporation (usually elected) whose duties are similar to those of the sheriff, though his powers are less and his jurisdiction smaller. He is to preserve the public peace, execute the process of magistrates’ courts, and of some other tribunals, serve writs, attend the sessions of the criminal courts, have the custody of juries, and discharge other functions sometimes assigned to him by the local law or by statute. Powers and duties of constables have generally been replaced by sheriffs.

In English law, public civil officer, whose proper and general duty is to keep the peace within his district, though he is frequently charged with additional duties. 1 Bl.Comm. 356. There were formerly “high,” “petty,” and “special” constables. In England, the functions of these special constables have been taken over by police forces.

In Medieval law, high functionary under the French and English kings, the dignity and importance of whose office was second only to that of the monarch. He was in general the leader of the royal armies, and had cognizance of all matters pertaining to war and arms, exercising both civil and military jurisdiction. He was also charged with the conservation of the peace of the nation. Thus there was a “Constable of France” and a “Lord High Constable of England.” Rich v. Industrial Commission, 80 Utah 511, 15 P.2d 641, 644.

Constituted authorities. Officers properly appointed under the constitution for the government of the people.

Constituted authorities /könståbalwik/. In English law, the territorial jurisdiction of a constable; as bailiwick is of a bailiff or sheriff.

Constabularius /konzståbylarjus/. An officer of horse; an officer having charge of foot or horse; a naval commander; an officer having charge of military affairs generally. In England his power was early diminished and restricted to those duties which related to the preservation of the king’s peace. The office is now abolished except as a matter of ceremony.

Constantly. In a constant manner; uniformly; continuously.

Constat /könstat/*æt/. It is clear or evident; it appears; it is certain; there is no doubt. Non constat, it does not appear.

In England, a certificate which the clerk of the pipe and auditors of the eschequer made, at the request of any person who intended to plead or move in that court, for the discharge of anything. The effect of it was the certifying what appears (constat) upon record, touching the matter in question. An exemplification under the great seal of the enrolment of letters patent.

A certificate by an officer that certain matters therein stated appear of record.

Constat d’huisser /konzstå dwyssey/. In French law, an affidavit made by a huisser, setting forth the appearance, form, quality, color, etc., of any article upon which a suit depends.

Constate /konzståyt/. To establish, constitute, or ordain.

“Constate instruments” of a corporation are its charter, organic law, or the grant of powers to it.

Constituency. The inhabitants of an electoral district.

Constituent. He who gives authority to another to act for him.

The term is used as a correlative to “attorney,” to denote one who constitutes another his agent or invests the other with authority to act for him.

It is also used in the language of politics as a correlative to “representative,” the constituents of a legislator being those whom he represents and whose interests he is to care for in public affairs; usually the electors of his district.

Constituent elements. The elements of a crime, tort or other type of action. Those matters which must be proved to sustain a cause of action because they constitute the action or crime.

Constituere /könstatywarj/. Lat. To appoint, constitute, establish, ordain, or undertake. Used principally in ancient powers of attorney, and now supplanted by the English word “constitute.”

Constituimus /könstatywomas/. A Latin term, signifying we constitute or appoint.

Constituted authorities. Officers properly appointed under the constitution for the government of the people.
Constitutio /kɔnˈstɑt(ə)yúwʃ(ə)yˈow/. In the civil law, an imperial ordinance, decree, or constitution, distinguished from Lex, Senatus-Consultum, and other kinds of law and having its effect from the sole will of the emperor. An establishment or settlement. Used of controversies settled by the parties without a trial. A sum paid according to agreement.

In old English law, an ordinance or statute. A provision of a statute.

Constitutio dotis /kɔnˈstɑt(ə)yúwʃ(ə)yˈow dɔˈwɔdz/. Establishment of dower.

Constitution. The organic and fundamental law of a nation or state, which may be written or unwritten, establishing the character and conception of its government, laying the basic principles to which its internal life is to be conformed, organizing the government, and regulating, distributing, and limiting the functions of its different departments, and prescribing the extent and manner of the exercise of sovereign powers. A charter of government deriving its whole authority from the governed. The written instrument agreed upon by the people of the Union (e.g. United States Constitution) or of a particular state, as the absolute rule of action and decision for all departments (i.e. branches) and officers of the government in respect to all the points covered by it, which must control until it shall be changed by the authority which established it (i.e. by amendment), and in opposition to which any act or ordinance of any such department or officer is null and void. The full text of the U.S. Constitution appears at the end of this dictionary.

In a more general sense, any fundamental or important law or edict; as the Novel Constitutions of Justinian; the Constitutions of Clarendon.

Constitutional. Consistent with the constitution; authorized by the constitution; not conflicting with any provision of the constitution or fundamental law of the state. Dependent upon a constitution, or secured or regulated by a constitution; as "constitutional monarchy," "constitutional rights."

Constitutional convention. A duly constituted assembly of delegates or representatives of the people of a state or nation for the purpose of framing, revising, or amending its constitution. Art. V of U.S. Const. provides that a Constitutional Convention may be called on application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the states.

Constitutional court. A court named or described and expressly protected by Constitution, or recognized by name or definite description in Constitution (e.g. Supreme Court, as provided for in Art. III, Sec. 1 of U.S.Const.) in contrast to legislatively created courts. Commonly referred to as "Article III" courts in reference to U.S.Const.

Constitutional freedom. Generic term to describe the basic freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution such as the First Amendment freedoms of religion, speech, press and assembly together with protection under due process clause of the 14th Amendment. See also Bill of rights, Constitutional liberty or freedom.

Constitutional homestead. A special interest in real estate which protects it from attachment, created by constitution and available to the head of the family. Ringer v. Byrne, 183 Okl. 46, 80 P.2d 212, 214.

Constitutional law. (1) That branch of the public law of a nation or state which treats of the organization, powers and frame of government, the distribution of political and governmental authorities and functions, the fundamental principles which are to regulate the relations of government and citizen, and which prescribes generally the plan and method according to which the public affairs of the nation or state are to be administered. (2) That department of the science of law which treats of constitutions, their establishment, construction, and interpretation, and of the validity of legal enactments as tested by the criterion of conformity to the fundamental law. (3) A constitutional law is one which is consonant to, and agrees with, the constitution; one which is not in violation of any provision of the constitution of the particular state.

Constitutional liberty or freedom. Such freedom as is enjoyed by the citizens of a country or state under the protection of its constitution. The aggregate of those personal, civil, and political rights of the individual which are guaranteed by the constitution and secured against invasion by the government or any of its agencies. See also Constitutional freedom.

Constitutional limitations. Those provisions of a constitution which restrict the legislature in the types of laws which it may enact.

Constitutional office. A public position or office which is created by a constitution as distinguished from a statutory office which is created by an enactment of the legislature.

Constitutional officer. A governmental official whose office was created by a constitution; as contrasted with an officer whose position has been created by the legislature. One whose tenure and term of office are fixed and defined by the constitution, as distinguished from the incumbents of offices created by the legislature.

Constitutional powers. See Power.

Constitutional protections. Those basic protections guaranteed by the Constitution such as due process, equal protection and the fundamental protections of the First Amendment, such as those touching speech, press and religion. See Bill of rights; Constitutional freedom.

Constitutional questions. Those legal issues which require an interpretation of the Constitution for their resolution as distinguished from those of a statutory nature.

Constitutional right. A right guaranteed to the citizens by the Constitution and so guaranteed as to prevent legislative interference therewith. See also Constitutional freedom; Constitutional liberty or freedom; Constitutional protections.
Constitutional tort. See Tort.

Constitutiones /kɔnˈstaːt(ə)yʊwʃɪˈɔwɲɪz/. Laws promulgated, i.e., enacted, by the Roman Emperor. They were of various kinds, namely, the following: (1) Edicta; (2) decreta; (3) rescripta, called also “epistolæ.” Sometimes they were general, and intended to form a precedent for other like cases; at other times they were special, particular, or individual (personales), and not intended to form a precedent. The emperor had this power of irresponsible enactment by virtue of a certain lex regia, whereby he was made the fountain of justice and of mercy.

Constitutiones tempore posteriores potiores sunt his que ipsas præecesserunt /kɔnˈstaːt(ə)yʊwʃɪˈɔwɲɪz tɛmpəri ˈpɔstɪrɪəriyz sɑnt hæɪz kweɪ ɪpsəs prɛsɛsərənt/. Later laws prevail over those which preceded them.

Constitutions of the Forest. See Charta (Charta de foresta).

Constitutor /kɔnˈstaːtərʊwˈdɔrə/. In the civil law, one who, by a simple agreement, becomes responsible for the payment of another’s debt.

Constitutum /kɔnˈstaːt(ə)yʊwˈdɔm/. In the civil law, an agreement to pay a subsisting debt which exists without any stipulation, whether of the promisor or another party. It differs from a stipulation in that it must be for an existing debt.

A day appointed for any purpose. A form of appeal.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicuique nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisque sedes et tabulas habet, suarumque rerum constitutionem feclissent /kɔŋˈstaːt(ə)yʊwˈdɔm ˈɛsi ˈiːm ˈdʌm ˈɒwˈnʌm ˈjuːwɔk(ˈjuːw)ˈɛkwɪwi ˈnʌstrəm ˈdeɪriə əɡˈziːstəməri, ˈjuːbɛi ˈkwɪskwiˈstɪliːz ət ˈteɪbələs ˈhæbəri, ˈsuərʌmkwɛkswɜːmˈriː ˈriːnor ˈkoʊnˈstaːt(ə)yʊwˈdɔm ˈfeɪsɪəs/-. It is settled that that is to be considered the home of each one of us where he may have his habitation and account-books, and where he may have made an establishment of his business.

Constraint. Act of constraining, i.e. state of being restrained or restricted.

Construct. To build; erect; put together; make ready for use. To adjust and join materials, or parts of, so as to form a permanent whole. To put together constituent parts of something in their proper place and order. “Construct” is distinguishable from “maintain,” which means to keep up, to keep from change, to preserve. See also Construction.

Constructio legis non facti injuriam /kɔnstrəˈkʃəliˈow liˈjaʃ̅ nɔn ˈfeɪsəd ənˈdʒʊriəm/. The construction of the law (a construction made by the law) works no injury. The law will make such a construction of an instrument as not to injure a party.

Construction. The process, or the art, of determining the sense, real meaning, or proper explanation of obscure or ambiguous terms or provisions in a statute, written instrument, or oral agreement, or the application of such subject to the case in question, by reasoning in the light derived from extraneous con-
As to constructive Bailment; Breaking; Contempt; Conversion; Delivery; Escape; Fraud; Larceny; Seisen; and Treason, see those titles.

Constructive adverse possession. Type of adverse possession which, under certain statutes, is characterized by payment of taxes under color of right, as distinguished from actual adverse possession in which the adverse claimant is in actual possession.

Constructive assent. An assent or consent imputed to a party from a construction or interpretation of his conduct; as distinguished from one which he actually expresses.

Constructive authority. Authority inferred or assumed to have been given because of the grant of some other antecedent authority.

Constructive breaking into a house. A breaking made out by construction of law. As where a burglar gains an entry into a house by threats, fraud, or conspiracy.

Constructive condition. Conditions in contracts which are neither expressed nor implied by the words of the contract but are imposed by law to meet the ends of justice. Restatement of Contracts, § 252. The cooperation of the parties to a contract is a constructive condition. In negotiable instruments, a promise or order otherwise unconditional is not made conditional by the fact that the instrument is subject to a constructive condition. U.C.C. § 3-105(1).

Constructive contract. A species of contracts which arise, not from the intent of the parties, but from the operation of law to avoid an injustice. These are sometimes referred to as quasi contracts or contracts implied in law as contrasted with contracts implied in fact which are real contracts expressing the intent of the parties by conduct rather than by words. Power-Matics Inc. v. Ligotti, 79 N.J.Super. 294, 191 A.2d 483, 489. An obligation created by law for reasons of justice without regard to expressions of assent by either words or acts. Power-Matics, Inc. v. Ligotti, 79 N.J.Super. 294, 191 A.2d 483, 489. See also Contract (Quasi contract).

Constructive desertion. Occurs when one spouse, through misconduct, forces the other to abandon the marital abode. Grollman v. Grollman, D.C.App., 220 A.2d 330, 332. If a spouse is forced to leave the home because of the other’s conduct, the former has been constructively deserted.

Constructive dividend. If a stockholder has an unqualified right to a dividend, such a dividend is called constructive for tax purposes though he does not actually receive it because it is subject to his demand and the corporation has set it aside for this purpose. Clark v. C. I. R., C.A.9, 266 F.2d 698.

Constructive eviction. Such arises when landlord, while not actually depriving tenant of possession, has done or suffered some act by which premises are rendered untenanted. Net Realty Holding Trust v. Nelson, 33 Conn.Sup. 22, 358 A.2d 365, 367. Any disturbance of the tenant’s possession by the landlord whereby the premises are rendered unfit or unsuitable for occupancy in whole or in substantial part for the purposes for which they were leased amounts to a constructive eviction, if the tenant so elects and surrenders his possession. For example, if a tenant vacates the rental property because of the absence of heat or water, he has been constructively evicted. As the term is used with reference to breach of the covenants of warranty and of quiet enjoyment, it means the inability of the purchaser to obtain possession by reason of a paramount outstanding title.

Constructive filing. The filing of a document with a person who is the only one available to receive it, though he is not the designated person to receive it, is a constructive filing. People v. Spencer, 193 Cal. App.2d 13, 13 Cal.Rptr. 881, 883.

Constructive force. As regards robbery, a taking by force is the gist of the crime, but the force may be either actual or constructive. Constructive force is anything which produces fear sufficient to suspend the power of resistance and prevent the free exercise of the will. Actual force is applied to the body; constructive is by threatening words or gestures and operates on the mind.

Constructive fraud. Exists where conduct, though not actually fraudulent, has all actual consequences and all legal effects of actual fraud. Agair Inc. v. Shaffer, 232 Cal.App.2d 513, 42 Cal.Rptr. 883, 886. Breach of legal or equitable duty which, irrespective of moral guilt, is declared by law to be fraudulent because of its tendency to deceive others or violate confidence. Daves v. Lawyers Sur. Corp., Tex.Civ. App., 459 S.W.2d 655, 657. See also Fraud.

Constructive intent. Exists where one should have reasonably expected or anticipated a particular result; e.g. when one does an act which is wilful and wanton resulting in injury to another, it can be said that he constructively intended the harm. Ballev v. Asheville & E. T. R. Co., 186 N.C. 704, 120 S.E. 334.

Constructive knowledge. If one by exercise of reasonable care would have known a fact, he is deemed to have had constructive knowledge of such fact; e.g. matters of public record. Attoe v. State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co., 36 Wis.2d 539, 153 N.W.2d 575, 579. See also Constructive notice.

Constructive loss. One resulting from such injuries to the property, without its destruction, as render it valueless to the assured or prevent its restoration to the original condition except at a cost exceeding its value. See also Constructive total loss.

Constructive malice. That type of malice which the law infers from the doing of an evil act; sometimes known as implied malice.

Constructive notice. Such notice as is implied or imputed by law, as in the case of notice of documents which have been recorded in the appropriate registry of deeds or probate. Notice with which a person is charged by reason of the notorious nature of the thing to be noticed, as contrasted with actual notice of such thing.

Constructive ownership. See Attribution.

Constructive payment. If one charges himself with a payment and the payee has a right to demand it, it can be considered a constructive as contrasted with an actual payment; e.g. a check which is mailed in payment though not yet cashed is a constructive payment.

Constructive possession. A person has constructive possession of property if he has power to control and intent to control such item. Com. v. Stephens, 231 Pa. Super. 481, 331 A.2d 719, 723. Being in a position to exercise dominion or control over a thing. U. S. v. DiNovo, C.A.Ind., 523 F.2d 197, 201.

Constructive receipt of income. As applied to tax laws, is taxable income which is unqualifiedly subject to the demand of taxpayer on cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting, whether or not such income has actually been received in cash. Gounares Bros. & Co. v. U. S., D.C.A., 185 F.Supp. 794, 798. Under this doctrine, income which is subject to unadulterated command of taxpayer and which he is free to enjoy at his option is taxed to him, despite fact that he has exercised his own choice to turn his back on that income and the doctrine is one by which form of transaction is ignored in order to get to its substance. Pittsburgh Des Moines Steel Co. v. U. S., D.C.Pa., 360 F.Supp. 597, 599. An example would be accrued interest on a savings account. Under the constructive receipt of income concept, such interest will be taxed to a depositor in the year it is available rather than the year actually withdrawn. The fact that the depositor uses the cash basis of accounting for tax purposes makes no difference.

Constructive service of process. Form of service of process other than actual service; e.g. publication in newspaper is constructive service.

Constructive taking. A phrase used in the law to characterize an act not amounting to an actual appropriation of chattels, but which shows an intention to convert them to his use; as if a person intrusted with the possession of goods deals with them contrary to the owners of the order. With respect to constructive condemnation, see Condemnation (Inverse condemnation).

Constructive total loss. In insurance, exists whenever insured item of property has lost its total usefulness and insured is deprived of its benefit totally. See also Constructive loss.

Constructive trust. Trust created by operation of law against one who by actual or constructive fraud, by duress or by abuse of confidence, or by commission of wrong, or by any form of unconscionable conduct, or other questionable means, has obtained or holds legal right to property which he should not, in equity and good conscience, hold and enjoy. Davis v. Howard, 19 Or.App. 310, 527 P.2d 422, 424.

A constructive trust is a relationship with respect to property subjecting the person by whom the title to the property is held to an equitable duty to convey it to another on the ground that his acquisition or retention of the property is wrongful and that he would be unjustly enriched if he were permitted to retain the property. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 1(e).

Constructive trust ex delicto. A constructive trust which is imposed on property which a fiduciary has claimed or received in violation of his duties.

Constructive willfulness. Intentional disregard of a known duty necessary to the safety of a person, and an entire absence of care for the life, the person, or the property of others, such as exhibits a conscious indifference to consequences.

Construe. To put together; to arrange or marshal the words of an instrument. To ascertain the meaning of language by a process of arrangement and inference. See Construction.

Constuprate /könst(y)apréyt/. To ravish, debauch, violate, rape.

Consuetudinarius /könswiwtýwðnáriyi/. In ecclesiastical law, a ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices or the customs of abbey munsteries.

Consuetudinary law /könswatyuwðon(ö)ry ló/. Customary law. Law derived by oral tradition from a remote antiquity.

Consuetudines /könswatyuwðonji/. In old English law, customs. Thus, consuetudines et assisa forestae, the customs and assise of the forest.

Consuetudines feudorum /könswatyuwðonji fyuwðórum/. (Lat. feudal customs.) A compilation of the law of feuds or fiefs in Lombardy, made A.D. 1170. It is of great authority.

Consuetudinibus et servicis /könswatyuwðinabas et sarvishiyas/. In old English law, a writ of right close, which lay against a tenant who defaced his lord of the rent or service due to him.

Consuetudo /könswatyuwðow/. Lat. A custom; an established usage or practice; duties; taxes.

Consuetudo anglicana /könswatyuwðow ánglikéyn/. The custom of England; the ancient common law, as distinguished from lex, the Roman or civil law.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta potius usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet /könswatyuwðow kontra rásiéýowmn intráðikta pówshlyiyés yúwswithyiyów kwéam könswatyuwðow apáléray débat/. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called a "usurpation" than a "custom."

Consuetudo curia /könswatyuwðow kyúriyiy/. The custom or practice of a court.

Consuetudo debet esse certa; nam incerta pro nulla habetur /könswatyuwðow débad éisy sárda, nám insárda prów nálas heybénar/ A custom should be certain; for an uncertain custom is considered null.

Consuetudo est altera lex /könswatyuwðow ést æltor léks/. Custom is another law.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum /könswatyuwðow ést óptamás intárprízy líygyam/. Custom is the best expounder of the laws.

Consuetudo et communis asseueto vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis /könswatyuwðow ét kamyúuyýnas áswatyuwðow wínsat líyym nón skriptam, sáy sít spésíhiýéylas; ed intéprátyédár líyym skriptam, sáy sít jénáréylas/. Custom and common usage overcomes the unwritten law, if it be special; and interprets the written law, if the law be general.
CONSUETUDO

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabilis usitata privat communem legem /kônswatyúwðow êt sárđa kósa râshnâybalay yüwztâyêd praûyv kamyûwnam liyjâm/. A custom, grounded on a certain and reasonable cause, supersedes the common law.

Consuetudo licet sit magne auctoritate, nuncua tam, prejudicat manifeste veritati /kônswatyúwðow, lîsat sit mágniy oktôhratêydas, nêgkwan tâmen prajûwðukat mânsêsîyê vêhratêyday/. A custom, though it be of great authority, should never prejudice manifest truth.

Consuetudo loci observânda est /kônswatyúwðow löwsay özärzwênda êst/. The custom of a place is to be observed.

Consuetudo manerîli et loci observânda est /kônswatyúwðow manarîyay êt löwsay özärzwênda êst/. A custom of a manor and place is to be observed.

Consuetudo mercatorum /kônswatyúwðow mar-katôrâm/. Lat. The custom of merchants, the same with lex mercatoria.

Consuetudo neque injurîa oriri neque tollit potest /kônswatyúwðow nêkwiy anjûrîya ârajray nêkwiy tôlîy pôwðast/. Custom can neither arise from nor be taken away by injury.

Consuetudo non trahitur in consequentiam /kônswatyúwðow nôn trêy(h)âdar an kônskwênh(î)yam/. Custom is not drawn into consequence.

Consuetudo prescripta et legitima vincit legem /kônswatyúwðow praskrîpta et lajdama vînsât liyjâm/. A prescriptive and lawful custom overcomes the law.

Consuetudo regni anglie est lex anglie /kônswatyûwðow rêgnay ângliyîy êst liêks ângliyîy/. The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England. 2 Bl.Comm. 422.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest amplius induci /kônswatyûwðow sêmâl rëprowbwyda nôn pôwdast âmûlyas înd(y)ûwsay/. A custom once disallowed cannot be again brought forward [or relied on].

Consuetudo tollit communem legem /kônswatyúwðow tôlîst kamyûwnam liyjâm/. Custom takes away the common law.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem /kônswatyûwðow vînsât kamyûwnam liyjâm/. Custom overrules common law.

Consuetudo volentes duci, lex noientes trahit /kônswatyûwðow valêntîy d(y)ûwsst, liêks now-lêntîy trêy(h)at/. Custom leads the willing, law compels [drags] the unwilling.

Consul /kônsal/. An officer of a commercial character, appointed by the different nations to watch over the mercantile and tourist interests of the appointing nation and of its subjects in foreign countries. There are usually a number of consuls in every maritime country, and they are usually subject to a chief consul, who is called a “consul general.” A public official residing in a foreign country responsible for developing and protecting the economic interests of his government and looking after the welfare of his government’s citizens who may be traveling or residing within his jurisdiction. United States consuls form a part of the Foreign Service and are of various grades: consul general, consul, vice consul, and consular agent.

In old English law, a title of an earl.

In Roman law, during the republic, the name “consul” was given to the chief executive magistrate, two of whom were chosen annually. The office was continued under the empire, but its powers and prerogatives were greatly reduced. The name is supposed to have been derived from consulâ, to consult, because these officers consulted with the senate on administrative measures.

Consular courts /kôns(y)alâr kórts/. Courts held by the consuls of one country, within the territory of another, under authority given by treaty, for the settlement of civil cases. In some instances they had also a criminal jurisdiction, but in this respect they were subject to review by the courts of the home government. See 22 U.S.C.A. § 141. The last of the United States consular courts (Morocco) was abolished in 1956.

Consular invoice. Invoice used in foreign trade signed by consul of the country for which the shipment is destined. Such facilitates entry through destination country in that quantity, value, etc. of shipment has been pre-verified.

Consular marriage. A marriage solemnized in a foreign country by a consul or diplomatic agent of the U.S. and held to be valid in some jurisdictions.

Consulate. The residence or headquarters of a foreign consul.

Consul general. Consular officer of highest grade.

Consulta ecclesia /kansâlta skîlyzîyâ/. In ecclesiastical law, a church full or provided for.

Consultatory response /kansâltary rôspôns/kônsal’terîy/.*. The opinion of a court of law on a special case.

Consultation. Act of consulting or conferring; e.g. patient with doctor; client with lawyer. Deliberation of persons on some subject. A conference between the counsel engaged in a case, to discuss its questions or arrange the method of conducting it.

An old writ whereby a cause which had been wrongfully removed by prohibition out of an ecclesiastical court to a temporal court was returned to the ecclesiastical court.

Consulto /kansâlto/. Lat. In the civil law, designedly; intentionally.

Consumer /kans(y)ûwmar/. One who consumes. Individuals who purchase, use, maintain, and dispose of products and services. A member of that broad class of people who are affected by pricing policies, financing practices, quality of goods and services, credit reporting, debt collection, and other trade practices for which state and federal consumer protection laws are enacted. Consumers are to be distinguished from manufacturers (who produce goods), and wholesalers or retailers (who sell goods). See also Purchaser.

A buyer (other than for purposes of resale) of any consumer product, any person to whom such product is transferred during the duration of an implied or written warranty (or service contract) applicable to the product, and any other person who is entitled by the terms of such warranty (or service contract) or under applicable State law to enforce against the warrantor (or service contractor) the obligations of the warranty (or service contract). 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301.

Consumer advocate. One who is given to presenting the position of the consumer or to representing him in judicial, administrative, or legislative proceedings. See also Ombudsman.

Consumer credit. Short term loans to individuals for purchase of consumer goods and services.

Consumer Credit Code. A uniform law, adopted by several states, with intent and purpose similar to that of the federal Consumer Credit Protection Act (q.v.).

Consumer Credit Protection Act. Federal act (commonly referred to as the Truth-in-Lending Act) enacted to safeguard the consumer in connection with the utilization of credit by requiring full disclosure of the terms and conditions of finance charges in credit transactions or in offers to extend credit, by restricting the garnishment of wages, and by regulating the use of credit cards. In addition to federal and state Truth-in-Lending Acts, several states also require by statute that consumer-loan agreements be written in plain, simplified language. See also Annual percentage rate; Equal Credit Opportunity Act; Fair Credit Billing Act; Fair Credit Reporting Acts; Truth-in-Lending Act; Uniform Consumer Credit Code.

Consumer credit sale. Any sale with respect to which consumer credit is extended or arranged by the seller. The term includes any contract in the form of a bailment or lease if the bailee or lessee contracts to pay as compensation for use a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the aggregate value of the property and services involved and it is agreed that the bailee or lessee will become, or for no other or for a nominal consideration has the option to become, the owner of the property upon full compliance with his obligations under the contract.

Consumer credit transaction. Credit offered or extended to a natural person, in which the money, property or service which is the subject of the transaction is primarily for personal, family, household or agricultural purposes and for which either a finance charge is or may be imposed or which, pursuant to an agreement, is or may be payable in more than four installments. "Consumer loan" is one type of "consumer credit".

Consumer debt. Debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose. Bankruptcy Act (1978), § 101(7).

Consumer goods. Goods which are used or bought for use primarily for personal, family or household purposes. U.C.C. § 9-109(1). Such goods are not intended for resale or further use in the production of other products. Contrasted with capital goods. See also Consumer product.

Consumer lease. Lease of consumer goods; also may be applied to lease of dwelling as contrasted with commercial lease. Disclosure of terms in certain types of consumer leases is governed by Federal Consumer Leasing Act.

Consumer Price Index. A price index computed and issued monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U.S. Department of Labor. The index attempts to track the price level of a group of goods and services purchased by the average consumer. Widely used to measure changes in cost of maintaining given standard of living.

Consumer product. Any tangible personal property which is distributed in commerce and which is normally used for personal, family, or household purposes (including any such property intended to be attached to or installed in any real property without regard to whether it is so attached or installed). 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301. See also Consumer goods.

Consumer Product Safety Commission. The Consumer Product Safety Commission is an independent federal regulatory agency established by act of October 27, 1972 (86 Stat. 1207) to administer and implement the Consumer Product Safety Act. The Commission has primary responsibility for establishing mandatory product safety standards, where appropriate, to reduce the unreasonable risk of injury to consumers from consumer products. In addition it has authority to ban hazardous consumer products. The Consumer Product Safety Act also authorizes the Commission to conduct extensive research on consumer product standards, engage in broad consumer and industry information and education programs, and establish a comprehensive Injury Information Clearinghouse.

Consumer report. Document issued by private or governmental body relative to quality of certain products, their dangers and their attributes. Document issued as to certain companies and their practices.

Consumer's cooperative. Group which purchases consumer goods for resale to its members, thus reducing costs by eliminating the middleman's profit.

Consummate /kənˈsəmət/adj. Completed; as distinguished from initiate, or that which is merely begun. The husband of a woman seised of an estate of inheritance becomes, by the birth of a child, tenant by the curtesy initiate, and may do many acts to charge the lands, but his estate is not consummate till the death of the wife. 2 Bl.Comm. 126, 128.

Consummate /kənˈsəmət/ v. To finish by completing what was intended; bring or carry to utmost point or degree; carry or bring to completion; finish; perfect; fulfill; achieve. See also Consummation.

Consummate lien. A term which may be used to describe the lien of a judgment when a motion for a new trial has been denied (the lien having theretofore been merely inchoate).

Consummation /kənˈsəmətʃən/. The completion of a thing; the completion of a marriage by cohabitation (i.e. sexual intercourse) between spouses.

Consumption. Act or process of consuming; waste; decay; destruction. Using up of anything, as food, heat, or time.

Contagious disease. One capable of being transmitted by immediate or immediate contact.
Containerization. An efficient and economical method of handling and transporting cargo wherein a means is provided for transferring cargo from one form of transportation, such as ship, to another form of transportation, such as rail or truck without the necessity of loading and unloading the individual items each time the mode of transport changes. Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. County of Alameda, 12 Cal.3d 772, 117 Cal.Rptr. 448, 451, 528 P.2d 56.

Contamination. Condition of impurity resulting from mixture or contact with foreign substance. American Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa. v. Myrick, C.A.Tex., 304 F.2d 178, 183. See also Adulteration.

Contango /kɔntæŋɡoʊ/. A double bargain, consisting of a sale for cash of stock previously bought which the broker does not wish to carry, and a repurchase for the re-sale settlement several weeks ahead of the same stock at the same price as at the sale plus interest accrued up to the date of that settlement. The rate of interest is called a “contango” and contango days are the days during the settlement when these arrangements are in effect.

Charge by broker for carrying customer’s account to next settlement day.

Contek /kɑntɛk/. L. Fr. A contest, dispute, disturbance, opposition. Consecutious; brawlers; disturbers of the peace.

Contemnor /kɑntɛmˈnɔr/. One who has committed contempt of court.

Contemplate. To view or consider with continued attention; to regard thoughtfully; to have in view as contingent or probable as an end or intention. To ponder, to study, to plan, to meditate, to reflect. See Consider.

Contemplation. The act of the mind in considering with attention. Continued attention of the mind to a particular subject. Consideration of an act or series of acts with the intention of doing or adopting them. The consideration of an event or state of facts with the expectation that it will transpire. See Consideration.

Contemplation of bankruptcy. Contemplation of the breaking up of one's business or an inability to continue it. Knowledge of, and action with reference to, a condition of bankruptcy or ascertained insolvency, coupled with an intention to commit what the law declares to be an “act of bankruptcy,” or to make provision against the consequences of insolvency, or to defeat the general distribution of assets which would take place under a proceeding in bankruptcy. See Act of Bankruptcy.

Contemplation of death. The apprehension or expectation of approaching dissolution; not that general expectation which every mortal entertains, but the apprehension which arises from some presently existing sickness or physical condition or from some impending danger. As applied to transfers of property, the phrase “in contemplation of death” means that thought of death is the impelling cause of transfer and that motive which induces transfer is of sort which leads to testamentary disposition and is practically equivalent to “causa mortis.” In re Cornell's Estate, 66 A.D. 162, 73 N.Y.S. 32; Nicholas v. Martin, 128 N.J.Eq. 344, 15 A.2d 235, 243; Pate v. C. I. R. C.C.A.8, 149 F.2d 669, 670. It has been further held however, that in determining whether transfer by decedent within three years prior to date of death was made in contemplation of death, phrase “contemplation of death” is not restricted in meaning to apprehension that death is imminent; inquiry is whether the “life” as opposed to “death” motives were the dominant controlling or compelling reasons for the transfer. Bel v. U. S., D.C.La., 310 F.Supp. 1189, 1194. For estate tax purposes, a gift by a decedent within three years ending with the date of his death is deemed made in contemplation of death. I.R.C. § 2035(b). Prior to the 1976 Tax Reform Act, such transfers were merely “presumed” to be made in contemplation of death.

Contemplation of insolvency. Knowledge of, and action with reference to, an existing or contemplated state of insolvency, with a design to make provision against its results or to defeat the operation of the insolvency laws. See Act of bankruptcy; Contemplation of bankruptcy.

Contemporanea expositio /kɑntɛmpɔrəˈnɛə rə ɛksˈpɔzɪʃ(ə)ˈniə/. Lat. Contemporaneous exposition, or construction; a construction drawn from the time when, and the circumstances under which, the subject-matter to be construed, as a statute or custom, originated.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege /kɑntɛmpɔrəˈnɛə rə ɛksˈpɔzɪʃ(ə)ˈniə wɛs ɔptəmə ɛt fɔrtɪsɪmə ɪn lɛdʒ/. Contemporaneous exposition is the best and strongest in the law. A statute is best explained by following the construction put upon it by judges who lived at the time it was made, or soon after.

Contempt. A willful disregard or disobedience of a public authority. See also Civil contempt; Common-law contempt; Contempt of Congress; Contempt of court.

Contempt of Congress. Deliberate interference with duties and powers of Congress. Both houses of Congress may cite an individual for such contempt.

Contempt of court. Any act which is calculated to embarrass, hinder, or obstruct court in administration of justice, or which is calculated to lessen its authority or its dignity. Committed by a person who does any act in willful contravention of its authority or dignity, or tending to impede or frustrate the administration of justice, or by one who, being under the court's authority as a party to a proceeding therein, willfully disobeys its lawful orders or fails to comply with an undertaking which he has given.

Classification

Contempts are of two kinds, direct and constructive.

Direct contempts are those committed in the immediate view and presence of the court (such as insulting language or acts of violence) or near the presence of the court as to obstruct or interrupt the due and orderly course of proceedings. These are punishable summarily. They are also called "criminal" contempts, but that term is better used in contrast with "civil" contempts. See infra.

Constructive (or indirect) contempts are those which arise from matters not occurring in or near the presence of the court, but which tend to obstruct or defeat the administration of justice, and the term is chiefly used with reference to the failure or refusal of a party to obey a lawful order, injunction, or decree of the court laying upon him a duty of action or forbearance. Constructive contempts were formerly called "consequential," and this term is still in occasional use.

Contempts are also classified as civil or criminal. The former are those quasi contempts which consist in the failure to do something which the party is ordered by the court to do for the benefit or advantage of another party to the proceeding before the court, while criminal contempts are acts done in disrespect of the court or its process or which obstruct the administration of justice or tend to bring the court into disrespect. A civil contempt is not an offense against the dignity of the court, but against the party in whose behalf the mandate of the court was issued, and a fine is imposed for his indemnity. But criminal contempts are offenses or injuries offered to the court, and a fine or imprisonment is imposed upon the contemnor for the purpose of punishment. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 42.

A court of the United States has power to punish by fine or imprisonment, at its discretion, such contempt of its authority, and none other, as: (1) misbehavior of any person in its presence or so near thereof as to obstruct the administration of justice; (2) misbehavior of any of its officers in their official transactions; (3) disobedience or resistance to its lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command. 18 U.S.C.A. § 401.

Contempt for failure to make discovery is governed by Fed.R.Civ.P. 37(b).

Contempt power. Every court has inherent power to punish one for contempt of its judgments or decrees and for conduct within or proximate to the court which is contemptuous. See also Contempt of Congress; Contempt of court.

Contempt proceeding. The judicial hearing or trial conducted to determine whether one has been in contempt of court and to make an appropriate disposition. Such proceedings are sui generis and not necessarily connected to or identified with the proceeding out of which the contempt arose.

Contemnentum /kontəmɛntəm/. See Walnaugment; Contention.

Contentious /kəntɛnʃəs/. Contested; adversary; litigated between adverse or contending parties. A judicial proceeding not merely ex parte in its character, but comprising attack and defense as between opposing parties, is so called. Character of being quarrelsome or belligerent.

Contentious jurisdiction. That part of jurisdiction of court that is concerned with contested matters, as opposed to voluntary, undisputed matters. In English ecclesiastical law, that branch of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts which is exercised upon adversary or contentious (opposed, litigated) proceedings.

Contentious possession. In stating the rule that the possession of land necessary to give rise to a title by prescription must be a "contentious" one, it is meant that it must be based on opposition to the title of the rival claimant (not in recognition thereof or subordination thereto) and that the opposition must be based on good grounds, or such as might be made the subject of litigation.

Contentment, contenement. A man's countenance or credit, which he has together with, and by reason of, his freehold; or that which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeably to their several qualities or states of life.

Comfort; consolation; ease; enjoyment; happiness; pleasure; satisfaction.

Contents and not contents. In English parliamentary law, the "contents" are those who, in the house of lords, express assent to a bill; the "not" or "non-contents" dissent.

Contents unknown. Words sometimes annexed to a bill of lading of goods in cases or other packaging. Their meaning is that the carrier only means to acknowledge that the shipment, as evidenced from the external condition of such, is in good order.

Content validation. Content validation of a test requires that an analysis of a job involved be undertaken to determine what characteristics are essential for adequate performance of that job and the job analysis is then followed by formulation of a test which accurately reflects presence or absence of these necessary qualities. Com. of Pa. v. Glickman, D.C.Pa., 370 F.Supp. 724, 737.

Conterminous /kəntərˈmænəs/. Adjacent; adjoining; having a common boundary; coterminous.

Contest, v. To make defense to an adverse claim in a court of law. To oppose, resist, or dispute the case made by a plaintiff or prosecutor. To strive to win or hold. To controvert, litigate, call in question, challenge. To defend, as a suit or other proceeding. See Answer; Defense.

Contestable clause. Provision in an insurance policy setting forth the conditions under which, or the period of time during which, the insurer may contest or void the policy.

Contestatio litis /kontɛstəˈtʃɔɪə lɪtɪs/. In Roman law, contestation of suit; the framing an issue; jointer in issue. The formal act of both the parties with which the proceedings in jure were closed when they led to a judicial investigation, and by which the neighbors whom the parties brought with them were called to testify.

In old English law, coming to an issue; the issue so produced.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictorios /kontɛstəˈtʃɔɪə lɪtɪs ɪˈɡɛt tɛrɪminəs kəntrəˈdɪktrɪərɪəˈwaʊs/. An issue requires terms of contradiction. To constitute an issue, there must be an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other.
Contestation of suit. In an ecclesiastical cause, that stage of the suit which is reached when the defendant has answered the libel by giving in an allegation. See also Answer; Contest; Defense.

Contested election. An election may be said to be contested whenever an objection is formally urged against it which, if found to be true in fact, would invalidate it. This is true both as to objections founded upon some constitutional provision and to such as are based on statutes.

Contest of will. See Will contest.

Context. The context of a particular sentence or clause in a statute, contract, will, etc., comprises those parts of the text which immediately precede and follow it. The context may sometimes be scrutinized, to aid in the interpretation of an obscure passage. See Construction.

Contiguous /kantígyuwəs/. In close proximity; neighboring; adjoining; near in succession; in actual close contact; touching at a point or along a boundary; bounded or traversed by. The term is not synonymous with “vicinal.” Ehle v. Tenney Trading Co., 56 Ariz. 241, 107 P.2d 210, 212.

Continencla /köntīnêsiya/. In Spanish law, contineney or unity of the proceedings in a cause.

Continent /köntənənt/. In the Roman law, continuing; holding together. Adjoining buildings were said to be continentia.

Continental. Pertaining or relating to a continent; characteristic of a continent; as broad in scope or purpose as a continent.

Continental Congress. The first national legislative assembly in the United States, which met in 1774, in pursuance of a recommendation made by Massachusetts and adopted by the other colonies. In this Congress all the colonies were represented except Georgia. The delegates were in some cases chosen by the legislative assemblies in the states; in others by the people directly. The powers of the Congress were undefined, but it proceeded to take measures and pass resolutions which concerned the general welfare and had regard to the inauguration and prosecution of the war for independence.

Continental currency. Paper money issued under the authority of the continental congress.

Continentia /köntənəntsiə/. In old English practice, continuance or connection. Applied to the proceedings in a cause.

Contingency /köntənjən(t)sīə/. Quality of being contingent or casual; the possibility of coming to pass; an event which may occur; a possibility; a casualty. A fortuitous event, which comes without design, foresight, or expectation. See also Contingent.

Contingency contract. A contract, part of performance of which at least is dependent on the happening of a contingency. Sometimes used to refer to fee arrangement with attorney who agrees to accept his fee on the contingency of a successful outcome. See Fee.

Contingency reserve. In accounting, a reserve set up to cover possible liability; e.g. possible judgment against company.

A fund created in anticipation of incidental or unforeseen expenditures.

Contingency with double aspect. A remainder is said to be "in a contingency with double aspect," when there is another remainder limited on the same estate, not in derogation of the first, but as a substitute for it in case it should fail.

Contingent /köntənjənt/. Possible, but not assured; doubtful or uncertain; conditioned upon the occurrence of some future event which is itself uncertain, or questionable. Synonymous with provisional. This term, when applied to a use, remainder, devise, bequest, or other legal right or interest, implies that no present interest exists, and that whether such interest or right ever will exist depends upon a future uncertain event.

As to contingent Damages; Fee; Legacy; Limitation; Remainder; Trust; and Use, see those titles.

Contingent beneficiary. Person who may or will benefit if primary beneficiary dies or otherwise loses rights as beneficiary; e.g. person who will receive life insurance if primary beneficiary dies before insured.

Contingent claim. One which has not accrued and which is dependent on some future event that may never happen.

Contingent debt. One which is not presently fixed, but may become so in the future with the occurrence of some uncertain event. A debt in bankruptcy which may be proved and allowed and which arises out of contract. It does not encompass a tort claim on which no action or suit has been brought prior to adjudication. Resolute Ins. Co. v. Underwood, La. App., 230 So.2d 433, 435. Term may refer to debt incurred by state to which state pledges its credit and guarantees payment if revenues from funded project prove inadequate. Rochlin v. State, 112 Ariz. 171, 540 P.2d 643. See also Contingent claim; Contingent liability.

Contingent estate, interest or right. An estate, interest or right which depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen; as an estate limited to a person not in esse, or not yet born.

Contingent fee. See Fee.

Contingent fund. One set up by a municipality to pay expense items which will necessarily arise during the year but cannot appropriately be classified under any of the specific purposes for which other taxes are levied. First Nat. Bank of Norman v. City of Norman, 182 Okl. 7, 75 P.2d 1109, 1110. See also Contingency reserve.

Contingent interest in personal property. A future interest not transmissible to the representatives of the party entitled thereto, in case he dies before it vests in possession. Thus, if a testator leaves the income of a fund to his wife for life, and the capital of the fund to be distributed among such of his children as shall be living at her death, the interest of each child during the widow’s life-time is contingent, and in case of his death is not transmissible to his representatives.

Contingent liability. One which is not now fixed and absolute, but which will become so in case of the occurrence of some future and uncertain event. Warren Co. v. C. I. R., C.C.A.Ga., 135 F.2d 679, 684, 685. A potential liability; e.g. pending lawsuit. See also Contingent claim; Contingent debt.

Contingent remainder. See Remainder.

Continual claim. In old English law, a formal claim made by a party entitled to enter upon any lands or tenements, but deterred from such entry by menaces, or bodily fear, for the purpose of preserving or keeping alive his right. It was called "continual", because it was required to be repeated once in the space of every year and day. It had to be made as near to the land as the party could approach with safety, and, when made in due form, had the same effect with, and in all respects amounted to, a legal entry. 3 Bl.Comm. 175.

Continuance. The adjournment or postponement of a session, hearing, trial, or other proceeding to a subsequent day or time. Also the entry of a continuance made upon the record of the court, for the purpose of formally evidencing the postponement, or of connecting the parts of the record so as to make one continuous whole.

Continuance nisi /kantinyuwani(t)s náysay/. A postponement on a condition or for a specific period of time.

Continuando /kantinyuándów/. In old pleading, a form of allegation in which the trespass, criminal offense, or other wrongful act complained of is charged to have been committed on a specified day and to have "continued" to the present time, or is averred to have been committed at divers days and times within a given period or on a specified day and on divers other days and times between that day and another. This is called "laying the time with a continuando."

Continuing. Enduring; not terminated by a single act or fact; subsisting for a definite period or intended to cover or apply to successive similar obligations or occurrences. As to continuing Breach; Consideration; Conspiracy; Covenant; Damages; Guaranty; and Nuisance, see those titles. See also Perpetuity.

Continuing contract. A contract calling for periodic performances over a space of time.

Continuing jurisdiction. A doctrine invoked commonly in child custody or support cases by which a court which has once acquired jurisdiction continues to possess it for purposes of amending and modifying its orders therein. Curtis v. Gibbs, Tex., 511 S.W.2d 263.

Continuing offense. Type of crime which is committed over a span of time as, for example, a conspiracy. As to period of statute of limitation, the last act of the offense controls for commencement of the period. A "continuing offense," such that only the last act thereof within the period of the statute of limitations need be alleged in the indictment or information, is one which may consist of separate acts or a course of conduct but which arises from that singleness of thought, purpose or action which may be deemed a single impulse. U. S. v. Benton & Co., Inc., D.C.Fla., 345 F.Supp. 1101, 1103. See also Crime; Offense.

Continuous. Uninterrupted; unbroken; not intermittent or occasional; so persistently repeated at short intervals as to constitute virtually an unbroken series. Connected, extended, or prolonged without cessation or interruption of sequence. Sullivan v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Boston, Mo.App., 110 S.W.2d 870, 877. As to continuous "Crime" and "Easement", see those titles.

Continuous adverse use. Term is interchangeable with the term "uninterrupted adverse use".

Continuous injury. One recurring at repeated intervals, so as to be of repeated occurrence; not necessarily an injury that never ceases.

Continuously. Uninterruptedly; in unbroken sequence; without intermission or cessation; without intervening time; with continuity or continuation.

Contra. Against, confronting, opposite to; on the other hand; on the contrary.

Contra accounts. In accounting, those accounts which are related to and should be shown with their cognate accounts, e.g. reserve for depreciation should be shown with the asset which is being depreciated.

Contra-balance. Balance in accounts which is the opposite of the normal balance of the account; e.g. account receivable with credit balance.

Contraband. In general, any property which is unlawful to produce or possess. Goods exported from or imported into a country against its laws. Articles, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited by law. Smuggled goods. See also Derivative contraband.

Contraband of war. Certain classes of merchandise, such as arms and ammunition, which, by the rules of international law, cannot lawfully be furnished or carried by a neutral nation against its laws. Articles, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited by law. Smuggled goods. See also Derivative contraband.

Contra bonos mores /kóntra bónows móriyz/. Against good morals. Contracts contra bonos mores are void.

Contraceausator /kóntɾakozɛˈdɑr/. A criminal; one prosecuted for a crime.

Contraceptive. Any device or substance which prevents fertilization of the female ovum.

Contraceptivism. The offense of distributing or prescribing contraceptives; the offense has little or no vitality today with respect to both married and unmarried persons. Baird v. Eisenstadt, 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349.

Contract. An agreement between two or more persons which creates an obligation to do or not to do a particular thing. Its essentials are competent parties, subject matter, a legal consideration, mutuality of agreement, and mutuality of obligation. Lamoureux v. Burrillville Racing Ass'n, 91 R.I. 94, 161 A.2d 213, 215. Under U.C.C., term refers to total legal obligation which results from parties' agreement as affected by the Code. Section 1-201(11). As to sales, "contract" and "agreement" are limited to those relating to present or future sales of goods, and "contract for sale" includes both a present sale of goods and a contract to sell goods at a future time. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).

The writing which contains the agreement of parties, with the terms and conditions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation.

Contracts may be classified on several different methods, according to the element in them which is brought into prominence. The usual classifications are as follows:

Certain and hazardous. Certain contracts are those in which the thing to be done is supposed to depend on the will of the party, or when, in the usual course of events, it must happen in the manner stipulated. Hazardous contracts are those in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event.

Cummative and independent. Commutative contracts are those in which what is done, given, or promised by one party is considered as an equivalent to or in consideration of what is done, given, or promised by the other. Independent contracts are those in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or as considerations.

Conditional contract. An executory contract the performance of which depends upon a condition. It is not simply an executory contract, since the latter may be an absolute agreement to do or not to do something, but it is a contract whose very existence and performance depend upon a contingency.

Consensual and real. Consensual contracts are such as are founded upon and completed by the mere agreement of the contracting parties, without any external formality or symbolic act to fix the obligation. Real contracts are those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as a loan of money, deposit or pledge, which, from their nature, require a delivery of the thing (res). In the common law a contract respecting real property (such as a lease of land for years) is called a "real" contract.

Constructive contract. See Constructive contract; also Express and implied; Quasi contract, infra.

Cost-plus contract. See Costs.

Divisible and indivisible. The effect of the breach of a contract depends in a large degree upon whether it is to be regarded as indivisible or divisible; i.e. whether it forms a whole, the performance of every part of which is a condition precedent to bind the other party, or is composed of several independent parts, the performance of any one of which will bind the other party pro tanto. The only test is whether the whole quantity of the things concerned, or the sum of the acts to be done, is of the essence of the contract. It depends, therefore, in the last resort, simply upon the intention of the parties. Integrity Flooring v. Zandon Corporation, 130 N.J.L. 244, 32 A.2d 507, 509.

When a consideration is entire and indivisible, and it is against law, the contract is void in toto. When the consideration is divisible, and part of it is illegal, the contract is void only pro tanto. Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U.S. (1 Wall.) 220, 17 L.Ed. 530.

Entire and severable. An entire contract is one the consideration of which is entire on both sides. The entire fulfillment of the promise by either is a condition precedent to the fulfillment of any part of the promise by the other. Whenever, therefore, there is a contract to pay the gross sum for a certain and definite consideration, the contract is entire. A severable contract is one the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on either side, so as to correspond to the unascertained consideration on the other side, as a contract to pay a person the worth of his services so long as he will do certain work; or to give a certain price for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample.

Where a contract consists of many parts, which may be considered as parts of one whole, the contract is entire. When the parts may be considered as so many distinct contracts, entered into at one time, and expressed in the same instrument, but not thereby made one contract, the contract is a separable contract. But, if the consideration of the contract is single and entire, the contract must be held to be entire, although the subject of the contract may consist of several distinct and wholly independent items.

Entire contract clause. A provision in the insurance contract stating that the entire agreement between the insured and insurer is contained in the contract, including the application (if attached), declarations, insuring agreement, exclusions, conditions, and endorsements.

Exclusive contract. See Requirements contract; Typing contract, infra.

Executed and executory. Contracts are also divided into executed and executory; executed, where nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is completed at the moment that the arrangement is made, as where an article is sold and delivered, and payment therefor is made on the spot; executory, where some future act is to be done, as where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do an act on or before some future day, or to lend money upon a certain interest, payable at a future time.

Express and implied. An express contract is an actual agreement of the parties, the terms of which are openly uttered or declared at the time of making it, being stated in distinct and explicit language, either orally or in writing.

An implied contract is one not created or evidenced by the explicit agreement of the parties, but inferred by the law, as a matter of reason and justice from their acts or conduct, the circumstances surrounding the transaction making it a reasonable, or even a necessary, assumption that a contract existed between them by tacit understanding.

Implied contracts are sometimes subdivided into those "implied in fact" and those "implied in law," the former being covered by the definition just given, while the latter are obligations imposed upon a person by the law, not in pursuance of his intention and agreement, either expressed or implied, but even against his will and design, because the circumstances between the parties are such as to render it just that the one should have a right, and the other a corresponding liability, similar to those which would arise from a contract between them. This kind of obligation therefore rests on the principle that whatever it is certain a man ought to do that the law will suppose him to have promised to do. And hence it is said that, while the liability of a party to an express contract arises directly from the contract, it is just the reverse in the case of a contract "implied in law," the contract there being implied or arising from the liability. Bliss v. Hoyt, 70 Vt. 534, 41 A. 1026; Kellum v. Browning's Adm'r, 231 Ky. 308, 21 S.W.2d 459, 465. But obligations of this kind are not properly contracts at all, and should not be so denominated. There can be no true contract without a mutual and concurrent intention of the parties. Such obligations are more properly described as "quasi contracts." See Constructive contract; also Quasi contract, infra.

Gratuitous and onerous. Gratuitous contracts are those of which the object is the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit or advantage received or promised as a consideration for it. It is not, however, the less gratuitous if it proceed either from gratitude for a benefit before received or from the hope of receiving one thereafter, although such benefit be of a pecuniary nature. Onerous contracts are those in which something is given or promised as a consideration for the engagement or gift, or some service, interest, or condition is imposed on what is given or promised, although unequal to it in value. A gratuitous contract is sometimes called a contract of beneficence.

Investment contract. A contract in which one party invests money or property expecting a return on his investment. See also Investment contract; Security.

Joint and several. A joint contract is one made by two or more promisors, who are jointly bound to fulfill its obligations, or made to two or more promissees, who are jointly entitled to require performance of the same. A contract may be "several" as to any one of several promisors or promissees, if he has a legal right (either from the terms of the agreement or the nature of the undertaking) to enforce his individual interest separately from the other parties. Generally all contracts are joint where the interest of the parties for whose benefit they are created is joint, and separate where that interest is separate.

Mutual interest, mixed, etc. Contracts of "mutual interest" are such as are entered into for the reciprocal interest and utility of each of the parties; as sales, exchange, partnership, and the like. "Mixed" contracts are those by which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, receiving something of inferior value in return, such as a donation subject to a charge. Contracts "of beneficence" are those by which only one of the contracting parties is benefited; as loans, deposit and mandate.

Open end contract. Contract (normally sales contract) in which certain terms (e.g. order amount) are deliberately left open.

Output contract. A contract in which one party agrees to sell his entire output and the other agrees to buy it; it is not illusory, though it may be indefinite. See also Requirements contract, infra.

Parol contract. A contract not in writing, or partially in writing. At common law, a contract, though it may be in writing, not under seal. See Parol evidence rule.

Personal contract. A contract relating to personal property, or one which so far involves the element of personal knowledge or skill or personal confidence that it can be performed only by the person with whom made, and therefore is not binding on his executor.

Pre-contract. An obligation growing out of a contract or contractual relation, of such a nature that it debars the party from legally entering into a similar contract at a later time with any other person.

Principal and accessory. A principal contract is one entered into by both parties on their own account or in the several qualities they assume. It is one which stands by itself, justifies its own existence, and is not subordinate or auxiliary to any other. Accessory contracts are those made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others, such as suretyship, mortgage, and pledge. Civ.Code La. art. 1771.

Quasi contract. Legal fiction invented by common law courts to permit recovery by contractual remedy in cases where, in fact, there is no contract, but where circumstances are such that justice warrants a recovery as though there had been a promise. It is not based on intention or consent of the parties, but is founded on considerations of justice and equity, and on doctrine of unjust enrichment. It is not in fact a contract, but an obligation which the law creates in absence of any agreement, when and because the acts of the parties or others have placed in the possession of one person money, or its equivalent, under such circumstances that in equity and good conscience he ought not to retain it. It is what was formerly known as the contract implied in law; it has no reference to the intentions or expressions of the parties. The obligation is imposed despite, and frequently in frustration of their intention. See also Constructive contract.

In the civil law, a contractual relation arising out of transactions between the parties which give them mutual rights and obligations, but do not involve a specific and express convention or agreement between them. The lawful and purely voluntary acts of a man, from which there results any obligation whatever to a third person, and sometimes a reciprocal obligation between the parties. Civ.Code La. art. 2293.
Contracts of record are such as are declared and adjudicated by courts of competent jurisdiction, or entered on their records, including judgments, recognizances, and statutes stamp. These are not properly speaking contracts at all, though they may be enforced by action like contracts. Specialties, or special contracts, are contracts under seal, such as deeds and bonds. All others are included in the description "simple" contracts; that is, a simple contract is one that is not a contract of record and not under seal; it may be either written or oral, in either case, it is called a "parol" contract, the distinguishing feature being the lack of a seal.

Requirements contract. A contract in which one party agrees to purchase his total requirements from the other party and hence it is binding and not illusory. See also Output contract, supra.

Shipment contract. A contract calling for shipment of goods and in which shipment is excused if ship is lost. Texas Co. v. Hogarth Shipping Co., 258 U.S. 619, 41 S.Ct. 612, 65 L.Ed. 1123.

Special contract. A contract under seal; a specialty; as distinguished from one merely oral or in writing not sealed. But in common usage this term is often used to denote an express or explicit contract, one which clearly defines and settles the reciprocal rights and obligations of the parties, as distinguished from one which must be made out, and its terms ascertained, by the inference of the law from the nature and circumstances of the transaction. A special contract may rest in parol, and does not mean a contract by specialty; it is defined as one with peculiar provisions not found in the ordinary contracts relating to the same subject-matter.

Subcontract. A contract subordinate to another contract, made or intended to be made between the contracting parties, on one part, or some of them, and a third party (i.e. subcontractor). One made under a prior contract.

Where a person has contracted for the performance of certain work (e.g., to build a house), and he in turn engages a third party to perform the whole or a part of that which is included in the original contract (e.g., to do the carpenter work), his agreement with such third person is called a "subcontract," and such person is called a "subcontractor." The term "subcontractor" means one who has contracted with the original contractor for the performance of all or a part of the work or services which such contractor has himself contracted to perform.

Tying contract. See Tying arrangement.

Unconscionable contract. One which no sensible man not under delusion, duress, or in distress would make, and such as no honest and fair man would accept. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Noll, 115 Ind.App. 289, 58 N.E.2d 947, 949, 950. A contract the terms of which are excessively unreasonable, overreaching and one-sided. See Unconscionability.

Unilateral and bilateral. A unilateral contract is one in which one party makes an express engagement or undertakes a performance, without receiving in return any express engagement or promise of performance from the other. Bilateral (or reciprocal) contracts are those by which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, such as sale or hire. Kling Bros. Engineering Works v. Whiting Corporation, 320 Ill.App. 630, 51 N.E.2d 1004, 1007. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called unilateral, even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. A contract is also said to be "unilateral" when there is a promise on one side only, the consideration on the other side being executed.

Usurious contract. See Usurious contract.

Voidable contract. See Voidable contract.

Void contract. See Void contract.

Written contract. A "written contract" is one which in all its terms is in writing. Commonly referred to as a formal contract.

See also Adhesion contract; Agreement; Aleatory contract; Alteration of contract; Bilateral contract; Bottom hole contract; Breach of contract; Collateral contract; Compact; Constructive contract; Contingency contract; Entire output contract; Executory contract; Formal contract; Futures contract; Indemnity contract; Innominate contracts; Installment contract; Integrated contract; Investment contract; Letter contract; Letter of intent; Literal contract; Marketing contract; Novation; Oral contract; Parol evidence rule; Privity (Privity of contract); Procurement contract; Severable contract; Simulated contract; Specialty. For "liberty of contract," see Liberty.

Contract carrier. A carrier which furnishes transportation service to meet the special needs of shippers who cannot be adequately served by common carriers. Samardick of Grand Island-Hastings, Inc. v. B. D. C. Corp., 138 Neb. 229, 159 N.W.2d 310, 315. A transportation company that carries, for pay, the goods of certain customers only as contrasted to a common carrier that carries the goods of the public in general.

Contract, estoppel by. "Estoppel by contract" is intended to embrace all cases in which there is an actual or virtual undertaking to treat a fact as settled. It means party is bound by terms of own contract until set aside or annulled for fraud, accident, or mistake. United Fidelity Life Ins. Co. v. Fowler, Tex.Civ.App., 38 S.W.2d 128, 131. There are two sorts of "estoppel by contract," estoppel to deny truth of facts agreed on and settled by force of entering into contract, and estoppel arising from acts done under or in performance of contract. Finch v. Smith, 177 Okl. 307, 58 P.2d 850, 851.

Contract for deed. An agreement by a seller to deliver the deed to the property when certain conditions have been met, such as completion of payments by purchaser. Often such contracts for deed are in turn resold.

Contract for sale of goods. Includes both a contract for present sale of goods and a contract to sell goods at a future time. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).
Contract for sale of land. A contract which calls for conveyance of interest in real estate and requires a writing signed by party sought to be charged as being within Statute of Frauds. See also Contract for deed; Contract of sale.

Contract implied in fact. See Contract.

Contract implied in law. See Contract.

Contract. Abbreviation; abridgment or shortening of a word by omitting a letter or letters or a syllable, with a mark over the place where the elision occurs. This was customary in records written in the ancient “court hand,” and is frequently found in the books printed in black letter.

Contract not to compete. An agreement by an employee that he will not for a stated period and within a specific geographical area compete with his employer after termination of his employment. These contracts are enforceable if the time span and area are reasonable.

Contract of benevolence. A contract made for the benefit of one of the contracting parties only, as a mandate or deposit.

Contract of insurance. Any contract by which one of the parties for a valuable consideration, known as a premium, assumes a risk of loss or liability that rests upon the other, pursuant to a plan for the distribution of such risk, is a contract of insurance, whatever the form it takes or the name it bears. See Insurance; Policy of insurance.

Contract of record. A contract of record is one which has been declared and adjudicated by a court having jurisdiction, or which is entered of record in obedience to, or in carrying out, the judgments of a court.

Contract of sale. A contract by which one of the contracting parties, called the “seller,” enters into an obligation to the other to cause him to have freely, by a title of proprietor, a thing, for the price of a certain sum of money, which the other contracting party, called the “buyer,” on his part obliges himself to pay. Agreement under which seller agrees to convey title to property upon payment by buyer under terms of contract. See also Contract for deed; Contract for sale of land.

Contractor. This term is strictly applicable to any person who enters into a contract, but is commonly reserved to designate one who, for a fixed price, undertakes to procure the performance of works or services on a large scale, or the furnishing of goods in large quantities, whether for the public or a company or individual. Such are generally classified as general contractors (responsible for entire job) and subcontractors (responsible for only portion of job; e.g. plumber, carpenter).

A contractor is a person who, in the pursuit of any independent business, undertakes to do a specific piece of work for other persons, using his own means and methods without submitting himself to their control in respect to all its details, and who renders service in the course of an independent occupation representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. Setzer v. Whitehurst, Ky., 339 S.W.2d 454, 456.

One who in pursuit of independent business undertakes to perform a job or piece of work, retaining in himself control of means, method and manner of accomplishing the desired result.

See also General contractor; Independent contractor; Prime contractor.

Contract rights. Any right to payment under a contract not yet earned by performance and not evidenced by an instrument or chattel paper. U.C.C., § 9-106.

Contract system. As applied to state prisons, this phrase signifies that the labor of the prisoners is utilized by private persons or contractors.

Contractual obligation. The obligation which arises from a contract or agreement.

Contract under seal. For centuries before the doctrine of consideration was developed, and long before informal contracts were enforced, contracts under seal were enforced. The sealed instrument required no consideration. The required formalities are: a sufficient writing, a seal, and delivery. The seal may be actual, or impressed on the paper, or merely recited by the word “seal” or “L.S.”

Contractus. Lat. Contract; a contract; contracts.

Contractus bono fidei /kontraktas bówní fádiýáy/. In Roman law, contracts of good faith. Those contracts which, when brought into litigation, were not determined by the rules of the strict law alone, but allowed the judge to examine into the bona fides of the transaction, and to hear equitable considerations against their enforcement. In this they were opposed to contracts stricti juris, against which equitable defenses could not be entertained.

Contractus civiles /kontraktas sívalíyz/. In Roman law, civil contracts. Those contracts which were recognized as actionable by the strict civil law of Rome, or as being founded upon a particular statute, as distinguished from those which could not be enforced in the courts except by the aid of the prætor, who, through his equitable powers, gave an action upon them. The latter were called “contractus prætorii.”

Contractus est quasi actus contra actum /kontraktas êst kwéíßay ăktas kóntra ăktam/. A contract is, as it were, act against act.

Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est /kontraktas êks tárpay közä, vél kóntra bównows mórióz, nálás est/. A contract founded on a base consideration, or against good morals, is null.

Contradict. To disprove. To prove a fact contrary to what has been asserted by a witness.
Contradiction in terms. A phrase of which the parts are expressly inconsistent, as e.g., “an innocent murder”; “a fee-simple for life.”

Contraescritura /kontrae'kritura/. In Spanish law, a counter-writing; counter-letter. A document executed at the same time with an act of sale or other instrument, and operating by way of defeasance or otherwise modifying the apparent effect and purport of the original instrument.

Contrafactio /kontrafaksh(y)ow/. Counterfeiting; as contrafactio sigilli regis, counterfeiting the king’s seal.

Contra formam collationis /kontra fórmam kalésh-yównas/. In old English law, a writ that issued where lands given in perpetual alms to lay houses of religion, or to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of a hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessities, and do divine service, etc., were alienated, to the dishonor of the house and church. By means of this writ the donor or his heirs could recover the lands.

Contra formam doni /kontra fórmam dównay/. Against the form of the grant. See Formedon.

Contra formam feoffamenti /kontra fórmam flyfé-mentay/. In old English law, a writ that lay for the heir of a tenant, enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord to make certain services and suits to his court, who was afterwards distraint for more services than were mentioned in the charter.

Contra formam statuti /kontra fórmam statyúwday/. In criminal pleading. (Contrary to the form of the stat-tute in such case made and provided.) The usual conclusion of every indictment, etc., brought for an offense created by statute.

Contrainte par corps /kontréynt par kór/. In French law, the civil process of arrest of the person, which is imposed upon vendors falsely representing their property to be unincumbered, or upon persons mortguaging property which they are aware does not belong to them, and in other cases of moral heinou-ness.

Contra jus belli /kontra jás beláy/. Lat. Against the law of war.

Contra jus commune /kontra jás kamuywnyi/. Against common right or law; contrary to the rule of the common law.

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibit; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis sententiam ejus cirumvenit /kontra lýyam féysat kwáy id féysat kwóid léks prohibit; in froidam vírow kwáy, sálías várba lýjas, sentéñsh(y)am fýjas sarkamriñat. He does contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts in fraud of the law who, the letter of the law being inviolate, uses the law contrary to its intention.

Contra legem terrae /kontra lýyam téhriy/. Against the law of the land.

Contramandatio /kontramándéysh(y)ow/. A countermanding. Contramandatio placiti, in old English law, was the respite of a defendant, or giving him further time to answer, by countermanding the day fixed for him to plead, and appointing a new day; a sort of imporance.

Contramandatum /kontramándéydam/. A lawful ex-cause, which a defendant in a suit by attorney alleges for himself to show that the plaintiff has no cause of complaint.

Contra negantem principia non est disputandum /kontra nágántem prinispíy nón èst dispyúwýam/. There is no disputing against one who denies first princibles.

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit preceptipo /kontra nón valéntam éyýariy nála kóhrat praskrísh(y)ow/. No prescription runs against a person unable to bring an action.

Contra omnes gentes /kontra ómniyj jëntyiy/. Against all people. Formal words in old covenants of warranty.

Contra pacem /kontra péysam/. Against the peace. A phrase used in the Latin forms of indictments, and also of actions for trespass, to signify that the offense alleged was committed against the public peace, i.e., involved a breach of the peace. The full formula was contra pacem domini regis, against the peace of the lord the king. In modern pleading, in this country, the phrase “against the peace of the commonwealth” or “of the people” is used.

Contraplacitum /kontrapléydam/. In old English law, a counter-plea.

Contraposito /kontrapásísh(y)ow/. In old English law, a plea or answer. A counter-position.

Contra preferentem /kontra préfáréntam/. Against the party who proffers or puts forward a thing.

Contra preferentem /kontra préfáréntam/. Used in connection with the construction of written documents to the effect that an ambiguous provision is construed most strongly against the person who selected the language. U. S. v. Seckinger, 397 U.S. 203, 216, 90 S.Ct. 880, 25 L.Ed.2d 224.

Contrarients /kantrériyants/. This word was used in the time of Edw. II to signify those who were opposed to the government, but were neither rebels nor traitors.

Contrariorum contraria est ratio /kontrériyorm kantrériyà èst réysh(y)ow/. The reason of contrary things is contrary.

Contrarotulator /kontraróytyaléydar/kontrarówrchaledar-. A controller. One whose business it was to observe the money which the collectors had gathered for the use of the king or the people.

Contrarotulator pipe /kontraróytyaléydar pápyiy/. An office of the exchequer that writeth out summons twice every year, to the sheriffs, to levy the rents and debts of the pipe.

Contrary to the evidence. Against the evidence; against the weight of the evidence.

Contrat /kôntrâ/. In French law, contracts are of the following varieties: (1) Bilateral, or synallagmatic, where each party is bound to the other to do what is just and proper; or (2) unilateral, where the one side only is bound; or (3) commutatif, where one does to the other something which is supposed to be an equivalent for what the other does to him; or (4) a léatoire, where the consideration for the act of the one is a mere chance; or (5) contrat de bienfaisance, where the one party procures to the other a purely gratuitous benefit; or (6) contrat à titre onereux, where each party is bound under some duty to the other.

Contra tabulas /kôntra táýulas/. In the civil law, against the will (testament).

Contratailla /kôntrataîîla/. In old English law, a counter-tally. A term used in the exchequer.

Contrat réi aliene animo furandi, est furtum /kôntratêysh(y)ow riyyy eflyiînyî ñanâmow fyrânday êst fârdm/. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft.

Contratenerë /kôntratâñîry/. To hold against; to withhold.

Contra vadium et plegium /kôntra vádiyam at pléjiyam/. In old English law, against gage and pledge.

Contravening equity. A right or equity, in another person, which is inconsistent with and opposed to the equity sought to be enforced or recognized.

Contravention. In French law, an act which violates the law, a treaty, or an agreement which the party has made. That infraction of the law punished by a fine which does not exceed fifteen francs and by an imprisonment not exceeding three days.

Contra veritatem lex nunquam aliquld permittit /kôntra váretéyam lëks nápâwam âskáwad përmidât/. The law never suffers anything contrary to truth.

Contrectare /kôntraktêrîy/. Lat. In the civil law, to handle; to take hold of; to meddle with.
In old English law, to treat. Vel malé contrectet; or shall ill treat.

Contrectatio /kôntraktêysh(y)ow/. In the civil and old English law, touching; handling; meddling. The act of removing a thing from its place in such a manner that, if the thing be not restored, it will amount to theft.

Contrectatio rei aliene, animo furandi, est furtum /kôntraktêysh(y)ow riyy eflyiînyî, ñanâmow fyrânday, êst fârdm/. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft.

Contrefacon /kôntrañson/. In French law, the offense of printing or causing to be printed a book, the copyright of which is held by another, without authority from him.

Contre-maitre /kôntræ-máytr(ə)/. In French marine law, the chief officer of a vessel, who, in case of the sickness or absence of the master, commanded in his place. Literally, the countermaster.

Contribute. To lend assistance or aid, or give something, to a common purpose; to have a share in any act or effect; to discharge a joint obligation. Christman v. Reichholdt, Mo.App., 150 S.W.2d 527, 532. As applied to negligence signifies causal connection between injury and negligence, which transcends and is distinguished from negligent acts or omissions which play so minor a part in producing injuries that law does not recognize them as legal causes. See Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Contributing cause. Generic term used to describe any factor which contributes to a result, though its causal nexus may not be immediate. See Cause; Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Contribute to delinquency. A criminal offense consisting of an act or omission which tends to make a child delinquent.

Contribution. Under principle of “contribution,” a tort-feasor against whom a judgment is rendered is entitled to recover proportional shares of judgment from other joint tort-feasors whose negligence contributed to the injury and who were also liable to the plaintiff. Dawson v. Contractors Transport Corp., 151 U.S. App.D.C. 401, 467 F.2d 727, 729. The share of a loss payable by an insurer when contracts with two or more insurers cover the same loss. The insurer's share of a loss under a coinsurance or similar provision. The sharing of a loss or payment among several. The act of any one or several of a number of co-debtors, co-sureties, etc., in reimbursing one of their number who has paid the whole debt or suffered the whole liability, each to the extent of his proportionate share. Right of one who has discharged a common liability to recover of another also liable, the aliquot portion which he ought to pay or bear. Several states have adopted the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act.

In the civil law, a partition by which the creditors of an insolvent debtor divide among themselves the proceeds of his property proportionably to the amount of their respective credits. Division which is made among the heirs of the succession of the debts with which the succession is charged, according to the proportion which each is bound to bear.

In maritime law, where the property of one of several parties interested in a vessel and cargo has been voluntarily sacrificed for the common safety (as by throwing goods overboard to lighten the vessel), such loss must be made good by the contribution of the others, which is termed "general average".

See also General average contribution; Indemnity.

Contribution clause. Insurance clause providing that where more than one policy covers loss, insurers shall share such loss proportionally in accordance with their policy limits.
CONTRIBUETIONE FACIENDA

Contributione facienda /kɔntrəbjuːʃiˈɔnɪə ni fəʃiˈəndə/. In old English law, a writ that lay where tenants in common were bound to do some act, and one of them was put to the whole burthen, to compel the rest to make contribution.

Contribution to capital. A fund or property contributed by shareowners as financial basis for operation of corporation's business, and signifies resources whose dedication to users of the corporation is made the foundation for issuance of capital stock and which became irrevocably devoted to satisfaction of all obligations of corporation. See also Capital.

Contributory, n. A person liable to contribute to the assets of a company which is being wound up, as being a member or (in some cases) a past member thereof.

Contributory, adj. Joining in the promotion of a given purpose; lending assistance to the production of a given result. Said of a pension plan where employees, as well as employers, make payments to a pension fund.

As to contributory “Infringement” and “Negligence,” see those titles.

Contributory cause. See Cause; Contributing cause; Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Contributory negligence. See Negligence.

Contrivance. Any device which has been arranged generally to deceive. An instrument or article designed to accomplish a specific objective and made by use of measure of ingenuity.

Control, v. To exercise restraining or directing influence over. To regulate; restrain; dominate; curb; to hold from action; overpower; counteract; govern.

Control, n. Power or authority to manage, direct, superintend, restrict, regulate, govern, administer, or oversee. The “control” involved in determining whether “principal and agent relationship” or “master and servant relationship” is involved must be accompanied by power or right to order or direct. Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation v. Vicars, 221 Ind. 387, 47 N.E.2d 972.

“Control,” as used in statute making it unlawful for any person to possess or control any narcotic drug, is given its ordinary meaning, namely, to exercise restraining or directing influence over, and also has been defined to relate to authority over what is not in one’s physical possession. Speaks v. State, 3 Md.App. 371, 239 A.2d 600, 604.

Rule that driver must at all times have automobile under control, means having it under such control that it can be stopped before doing injury to any person in any situation that is reasonably likely to arise under the circumstances. Kindt v. Reading Co., 352 Pa. 419, 43 A.2d 145, 147.

See also Exclusive control; Immediate control.

Controlled company. A company, a majority of whose voting stock is held by an individual or corporation. Effective control can sometimes be exercised when less than 50 percent of the stock is owned.

Controlled substance. Any narcotic drug so designated by law; i.e. so designated by federal or state Controlled Substances Acts (q.v.).

Controlled Substance Acts. Federal and state acts (the latter modeled on the Uniform Controlled Substances Act) the purpose of which is to control the distribution, classification, sale, and use of drugs. The majority of states have such acts.

Controller. See Comptroller.

Controlment /kɑntroʊˈmɛnt/. In Old English law, the controlling or checking of another officer’s account; the keeping of a counter-roll.

Controver /kɑntroʊˈvər/. In Old English law, an inventor or deviser of false news.

Controversy. A litigated question; adversary proceeding in a court of law; a civil action or suit, either at law or in equity; a justiciable dispute. To be a “controversy” under federal constitutional provision limiting exercise of judicial power of United States to cases and controversies there must be a concrete case admitting of an immediate and definitive determination of legal rights of parties in an adversary proceeding upon facts alleged, and claims based merely upon assumed potential invasions of rights are not enough to warrant judicial intervention. Southern Ry. Co. v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, D.C.Ga., 223 F.Supp. 296, 303. This term is important in that judicial power of the courts extends only to cases and "controversies." See Case; Cause of action; Justiciable controversy.

Controvert. To dispute; to deny; to oppose or contest; to take issue on.

Contubernium /kɔntəˈbɜːrnjəm/. In Roman law, the marriage of slaves; a permitted cohabitation.

Contumace capiendo /kɔntəˈmæsɪs kæpiˈɛndəʊ/. In English law, excommunication in all cases of contempt in the spiritual courts is discontinued by 53 Geo. III, c. 127, § 2, and in lieu thereof, where a lawful citation or sentence has not been obeyed, the judge shall have power, after a certain period, to pronounce such person contumacious and in contempt, and to signify the same to the court of chancery, whereupon a writ de contumace capiendo shall issue from that court, which shall have the same force and effect as formerly belonged, in case of contempt, to a writ de excommunicato capiendo. See Excommunication.

Contumacious conduct. Willfully stubborn and disobedient conduct, commonly punishable as contempt of court. See Contempt.

Contumacy /kɔntəˈmeɪsɪ/. The refusal or intentional omission of a person who has been duly cited before a court to appear and defend the charge laid against him, or, if he is duly before the court, to obey some lawful order or direction made in the cause. In the former case it is called "presumed" contumacy; in the latter, "actual."

Contumax /kɔntəˈmæks/. One accused of a crime who refuses to appear and answer to the charge. An outlaw.
Contumely /ˈkɒntʊməli/. Rudeness compounded of haughtiness and contempt; scornful insolence; despicable treatment; disdain, contemptuousness in act or speech; disgrace.

Contusion. A bruise; an injury to any external part of the body by the impact of a fall or the blow of a blunt instrument, without laceration of the flesh, and either with or without a tearing of the skin, but in the former case it is more properly called a "contused wound."

Contutor /ˈkɒntjuːdər/. Lat. In the civil law, a co- tutor, or co-guardian.

Conusance /ˈkɒnzəns(ə)n/. In English law, cognizance or jurisdiction. Conusance of pleas.

Conusance, claim of /ˈklɪəm əv kɒnzəns(ə)n/. See Cognizance.

Consant /ˈkɒnzənt/. Cognizant; acquainted with; having actual knowledge; as, if a party knowing of an agreement in which he has an interest makes no objection to it, he is said to be consant.

Consee /ˈkɒnzəzi/. See Cognizee.

Consor /ˈkɒnzər/. See Cognizor.

Convalescence. Gradual recovery of health or physical strength after illness.

Convenable. In old English law, suitable; agreeable; convenient; fitting.

Convene. To call together; to cause to assemble; to convoke. In the civil law, to bring an action.

Convenience and necessity. If there is a reasonable need apparent for use of the service, and if a common carrier is not unduly interfered with, nor the public highways unduly burdened, a case of "convenience and necessity" exists with respect to an application for a license to operate as a contract motor carrier. See also Public convenience and necessity.

Convenient. Proper; just; suitable; fit; adapted; proper; becoming appropriate.

Convenit /kɔnˈvɪniːt/. Lat. In civil and old English law, it is agreed; it was agreed.

Convent. The fraternity of an abbey or priory, as societas is the number of fellows in a college. A religious house, now regarded as a merely voluntary association, not importing civil death.

An association or community of recluses devoted to a religious life under a superior. A body of monks, friars, or nuns, constituting one local community; now usually restricted to a convent of nuns. Sacred Heart Academy of Galveston v. Karchs, 173 Tenn. 618, 122 S.W.2d 416, 417.

Convienticle /ˌkɒnvɛnˈtɪkəl/. A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion. The word was first an appellation of reproach to the religious assemblies of Wycliffe in the reigns of Edward III, and Richard II, and was afterwards applied to a meeting of dissenters from the established church. As this word in strict propriety denotes an unlawful assembly, it cannot be justly applied to the assembling of persons in places of worship licensed according to the requisitions of law.

Conventio /ˌkɒnvɛntʃ(ə)ˈnɔː/. In Canon law, the act of summoning or calling together the parties by summoning the defendant.

In Civil law, a compact, agreement, or convention. An agreement between two or more persons respecting a legal relation between them. The term is one of very wide scope, and applies to all classes of subjects in which an engagement or business relation may be founded by agreement. It is to be distinguished from the negotiations or preliminary transactions on the object of the convention and fixing its extent, which are not binding so long as the convention is not concluded.

In contracts, an agreement; a covenant.

Conventio in unum /ˌkɒnvɛntʃ(ə)ˈnɔː in ˈjuːnəm/. In the civil law, the agreement between the two parties to a contract upon the sense of the contract proposed. It is an essential part of the contract, following the pollicitation or proposal emanating from the one, and followed by the consension or agreement of the other.

Convention. An agreement or compact; esp. international agreement, e.g. Geneva Convention. An assembly or meeting of members or representatives of political, legislative, fraternal, etc. organizations.

Constitutional convention. See Constitution.

English law. An extraordinary assembly of the houses of lords and commons, without the assent or summons of the sovereign. It can only be justified ex necessitate rei, as the Parliament which restored Charles II, and that which disposed of the crown and kingdom to William and Mary. Also the name of an old writ that lay for the breach of a covenant.

Judicial convention. See Judicial.

Legislative and political. An assembly of delegates or representatives chosen by the people for special and extraordinary legislative purposes, such as the framing or revision of a state constitution (i.e. constitutional convention). Also an assembly of delegates chosen by a political party, or by the party organization in a larger or smaller territory, to nominate candidates for an approaching election.

Public and international law. A pact or agreement between states or nations in the nature of a treaty; usually applied (a) to agreements or arrangements preliminary to a formal treaty or to serve as its basis, or (b) international agreements for the regulation of matters of common interest but not coming within the sphere of politics or commercial intercourse, such as international postage or the protection of submarine cables. An agreement between states relating to trade, finance, or other matters considered less important than those usually regulated by a treaty. See Compact; Treaty.

Roman law. An agreement between parties; a pact. A convention was a mutual engagement between two persons, possessing all the subjective requisites of a contract, but which did not give rise to an action, nor receive the sanction of the law, as bearing an "obligation," until the objective requisite of a solemn ceremonial, (such as stipulatio) was supplied. In other words, convention was the informal agreement of the parties, which formed the basis of a contract, and which became a contract when the external formalities were superimposed. The division of conventions into contracts and pacts was important in the Roman law. The former were such conventions as already, by the older civil law, founded an obligation and action; all the other conventions were termed "pacts." These generally did not produce an actionable obligation. Actionability was subsequently given to several pacts, whereby they received the same power and efficacy that contracts received.

Conventional. Depending on, or arising from, the mutual agreement of parties; as distinguished from legal, which means created by, or arising from, the act of the law.

As to conventional Estates; Interest; Mortgage; Subrogation; and Trustees, see those titles.

Conventional lien. A lien is conventional where the lien, general or particular, is raised by the express agreement and stipulation of the parties, in circumstances where the law alone would not create a lien from the mere relation of the parties or the details of their transaction.

Conventional loan. Real estate loan not involving government participation by way of insurance (FHA) or guarantee (VA).

Conventione /kənˈvɛnʃəni/ˌ. The name of a writ for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal.

Conventions. This name is sometimes given to compacts or treaties with foreign countries as to the apprehension and extradition of fugitive offenders. See Extradition.

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare /kənvɛnˈtʃiəl pəˈtɛst pəˈblɪkə jʊri dərəˈɡɑrə/. The agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right, i.e., cannot prevent the application of general rules of law, or render valid any contravention of law.

Conventio vincit legem /kənvɛnˈtʃiəl vɪŋkɪt lɪɡəm/ˌ. The express agreement of parties overcomes [prevails against] the law.

Conventual church. In ecclesiastical law, which consists of regular clerks, professing some order or religion; or of dean and chapter; or other societies of spiritual men.

Conventuals /kənvɛnˈtʃuəlz/ˌ. Religious men united in a convent or religious house.

Conventus /kənˈvɛntəs/ˌ. Lat. A coming together; a convention or assembly. Conventus magnatum vel procerum (the assembly of chief men or peers) was one of the names of the English parliament. 1 Bl. Comm. 148.

In the civil law, the term meant a gathering together of people; a crowd assembled for any purpose; also a convention, pact, or bargain.

Conventus juridicus /kənˈvɛntəs ʃiˈɾidiːkəs/ˌ. In the Roman law, a court of sessions held in the Roman provinces, by the president of the province, assisted by a certain number of counsellors and assessors, at fixed periods, to hear and determine suits, and to provide for the civil administration of the province.

Conversant. One who is in the habit of being in a particular place is said to be conversant there. Acquainted; familiar.

Conversantes /koʊnˈvɜːrsəntiz/ˌ. In old English law, conversant or dwelling; commorant.

Conversation. Manner of living; behavior habits of life; conduct; as in the phrase "chaste life and conversation." Criminal conversation means seduction of another man's wife, considered as an actionable injury to the husband. See Criminal (Criminal conversation).

Converse. To engage in conversation; social interaction. Reversed in order or relation. The transposition of the subject and predicate in a proposition, as: "Everything is good in its place." Converse, "Nothing is good which is not in its place."

Conversion. An unauthorized assumption and exercise of the right of ownership over goods or personal chattels belonging to another, to the alteration of their condition or the exclusion of the owner's rights. Any unauthorized act which deprives an owner of his property permanently or for an indefinite time. Unauthorized and wrongful exercise of dominion and control over another's personal property, to exclusion of or inconsistent with rights of owner. Catania v. Garage De Le Paix, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 239, 241. See also Embezzlement; Equitable conversion; Fraudulent conversion; Involuntary conversion.

Act of exchanging a convertible security for another security. See Convertible securities.

Commercial instruments. An instrument is converted when: a drawee to whom it is delivered for acceptance refuses to return it on demand; or any person to whom it is delivered for payment refuses on demand either to pay or to return it; or it is paid on a forged indorsement. U.C.C. § 3-419(1).

Constructive conversion. An implied or virtual conversion, which takes place where a person does such acts in reference to the goods of another as amount in law to the appropriation of the property to himself. Direct conversion. The act of actually appropriating the property of another to his own beneficial use and enjoyment, or to that of a third person, or destroying it, or altering its nature, or wrongfully assuming title in himself.

Equitable conversion. The exchange of property from real to personal or from personal to real, which takes place under some circumstances in the consideration of the law, such as, to give effect to directions in a will or settlement, or to stipulations in a contract, although no such change has actually taken place, and by which exchange the property so dealt with becomes invested with the properties and attributes of that into which it is supposed to have been converted. It is sometimes necessary however for certain purposes of devolution and transfer to regard the property in its changed condition as though the change has not absolutely taken place.
Conversion hysteria. A neurosis in which there is gross loss or impairment of some somatic or physical function caused by emotional conflicts, such as hysterical blindness, hysterical paralysis, hysterical tremors, hysterical limping. Used by sufferer to protect himself from anxiety.

Convertible debt. A bond or debenture or note which under certain conditions and at certain times may be converted into stock by the holder. See Convertible securitites, infra.

Convertible securitites. A bond, debenture or preferred share which may be exchanged by the owner for common stock or another security, usually of the same company, in accordance with the terms of the issue.

Convertible term insurance. Type of term insurance which may be changed to permanent (whole life) insurance carrying loan values, built in values, etc.

Convey. To transfer or deliver to another. To pass or transmit the title to property from one to another. To transfer property or the title to property by deed, bill of sale, or instrument under seal. Used popularly in sense of “assign”, “sale”, or “transfer”. See Conveyance.

Conveyance /kon'veyan(t)s/. In its most common usage, transfer of title to land from one person, or class of persons, to another by deed. Term may also include assignment, lease, mortgage or encumbrance of land. An instrument by which some estate or interest in lands is transferred from one person to another; such as a deed, mortgage, etc. See also Alienation; Demise; Fraudulent conveyance; Involuntary conveyance.

Absolute or conditional conveyance. An absolute conveyance is one by which the right or property in a thing is transferred, free of any condition or qualification, by which it might be defeated or changed, as an ordinary deed of lands, in contradistinction to a mortgage, which is a conditional conveyance. Brown v. United States, C.C.A.Pa., 95 F.2d 487, 489.

Fraudulent conveyance. See Fraudulent.

Mesne conveyance. An intermediate conveyance; one occupying an intermediate position in a chain of title between the first grantee and the present holder.

Primary conveyances. Those by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises; as distinguished from those whereby it may be enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished. The term includes feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, and partition, and is opposed to derivative conveyances, such as release, surrender, confirmation, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 309.

Secondary conveyances. The name given to that class of conveyances which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Bl.Comm. 324. Otherwise termed “derivative conveyances” (q.v.).

Voluntary conveyance. A conveyance without valuable consideration; such as a deed or settlement in favor of a wife or children.

Conveyancer. One whose business it is to prepare deeds, mortgages, examine titles to real estate, and perform other functions relating to the transfer of real property.

Conveyancing. Act of performing the various functions relating to the transfer of real property such as examination of land titles, preparation of deeds, mortgages, closing agreements, etc.

Conveyancing counsel to the court of chancery. Certain counsel, not fewer than six in number, appointed by the lord chancellor, for the purpose of assisting the court of chancery, or any judge thereof, with their opinion in matters of title and conveyancing.

Conveyor’s heirs. Under common law rule, when a remainder was limited to heirs of grantor or testator, such heirs did not take a remainder; instead, the estate was considered a reversion in the grantor or testator, and hence, if heirs took at all, they would take by descent, not by purchase. This rule, known as rule of worthier title (Braswell v. Braswell, 195 Va. 971, 81 S.E.2d 560) has been abolished in many jurisdictions. See Worthier title.

Convicta si irascaris tua divulgas; spreta exolescent /kanvish(i)yə sə ayraksrəsə tywə davələs, sıpırdə əksələskənt/. If you be moved to anger by insults, you publish them; if despised, they are forgotten.

Convicium /kanvish(i)yəm/. In the civil law, the name of a species of slander or injury uttered in public, and which charged some one with some act contra bonos mores.

Convict, v. To find a man guilty of a criminal charge, either upon a criminal trial, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere. The word was formerly used also in the sense of finding against the defendant in a civil case.

Convict, n. One who has been adjudged guilty of a crime and is serving a sentence as a result of such conviction. A prisoner.

Convicted. See Conviction.

Conviction. In a general sense, the result of a criminal trial which ends in a judgment or sentence that the accused is guilty as charged. “Conviction” and “convicted” mean the final judgment on a verdict or finding of guilt, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, and do not include a final judgment which has been expunged by pardon, reversed, set aside, or otherwise rendered nugatory. 18 U.S.C.A. § 4251.

The final consummation of the prosecution including the judgment or sentence, or as is frequently the case, the judgment or sentence itself. Ex parte White, 75 Okl.Cr. 204, 130 P.2d 103, 104. The stage of a criminal proceeding where the issue of guilt is determined. United States v. Locke, 409 F.Supp. 600.

A record of the summary proceedings upon any penal statute before one or more justices of the peace or other persons duly authorized, in a case where the offender has been convicted and sentenced.

Summary conviction. The conviction of a person (usually for a minor misdemeanor), as the result of his trial before a magistrate or court, without a jury.
CONVINCING PROOF

Convincing proof. Such as is sufficient to establish the proposition in question, beyond hesitation, ambiguity, or reasonable doubt, in an unprejudiced mind. See Beyond a reasonable doubt; Clear; Proof.

Convivium /kan'vi:vı'ım/. A tenue by which a tenant was bound to provide meat and drink for his lord at least once in the year.

Convocation. In ecclesiastical law, the general assembly of the clergy to consult upon ecclesiastical matters.

Convoy. An escort for protection, either by land or sea. A naval force for the protection of merchant ships and others, during the whole voyage, or such part of it as is known to require such protection. An association for a hostile object. In undertaking it, a nation spreads over the merchant vessel an immunity from search which belongs only to a national ship. By joining a convoy every individual ship puts off her pacific character, and undertakes for the discharge of duties which belong only to the military, marine, and adds to the numerical, if not to the real strength of the convoy. The Atlanta, 16 U.S. (3 Wheat.) 409, 423, 4 L.Ed. 422.

Co-obligor. A joint obligor; one bound jointly with another or others in a bond or obligation.

Cool blood. In the law of homicide, calmness or tranquility; the undisturbed possession of one’s faculties and reason; the absence of violent passion, fury, or uncontrollable excitement. See also Cooling time; Premeditation.

Cooley doctrine. Doctrine which holds that state is deprived of all regulatory power as to subjects which "are in their nature national, or admit only of one uniform system or plan of regulation." Cooley v. Board of Wardens of Port of Philadelphia, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 299, 13 L.Ed. 996. See also Pre-emption.

Cooling off period. A period of time in which no action of a particular sort may be taken by either side in a dispute. For example, a period of a month after a union or a company files a grievance against the other. During this period, the union may not strike and the company may not lock-out the employees. A period of time in which a buyer may cancel a purchase; most states require a three-day cancellation period for door-to-door sales or home improvement contracts. An automatic delay in some states, in addition to ordinary court delays, between the filing of divorce papers and the divorce hearing.

Cooling time. Time to recover "cool blood" after severe excitement or provocation. Time for the mind to become so calm and sedate as that it is supposed to contemplate, comprehend, and coolly act with reference to the consequences likely to ensue.

Cooperate. To act jointly or concurrently toward a common end.

Cooperation. Action of co-operating. Association of persons for common benefit. In patent law, unity of action to a common end or a common result, not merely joint or simultaneous action.

Cooperation clause. That provision in insurance policies which requires the insured to cooperate with the insurer in defense of a claim. "Co-operation" by insured within a co-operation clause means that there shall be fair and frank disclosure of information reasonably demanded by insurer to enable it to determine whether there is genuine defense. Prudence Mut. Cas. Co. v. Dunn, 30 Ill.App.2d 469, 175 N.E.2d 286.

Cooperative /koʊəˈpɜːrətɪv/. A corporation or association organized for purpose of rendering economic services, without gain to itself, to shareholders or members who own and control it. United Grocers, Limited v. U. S., D.C.Cal., 186 F.Supp. 724, 733. Type of business that is owned by its customers.

Cooperatives vary widely in character and in the manner in which they function. They have been classified along functional lines as follows: (a) consumer cooperatives (including consumer stores, housing cooperatives, utility cooperatives, and health cooperatives); (b) marketing cooperatives; (c) business purchasing cooperatives; (d) workers' productive cooperatives; (e) financial cooperatives (such as the credit union, mutual savings bank, savings and loan association, and production credit association); (f) insurance cooperatives; (g) labor unions; (h) trade associations; and (i) self-help cooperatives.

The required form for a cooperative may differ in different states; e.g. unincorporated association, cooperative association, nonprofit corporation.

See also Consumer's cooperative; Cooperative corporation.

Farmer's cooperative. Major function of such cooperative is to market the combined crops, produce or livestock of its farmer-owners. The cooperative attempts to sell crops and livestock at the optimum price. For example, it might store grain until the price of such rises.

Cooperative apartment. Dwelling units in a multi-dwelling complex in which each owner has an interest in the entire complex and a lease of his own apartment, though he does not own his apartment as in the case of a condominium.

Cooperative association. See Cooperative corporation.

Cooperative corporation. A "cooperative corporation", while having a corporate existence, is primarily an organization for purpose of providing services and profits to its members and not for corporate profit. Linnton Plywood Ass'n v. State Tax Commission, 241 Or. 1, 403 P.2d 708, 709.

Cooperative federalism. The distribution of power between national and local or state governments while each recognizes the powers of the other.

Cooperative housing. See Cooperative apartment.

Cooperative negligence. See Negligence (Contributory negligence).
Cooperito /kōwpàrsh(i)yəw/. In old English law, the head of branches of a tree cut down; though cooper-tio arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood.

Cooperus /kōwpàrdəs/. Covert; covered.

Co-optation /kōwpəptəˈʃən/. A concurring choice; the election, by the members of a close corporation, of a person to fill a vacancy.

Coordinate Jurisdiction. That which is possessed by courts of equal rank, degree, or authority, equally competent to deal with the matter in question, whether belonging to the same or different systems; concurrent jurisdiction. See Jurisdiction.

Coordinate system. A method of land description. It uses a measurement based on an intersection of a defined north-south axis and a defined east-west axis.

Co-owner. Two or more persons who own property, real or personal. Tenants in common of property. Broad term which may describe joint tenants as well.

Coparcenary /kōwpərˈsənəri/. Such estate arises when several take by descent from same ancestor as one heir, all coparceners constituting but one heir and having but one estate and being connected by unity of interest and of title. Winters Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Riffe, Ohio Prob., 194 N.E.2d 921, 924. A species of estate, or tenancy, which exists where lands of inheritance descend from the ancestor to two or more persons. It arose in England either by common law or particular custom. By common law, as where a person, seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, dies, and his next heirs are two or more females, his daughters, sisters, aunts, cousins, or their representatives; in this case they all inherit, and these coheirs, are then called “coparceners,” or, for brevity, “parceners” only. 2 Bl.Comm. 187. By particular custom, as where lands descend, as in gavelkind, to all the males in equal degree, as sons, brothers, uncles, etc. An estate which several persons hold as one heir, whether male or female. This estate has the three units of time, title, and possession; but the interests of the coparceners may be unequal. 2 Bl. Comm. 188.

While joint tenancies refer to persons, the idea of coparcenary refers to the estate. The title to it is always by descent. The respective shares may be unequal; as, for instance, one daughter and two granddaughters, children of a deceased daughter, may take by the same act of descent. As to strangers, the tenants’ seisin is a joint one, but, as between themselves, each is seised of his or her own share, on whose death it goes to the heirs, and not by survivorship. The right of possession of coparceners is in common, and the possession of one is, in general, the possession of the others.

Coparceners /kōwpərˈsənərz/. Persons to whom an estate of inheritance descends jointly, and by whom it is held as an entire estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 187.

Coparticeps /kōwpərdəsəps/. In old English law, a coparcener.

“Co-party,” within rule (F.R.C.P. 13) providing that a pleading may state as a cross-claim any claim by one party against a co-party arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the original action, does not mean merely equal party, such as one of several original defendants, but applies to a third-party defendant brought into the case by an original defendant on a theory of liability over. Fogel v. United Gas Imp. Co., D.C.Pa., 32 F.R.D. 202, 204.

Copartner. One who is a partner with one or more other persons; a member of a partnership.

Copr partnership. A partnership.

Copeland Act. Federal act prohibiting wage kickbacks or rebates being imposed on employees engaged in construction or repair of public buildings or works.

Copeman, or copesman. A Chapman (q.v.).

Copesmate /kōwpəˈsmiːt/. A merchant; a partner in merchandise.

Copia /kopyə/. Lat. In civil and old English law, opportunity or means of access.

In old English law, a copy. Copia libelli, the copy of a libel.

Copia libelli deliberanda /kopyə laˈbɛlɛ darəˈbaɾəndə/. In old English law, the name of a writ that lay where a man could not get a copy of a libel at the hands of a spiritual judge, to have the same delivered to him.

Coppa /kɔpə/. In English law, a crop or cock of grass, hay, or corn, divided into tithable portions, that it may be more fairly and justly tithed.

Copper and scales. See Mancipatio.

Copprincipal. One of two or more participants in crime who actually perpetrate crime or are present aiding and abetting person who commits crime. One of two or more persons who has appointed agents whom they have right to control.

Copula /kɔˈpələ/. The corporal consummation of marriage. Copula (in logic), the link between subject and predicate contained in the verb.

Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu /kɔˈpələtʃiəˈlɛʃ(i)yəw vərˈbɔrəm ɪndəkət əkˈspəˌtɛʃiəˈləʊnəm ɪn ɪˈwɔʊdəm sɛns(ɨ)yəw/. Coupling of words together shows that they are to be understood in the same sense.

Copulative term. One which is placed between two or more others to join them together.

Copy. A transcript, double, imitation, or reproduction of an original writing, painting, instrument, or the like.
Under best evidence rule, a copy may not be introduced until original is accounted for. Certified copies are admissible under statutes in most jurisdictions. Similarly, photographic copies and prints from photographic films are admissible by statute.

Copies of all pleadings, motions and other papers must be served on all parties to action under Fed.R.Civ P. 5(b). Admissions concerning the genuineness of copies of documents are governed by Fed.R.Civ P. 36(a).

A duplicate is admissible in evidence to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original. Fed.Evid.R. 1003.

In copyright law, “copying” of a literary work consists in exact or substantial reproduction of the original, using original as a model as distinguished from an independent production of same thing, and a “copy” is that which comes so near to original as to give every person seeing it the idea created by original and must be such that ordinary observation would cause it to be recognized as having been taken from the work of another. Turner v. Century House Pub. Co., 56 Misc.2d 1071, 290 N.Y.S.2d 637, 642.

See also Authentication; Conformed copy; Duplicate.

Examined copies are those which have been compared with the original or with an official record thereof.

Copyhold. In England a species of estate at will, or customary estate, the only visible title to which consisted of the copies of the court rolls, which were made out by the steward of the manor, on a tenant’s being admitted to any parcel of land, or tenement belonging to the manor. It was an estate at the will of the lord, yet such a will as was agreeable to the custom of the manor, which customs were preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts baron, in which they were entered. 2 Bl. Comm. 95. In a larger sense, copyhold was said to import every customary tenure (that is, every tenure pending on the particular custom of a manor), as opposed to free socage, or freehold, which later (since the abolition of knight-service) was considered as the general or common-law tenure of the country. Under the English Law of Property Act of 1922 copyholds were enfranchised and became freehold (or in certain cases leasehold).

Copyhold commissioners. Commissioners appointed to carry into effect various acts of parliament, having for their principal objects the compulsory commutation of manorial burdens and restrictions (fines, heriots, rights to timber and minerals, etc.), and the compulsory enfranchisement of copyhold lands.

Privileged copyholds. Those copyhold estates which are said to be held according to the custom of the manor, and not at the will of the lord, as common copyholds are. They include customary freeholds and ancient demesnes.

Copyright. The right of literary property as recognized and sanctioned by positive law. An intangible, incorporeal right granted by statute to the author or originator of certain literary or artistic productions, whereby he is invested, for a limited period, with the sole and exclusive privilege of multiplying copies of the same and publishing and selling them.

Copyright protection subsists in original works of authorship fixed in any tangible medium of expression, now known or later developed, from which they can be perceived, reproduced, or otherwise communicated, either directly or with the aid of a machine or device. Works of authorship include the following categories: (1) literary works; (2) musical works, including any accompanying words; (3) dramatic works, including any accompanying music; (4) pantomimes and choreographic works; (5) pictorial, graphic, and sculptural works; (6) motion pictures and other audiovisual works; and (7) sound recordings. In no case does copyright protection for an original work of authorship extend to any idea, procedure, process, system, method of operation, concept, principle, or discovery, regardless of the form in which it is described, explained, illustrated, or embodied in such work. Copyright Act, § 102.

"Common law copyright" is that right which author has in his unpublished literary creations, a kind of property right whose extent is to give him control over first publication of his work or to prevent its publication. Hemingway's Estate v. Random House, Inc., 53 Misc.2d 462, 279 N.Y.S.2d 51, 54. See Common-law copyright.

Copyright notice. A necessary notice in the form required by law which is placed in each published copy of the work copyrighted. Copyright Act, § 401.

Coraglum, or corage /kərəˈɡeɪ럼/: Measures of corn. An unusual and extraordinary tribute, arising only on special occasions. They are thus distinguished from services. Mentioned in connection with hidge and carvage.

Coram /kəˈræm/. Lat. Before; in presence of. Applied to persons only.

Coram domino regis /kəˈræm doʊˈmənəʊ riˈzi/. Before our lord the king. Coram domino regis ubicumque tunc fuerit Angliae, before our lord the king wherever he shall then be in England.

Coram ipso regis /kəˈræm ipˈsoʊ riˈzi/. Before the king himself. The old name of the court of king's bench, which was originally held before the king in person. 3 Bl.Comm. 41.

Coram nobis /kəˈræm noʊ ˈbaːs/. In our presence; before us. The office of "writ of coram nobis" is to bring attention of court to, and obtain relief from, errors of fact, such as a valid defense existing in facts of case, but which, without negligence on defendant’s part, was not made, either through duress or fraud or excusable mistake, where facts did not appear on face of record, and were such as, if known in season, would have prevented rendition of the judgment questioned. People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 198 P.2d 505, 506. The essence of coram nobis is that it is addressed to the very court which renders the judgment in which injustice is alleged to have been done, in contrast to appeals or review directed to another court; the words "coram nobis," meaning "our court," as compared to the common-law writ of coram vobis, "meaning "your court," clearly point this up. The writs of coram nobis and coram vobis have been abolished by Fed.R.Civ.P. 60(b) and superseded by relief as provided by that rule. See also Coram vobis; Error coram nobis; Error coram vobis; Writ of error.

Coram non judice /kóram nón júwdsi/. In presence of a person not a judge. When a suit is brought and determined in a court which has no jurisdiction in the matter, then it is said to be coram non judice, and the judgment is void.

Coram paribus /kóram pábrás/. Before the peers or freeholders. The attestation of deeds, like all other solemn transactions, was originally done only coram paribus. 2 Bl.Comm. 307. Coram paribus de vicente, before the peers or freeholders of the neighborhood. Id. 315.

Coram sectatoribus /kóram séktaotorás/. Before the suitors.

Coram vobis /kóram vôvbas/. Before you. A writ of error directed by a court of review to the court which tried the cause, to correct an error in fact. See Coram nobis; Writ of error.

Cord. A measure of wood containing 128 cubic feet, otherwise expressed as a pile of wood 8 feet long, 4 feet high, and 4 feet wide.

Co-respondent. A co-defendant. A person summoned to answer a bill, petition, or libel, together with another respondent. Used for example to designate the person charged with adultery with the respondent in a suit for divorce for that cause, and joined as a defendant with such party.

Corium forfasceare /kóriyam fórafésár/. To forfeit one's skin, applied to a person condemned to be whipped; anciently the punishment of a servant. Corium perdere, the same. Corium redimere, to compound for a whipping.

Cornage /kórnaj/. A species of tenure in England, by which the tenant was bound to blow a horn for the sake of alarming the country on the approach of an enemy. It was a species of grand serjeanty.

Corner. A combination among the dealers in a specific commodity, or outside investors, for the purpose of buying up the greater portion of that commodity which is upon the market or may be brought to market, and holding the same back from sale, until the demand shall so far outrun the limited supply as to advance the price abnormally.

A "corner" is a condition arising when a much greater quantity of any given commodity is sold for future delivery within a given period than can be purchased in the market. The buyers, who are called in the slang of the exchanges, the "longs," then insist on delivery, and thus succeed in running up the prices to a fictitious point, at which the deals are "run out" between the dealers by the payment of differences, or, where the buyers insist, by actual delivery.

Lost corner. One whose location as established by the government surveyors cannot be found. The mere fact that evidence of the physical location cannot now be seen, or that no one who saw the marked corner is produced, does not necessarily make the corner a lost one.

Obiterated corner. One where no visible evidence remains of the work of the original surveyor in establishing it.

Surveying. An angle made by two boundary lines; the common end of two boundary lines, which run at an angle with each other.

Cornet. A commissioned officer of cavalry, abolished in England in 1871, and not existing in the United States army.

Corn laws. A species of protective tariff formerly in existence in England, imposing import-duties on various kinds of grain. The corn laws were abolished in 1846.

Corn Products case. Where corn products manufacturer, as an integral part of its manufacturing business and to protect itself against rises in price of raw corn, bought corn futures, accepting delivery in some cases and in other cases reselling futures upon spot purchase of corn, profits on resale of futures were taxable as ordinary income, rather than as capital gains, even though the transactions did not constitute true hedging in that there was no protection against fall in price. Corn Products Refining Co. v. Commission of Internal Revenue, 350 U.S. 46, 76 S.Ct. 20, 100 L.Ed. 29.

Corn whisky. An intoxicating whiskey or liquor made from corn or containing a corn product, otherwise known as "moonshine," "white mule," "hootch," "corn liquor," "moonshine corn whisky."

Corody /kórady/. In old English law, a sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the crown from the abbey or other religious house, whereof it was founder, towards the sustentation of such one of its servants as is thought fit to receive it. It differs from a pension, in that it was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the king's servants in an abbey; a pension being given to one of the king's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided with a benefice. 1 Bl.Comm. 283.

Corollary. In logic, a collateral or secondary consequence, deduction, or inference.

Corona /kórōnâ/. The crown. Placita corone; pleas of the crown; criminal actions or proceedings, in which the crown was the prosecutor.

Corona mala /kórōnâ mâla/. In old English law, the clergy who abuse their character were so called.

Coronare /kôrânérâ/. In old English law, to give the tonsure, which was done on the crown, or in the form of a crown; to make a man a priest.
Coronare filium /kóránéříř fíňján/: In old English law, to make one’s son a priest. Homo coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders, and the tonsure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns.

Coronation oath. The oath administered to a sovereign at the ceremony of crowning or investing him with the insignia of royalty, in acknowledgment of his right to govern the kingdom, in which he swears to observe the laws, customs, and privileges of the kingdom, and to act and do all things conformably there-to.

Coronator /kóránérdar/: A coroner.

Coronatore eligendo /kóránátóřir elajjéndow/: In English law, the name of a writ issued to the sheriff, commanding him to proceed to the election of a coroner.

Coronatore exonerando /kóránátóřir egzónerándow/: In English law, the name of a writ for the removal of a coroner, for a cause which is to be therein assigned, as that he is engaged in other business, or incapacitated by years or sickness, or has not a sufficient estate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it.

Coroner /kóránar/: Public official, of English origin, charged with duty to make inquiry into the causes and circumstances of any death which occurs through violence or suddenly and with marks of suspicion; i.e. unnatural death. The functions and duties of coroners have been diminished having been replaced by medical examiners. See Coroner’s inquest; Medical examiner.

Coroner’s court. In England, a tribunal of record, where a coroner holds his inquiries.

Coroner’s inquest. An inquisition or examination into the causes and circumstances of any death happening by violence or under suspicious conditions, held by the coroner with the assistance of a jury. See also Inquest.

Corpership. Exists when a corporation is the sole general partner in a limited partnership with numerous public investors as limited partners.

Corporale sacramentum /kórparéřlíj saékraméntam/: In old English law, a corporal oath.

Corporal imbecility. Physical inability to perform completely the act of sexual intercourse; not necessarily congenital, and not invariably a permanent and incurable impotence.

Corporalis injuria non recipit estimationem de futuro /kórparéřlís aňjúrířa nón réšapor ëštamešyahíjówna姆 diy fyuwçhurow/: A personal injury does not receive satisfaction from a future course of proceeding [is not left for its satisfaction to a future course of proceeding].

Corporal oath. An oath, the external solemnity of which consists in laying one’s hand upon the Holy Bible while the oath is administered to him. More generally, a solemn oath.

Corporal punishment. Physical punishment as distinguished from pecuniary punishment or a fine; any kind of punishment of or inflicted on the body. The term may or may not include imprisonment, according to the context. The Supreme Court has upheld the use of reasonable corporal punishment in schools. Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 97 S.Ct. 1401, 51 L.Ed.2d 711.

Corporal touch. Bodily touch; actual physical contact; manual apprehension.

Corporate. Belonging to a corporation; as a corporate name. Incorporated; as a corporate body.

Corporate agent. A natural person or a corporation who is authorized to act for a corporation as for example in the function of accepting service of process. Broadly, term includes all employees and officers of corporation who have power to bind the corporation.

Corporate alter ego, doctrine of. Means that courts ignoring forms and looking to substance will regard stockholders as owners of corporation’s property, or as the real parties in interest whenever it is necessary to do so to prevent fraud which might otherwise be perpetrated, to redress a wrong which might otherwise go without redress, or to do justice which might otherwise fail. See Piercing corporate veil.

Corporate authorities. The title given in statutes of several states to the aggregate body of officers of a municipal corporation, or to certain of those officers (excluding the others) who are vested with authority in regard to the particular matter spoken of in the statute, as, taxation, bonded debt, regulation of the sale of liquors, etc.

Corporate body. Term is equivalent to “body corporate”; i.e. a corporation.

Corporate bonds. A written promise by a corporation to pay a fixed sum of money at some future time named, with stated interest payable at some fixed time or intervals, given in return for money or its equivalent received by the corporation, sometimes secured, and sometimes not.

Corporate charter. Document issued by state agency or authority (commonly Secretary of State) granting corporation legal existence and right to function (i.e. conduct business) as a corporation. See also Charter; Corporate franchise.

Corporate citizenship. Corporate status in the state of incorporation, though a foreign corporation is not a citizen for purposes of the Privileges and Immunities Clause (U.S.Const., Art. IV, § 2). Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 35 U.S. (13 Pet.) 519, 10 L.Ed. 274.

Corporate crime. Any criminal offense committed by and hence chargeable to a corporation because of activities of its officers or employees.

Corporate domicile. The domicile of a corporation is the state of its incorporation.

Corporate entity. The distinct status of a corporation which sets its existence apart from the status of its shareholders; its capacity to have a name of its own, to sue and be sued in its own name as well as the right to buy, sell, lease and mortgage its property in its own name.
Corporate excess. Term used in connection with taxation of a corporation engaged in interstate commerce by a state and meaning the proportion of fair cash value of all the shares constituting the capital stock on a given date as the value of the assets, both real and personal, employed within the state bears to the total assets of the corporation on that date. Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. Mass., 268 U.S. 203, 208, 45 S.Ct. 477, 69 L.Ed. 916.

Corporate franchise. The right to exist and do business as a corporation. The right or privilege granted by the state or government to the persons forming an aggregate corporation, and their successors, to exist and do business as a corporation and to exercise the rights and powers incidental to that form of organization or necessarily implied in the grant. See also Corporate charter.

Corporate liability. See Piercing corporate veil.

Corporate mortgage trust. Device for financing corporate activities which requires an indenture and an independent trustee for protection of holders of bonds and debentures. The trust holds security consisting of property in event of default.

Corporate name. When a corporation is formed, state statutes require that such be given a name and such name is kept on record with the proper state authority (e.g. Secretary of State’s office). Only by and under such name may the corporation sue or be sued and do all legal acts.

Corporate officers. Those persons who fill the offices which are provided for in the charter such as president, treasurer, etc., though in a broader sense the term includes vice presidents, general manager and other officials of the corporation.

Corporate opportunity doctrine. Doctrine of "corporate opportunity" is a species of duty of fiduciary to act with undivided loyalty, and applies to acquisition of property, tangible or intangible, present or future, of person who occupies a fiduciary relationship to corporation which is in opposition to corporation. General Automotive Mfg. Co. v. Singer, 19 Wis.2d 528, 120 N.W.2d 659, 663.

Corporate purpose. In reference to municipal corporations, and especially to their powers of taxation, a "corporate purpose" is one which shall promote the general prosperity and the welfare of the municipality; or a purpose necessary or proper to carry into effect the object of the creation of the corporate body or one which is germane to the general scope of the objects for which the corporation was created or has a legitimate connection with those objects and a manifest relation thereto.

Corporate stock. Term embraces all securities issued by the corporation though it should not include bonds and debentures because these represent debt rather than stock. See Stock.

Corporate trustees. Those corporations which are empowered by their charter to act as trustee, such as banks and trust companies.

Corporation. An artificial person or legal entity created by or under the authority of the laws of a state or nation, composed, in some rare instances, of a single person and his successors, being the incumbents of a particular office, but ordinarily consisting of an association of numerous individuals. Such entity subsists as a body politic under a special denomination, which is regarded in law as having a personality and existence distinct from that of its several members, and which is, by the same authority, vested with the capacity of continuous succession, irrespective of changes in its membership, either in perpetuity or for a limited term of years, and of acting as a unit or single individual in matters relating to the common purpose of the association, within the scope of the powers and authorities conferred upon such bodies by law. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 636, 657, 4 L.Ed. 629; U. S. v. Trinidad Coal Co., 137 U.S. 160, 11 S.Ct. 57, 34 L.Ed. 640.

As defined in the Bankruptcy Act, "corporation" includes association having a power or privilege that a private corporation, but not an individual or a partnership, possesses; partnership association organized under a law that makes only the capital subscribed responsible for the debts of such association; joint-stock company; unincorporated company or association; or business trust; but does not include limited partnerships. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(8).

Classification

According to the accepted definitions and rules, corporations are classified as follows:

Public and private. A public corporation is one created by the state for political purposes and to act as an agency in the administration of civil government, generally within a particular territory or subdivision of the state, and usually invested, for that purpose, with subordinate and local powers of legislation; such as a county, city, town, or school district. These are also sometimes called "political corporations." See Municipal corporation.

Private corporations are those founded by and composed of private individuals, for private purposes, as distinguished from governmental purposes, and having no political or governmental franchises or duties.

The true distinction between public and private corporations is that the former are organized for governmental purposes, the latter not. The term "public" has sometimes been applied to corporations of which the government owned the entire stock, as in the case of a state bank. But bearing in mind that "public" is here equivalent to "political," it will be apparent that this is a misnomer. Again the fact that the business or operations of a corporation may directly and very extensively affect the general public (as in the case of a railroad company or a bank or an insurance company) is no reason for calling it a public corporation. If organized by private persons Subsidiary and parent. Subsidiary corporation is one in which another corporation (called parent corporation) owns at least a majority of the shares, and thus has control.

Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

Business corporation. One formed for the purpose of transacting business in the widest sense of that term, including not only trade and commerce, but manufacturing, mining, banking, insurance, transportation, and practically every form of commercial or industrial activity where the purpose of the organization is pecuniary profit; contrasted with religious, charitable, educational, and other like organizations, which are sometimes grouped in the statutory law of a state under the general designation of "corporations not for profit."

Brother-sister corporation. See that title.

Civil corporation. In the law of Louisiana, the term "civil" as applied to corporations, is used in a different sense, being contrasted with "religious." Civil corporations are those which relate to temporal police; such are the corporations of the cities, the companies for the advancement of commerce and agriculture, literary societies, colleges or universities founded for the instruction of youth, and the like. Religious corporations are those whose establishment relates only to religion; such are the congregations of the different religious persuasions. Civ. Code La. art. 431.

Close corporation. A corporation whose shares, or at least voting shares, are held by a single shareholder or closely-knit group of shareholders. Generally, there are no public investors and its shareholders are active in the conduct of the business. A close corporation is one which fills its own vacancies or in which power of voting is held through manipulation under fixed and virtually perpetual proxies. Brooks v. Willcuts, C.C.A. Minn., 78 F.2d 270, 279. A corporation, the stock ownership of which is not widely dispersed. Instead, a few shareholders are in control of corporate policy and are in a position to benefit personally from such policy.

Closely held corporation. See Close corporation, supra.

Corporation de facto. One existing under color of law and in pursuance of an effort made in good faith to organize a corporation under the statute; an association of men claiming to be a legally incorporated company, and exercising the powers and functions of a corporation, but without actual lawful authority to do so. Its elements are a law or charter authorizing such a corporation, an attempt in good faith to comply with law authorizing its incorporation, and unintentional omission of essential requirements of the law or charter, and exercise in good faith of corporate functions under the law or charter. A corporation which has been defectively formed but which is not subject to collateral attack.

Corporation de jure. That which exists by reason of full compliance by incorporators with requirements of an existing law permitting organization of such corporation.
Collapsible corporation. A corporation formed for one specific venture such as a motion picture and then collapsed, allowing tax advantages to the shareholders. I.R.C. § 341.

Corporation sole. Unusual type of corporation consisting of only one person whose successor becomes the corporation on his death or resignation; limited in the main today to bishops and heads of dioceses. See also Aggregate and sole, supra.

Eleemosynary corporation. Corporation with charitable functions and purposes.

Joint venture corporation. A corporation which has joined with other individuals or corporations within the corporate framework in some specific undertaking commonly found in oil, chemical, electronic and atomic fields.

Migratory corporation. A corporation, organized under laws of another state than that of incorporators' residence for purpose of doing all or greater part of their business in state of their residence or in other state than that of incorporation. Toklan Royalty Corporation v. Tiffany, 193 Okl. 120, 141 P.2d 571, 573.

Moneyed corporations are, properly speaking, those dealing in money or in the business of receiving deposits, loaning money, and exchange; but in a wider sense the term is applied to all business corporations having a money capital and employing it in the conduct of their business.

Municipal corporations. See that title.

Public-service corporations. Those whose operations serve the needs of the general public or conduce to the comfort and convenience of an entire community, such as public transportation, gas, water, and electric light companies. The business of such companies is said to be "affected with a public interest," and for that reason they are subject to legislative regulation and control to a greater extent than corporations not of this character. See also Quasi public corporation, infra.

Non-stock corporation. Type of corporation where ownership is not recognized by stock; e.g. municipal corporation.

Not-for-profit corporation. A corporation formed for some charitable or benevolent purpose and not for profit making and generally organized under special statutes for this purpose.

Professional corporation. In most states such may be organized by those rendering personal services to public of a type which requires a license or other legal authorization and which prior to such statutory authorization could not be performed by a corporation. Includes, but is not limited to, public accountants, certified public accountants, chiropractors, osteopaths, physicians, surgeons, dentists, podiatrists, chiropractors, architects, veterinarians, optometrists, and attorneys at law. Tax benefits are one of several reasons for professional incorporation. Incorporation does not alter professional responsibility or privilege nor does it insulate principal from malpractice liability.

Quasi corporation. A term applied to those bodies, or municipal societies, which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized, by statutes or immemorial usage, as persons, or aggregate corporations, with precise duties, which may be enforced, and privileges, which may be maintained, by suits at law. "Quasi corporation" is a phrase used to designate bodies which possess a limited number of corporate powers, and which are low down in the scale or grade of corporate existence, and is generally applied to a body which exercises certain functions of a corporate character, but which has not been created a corporation by any statute, general or special. There is a well-defined and marked distinction between municipal corporations proper and political or quasi corporations. Cities, towns, and villages are municipal corporations proper, while counties, townships, school districts, road districts, and the like are quasi corporations. See Quasi public corporation, below.

Quasi public corporation. This term is sometimes applied to corporations which are not strictly public, in the sense of being organized for governmental purposes, but whose operations contribute to the comfort, convenience, or welfare of the general public, such as telegraph and telephone companies, gas, water, and electric light companies, and irrigation companies. More commonly and more correctly styled "public-service corporations."

There is a large class of private corporations which on account of special franchises conferred on them owe a duty to the public which they may be compelled to perform. This class of corporations is known as public service corporations, and in legal phraseology as "quasi public corporations," or corporations affected with a public interest. A "quasi public corporation" may be said to be a private corporation which has given to it certain powers of a public nature, such, for instance, as the power of eminent domain, in order to enable it to discharge its duties for the public benefit, in which respect it differs from an ordinary private corporation, the powers of which are given and exercised for the exclusive advantage of its stockholders.

The term is also applied to corporations of that class sometimes called "quasi municipal corporations," such as school districts, irrigation districts, township, etc.

Subchapter S corporation. A small business corporation which, under certain conditions, may elect to have its undistributed taxable income taxed to its shareholders. I.R.C. § 1371 et seq. If major significance is the fact that Subchapter S status usually avoids the corporate income tax, and corporate losses can be claimed by the shareholders.

Spiritual corporations. Corporations, the members of which are entirely spiritual persons, and incorporated as such, for the furtherance of religion and perpetuating the rights of the church.

Trading corporations. A commercial corporation engaged in buying and selling. The word "trading," is much narrower in scope than "business," as applied to corporations, and though a trading corporation is a business corporation, there are many business corporations which are not trading companies. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 669, 4 L.Ed. 629.
Tramp corporations. Companies chartered in one state without any intention of doing business therein, but which carry on their business and operations wholly in other states.

Corporation Act. In English law, the statute 13 Car. II, St. 2, c. 1; by which it was provided that no person should thereafter be elected to office in any corporate town that should not, within one year previously, have taken the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper, according to the rites of the Church of England; and every person so elected was also required to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy. 4 Bl.Comm. 58. This statute is now repealed.

Corporation courts. Formerly, certain courts in Virginia described as follows: “For each city of the state, there shall be a court called a ‘corporation court,’ to be held by a judge, with like qualifications and elected in the same manner as judges of the county court.”

Corporeal /korpóriyal/. A term descriptive of such things as have an objective, material existence; perceptible by the senses of sight and touch; possessing a real body. Opposed to incorporeal and spiritual. There is a distinction between “corporeal” and “corporal.” The former term means “possessing a body,” that is, tangible, physical, material; the latter means “relating to or affecting a body,” that is, bodily, external. Corporeal denotes the nature or physical existence of a body; corporeal denotes its exterior or the co-ordination of it with some other body. Hence we speak of “corporeal hereditaments,” but of “corporeal punishment,” “corporeal touch,” “corporeal oath,” etc.

Corporeal hereditaments /karpóriyal harédsdams/. See Hereditaments.

Corporeal property. Such as affects the senses, and may be seen and handled, as opposed to incorporeal property, which cannot be seen or handled, and exists only in contemplation. Thus a house is corporeal, but the annual rent payable for its occupation is incorporeal. Corporeal property is, if movable, capable of manual transfer: if immovable, possession of it may be delivered up. But incorporeal property cannot be so transferred, but some other means must be adopted for its transfer, of which the most usual is an instrument in writing.

In Roman law, the distinction between things corporeal and incorporeal rested on the sense of touch: tangible objects only were considered corporeal. In modern law, all things which may be perceived by any of the bodily senses are termed corporeal, although a common definition of the word includes merely that which can be touched and seen.

Corpor et animo /kórpórié̃ ̄d dénmow/. Lat. By the body and by the mind; by the physical act and by the mental intent.

Corps diplomatique /kór diplatý̄k/. In international law, ambassadors and diplomatic persons at any court or capital.

Corpse /kórps/. The dead body of a human being.

Corpus /kórps/. Lat. Body; an aggregate or mass (of men, laws, or articles); physical substance, as distinguished from intellectual conception; the principal sum or capital, as distinguished from interest or income. The main body or principal of a trust.

A substantial or positive fact, as distinguished from what is equivocal and ambiguous. The corpus delicti (body of an offense) is the fact of its having been actually committed.

A corporeal act of any kind (as distinguished from animus or mere intention), on the part of him who wishes to acquire a thing, whereby he obtains the physical ability to exercise his power over it whenever he pleases. The word occurs frequently in this sense in the civil law.

As proof, it consists of showing that there exists the object of the crime (dead body in homicide case), and that such resulted from criminal act of some person. In some jurisdictions, it cannot be proved by confession of defendant in the first instance but only after extrinsic evidence (of the elements) has been offered. Downey v. People, 121 Colo. 307, 215 P.2d 892. In other states, confessional evidence is admissible in the first instance. See Corpus delicti, below.

Corpus comitatus /kórps kómaté̄dyds/. The body of a county. The whole county, as distinguished from a part of it, or any particular place in it.

Corpus corporatum /kórps körparé̄dyam/. A corporation; a corporate body, other than municipal.

Corpus cum causa /kórps kám kóza/. The body with the cause. An English writ which issued out of chancery, to remove both the body and the record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the king’s bench, there to remain until he satisfied the judgment.

Corpus delicti /kórps doliktay/. The body of a crime. The body (material substance) upon which a crime has been committed, e.g., the corpse of a murdered man, the charred remains of a house burned down. In a derivative sense, the substance or foundation of a crime; the substantial fact that a crime has been committed. The “corpus delicti” of a crime is the body or substance of the crime, which ordinarily includes two elements: the act and the criminal agency of the act. State v. Edwards, 49 Ohio St.2d 31, 358 N.E.2d 1051, 1055.

Corpus pro corpore /kórps prów kórpariy/. In old records, body for body. A phrase expressing the liability of manumaptors.

Corpus humanum non recipit sequestrationem /kórps hyámé̄ynam nón réssap étámé̄shiyównam/. The human body does not admit of valuation.

Corpus juris /kórps júra/. A body of law. A term used to signify a book comprehending several collections of law. There are two principal collections to which this name is given; the Corpus Juris Civilis, and the Corpus Juris Canonici. Also name of an encyclopedic statement of the principles of American law; e.g. Corpus Juris Secundum.

Corpus juris canonici /kórps júra kanônsay/. The body of the canon law. A compilation of the canon law, comprising the decrees and canons of the Roman Church, constituting the body of ecclesiastical law of that church.

Corpus juris civilis /kórpɔs júrəs siviləs/. The body of the civil law. The system of Roman jurisprudence compiled and codified under the direction of the emperor Justinian, in A.D. 528–534. This collection comprises the Institutes, Digest (or Pandects), Code, and Novels. The name is said to have been first applied to this collection early in the seventeenth century.

Correl /kɔrˈriːli/. Lat. In the civil law, co-stipulators; joint stipulators.

Correl credendi /kɔrˈriːli kredɛndi/. In the civil and Scotch law, joint creditors; creditors in solido.

Correlative /kəˈrɛldʒiv/. Having a mutual or reciprocal relation, in such sense that the existence of one necessarily implies the existence of the other. Father and son are correlative terms, as are claim and duty.

Correlative rights. Refers to doctrine which is applied to owners of land and their rights to use of their land with respect to rights of adjoining or lower riparian landowners in water or oil. Alameda County Water District v. Niles Sand & Gravel Co. Inc., 37 Cal. App.3d 924, 112 Cal.Rptr. 846.

Correspondence. Interchange of written communications. The letters written by a person and the answers written by the one to whom they are addressed. The agreement of things with one another.

Correspondence audit. An audit conducted by the Internal Revenue Service through the use of the mail.

Typically, the I.R.S. writes to the taxpayer requesting the verification of a particular deduction or exemption. The completion of a special form or the remittance of copies of records or other support is all that is requested of the taxpayer.

Correspondent. A securities firm, bank or other financial organization which regularly performs services for another in a place or market to which the other does not have direct access. Securities firms may have correspondents in foreign countries or on exchanges of which they are not members. Bank which serves as agent for another bank; carries deposit balance for bank in another city.

Correspondent bank. See Correspondent.

Corroborate /kərəˈbərət/. To strengthen; to add weight or credibility to a thing by additional and confirming facts or evidence. The testimony of a witness is said to be corroborated when it is shown to correspond with the representation of some other witnesses, or to comport with some facts otherwise known or established. See Corroborating evidence.

Corroborating evidence /kərəˈbərɪŋ dʒiˈɛvəndi/. Evidence supplementary to that already given and tending to strengthen or confirm it. Additional evidence of a different character to the same point. Edwards v. Edwards, Tenn.App., 501 S.W.2d 283, 289. In some jurisdictions, corroborating evidence of an accomplice to the crime is given much weight. People v. Baker, 16 Ill.2d 364, 158 N.E.2d 1.

Corrupt. Spoiled; tainted; vitiated; depraved; debased; morally degenerate. As used as a verb, to change ones morals and principles from good to bad.

Corruption. An act done with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others. The act of an official or fiduciary person who unlawfully and wrongfully uses his station or character to procure some benefit for himself or for another person, contrary to duty and the rights of others. See Bribe; Extortion.

Corruption of blood. In English law, the consequence of attainer, being that the attainted person could neither inherit lands or other hereditaments from his ancestor, nor retain those he already had, nor transmit them by descent to any heir, because his blood was considered in law to be corrupted. Aver v. Everett, 110 N.Y. 317, 18 N.E. 148. This was abolished by St. 3 & 4, Wm. IV, c. 106, and 33 & 34 Vict., c. 23, and is unknown in America. Const.U.S., Art. III, § 3.

Corruptly. When used in a statute, this term, generally imports a wrongful design to acquire some pecuniary or other advantage.

Corrupt motive doctrine. Doctrine invoked in assessing crimes like bribery to determine motive of gift or payment.

Corrupt practices acts. Federal and state statutes regulating campaign contributions and expenditures.

Corselet /kərˈsɛlt/. Ancient armor which covered the body.
Corse-present /kórs prēzənt/. In old English law, a mortuary, thus termed because, when a mortuary became due on the death of a man, the best or second-best beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corpse. In Wales a corse-present was due upon the death of a clericman to the bishop of the diocese, till abolished by 12 Anne St. 2, c. 6. 2 Bl.Comm. 426.

Corsnel /kórsnéld/. In Saxon law, the morsel of excommunication. A species of ordeal in use among the Saxons, performed by eating a piece of bread over which the priest had pronounced a certain imprecation. If the accused ate it freely, he was pronounced innocent; but, if it stuck in his throat, it was considered as a proof of his guilt. 4 Bl.Comm. 345.

concerting measures of state or municipal policy.
The legislative body in the government of cities or boroughs. An advisory body selected to aid the executive; i.e. a body appointed to advise and assist the governor in his executive or judicial capacities or both. See also City council; Legislative council; Meropolitan council.

Common Council. In American law, the lower or more numerous branch of the legislative assembly of a city. In English law, the councillors of the city of London. The parliament, also, was anciently called the "common council of the realm."

Privy Council. See that title.

Select Council. The name given, in some states, to the upper house or branch of the council of a city.

Council of conciliation. In England, by the Acts 30 & 31 Vict., c. 105, power was given for the crown to grant licenses for the formation of councils of concil-

Cost bond, or bond for costs. A bond given by a party to an action to secure the eventual payment of such costs as may be awarded against him. A bond which may be required of an appealing party in a civil case; e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 7. Purpose of bond is to cover appellee's costs in event of affirmance of judgment.

Costs de incremento. Increased costs, costs of increase. Costs adjudged by the court in addition to those assessed by the jury.

Costs of the day. Costs which are incurred in preparing for the trial of a cause on a specified day, consisting of witnesses' fees, and other fees of attendance.

Costs to abide event. When an order is made by an appellate court reversing a judgment, with "costs to abide the event," the costs intended by the order include those of the appeal, so that, if the appellee is finally successful, he is entitled to tax the costs of the appeal.

Final costs. Such costs as are to be paid at the end of the suit. Costs, the liability for which depends upon the final result of the litigation.

Interlocutory costs. Costs accruing upon proceedings in the intermediate stages of a cause, as distinguished from final costs; such as the costs of motions.

Security for costs. A security which a defendant in an action may require of a plaintiff who does not reside within the jurisdiction of the court, for the payment of such costs as may be awarded to the defendant. See also Cost bond, supra.

Statutory costs. Amounts awarded for various phases of litigation that are fixed by statute. Word "costs" generally refers to statutory fees to which officers, witnesses, jurors and others are entitled for their services in an action and which statutes authorize to be taxed and included in the judgment. Terry an unwritten law established by usage, during a long space of time.

Co-sureties /kɔˈswɜːrədɪz/. Joint sureties; two or more sureties to the same obligation.

Cotenancy. A tenancy by several distinct titles but by unity of possession, or any joint ownership or common interest with its grantor. The term is broad enough to comprise both tenancy in common and joint tenancy.

Coterell /kɔˈdərləˈli/. Anciently, a kind of peasantry who were outlaws; robbers.

Coterellus /kɔˈdərələs/. In feudal law, a cottager; a servile tenant, who held in mere villeinage; his per-sion, issue, and goods were disposable at the lord's pleasure. A coterellus, therefore, occupied a less favorable position than a cotarius (q.v.), for the latter held by socage tenure.
iation and arbitration, consisting of a certain number of masters and workmen in any trade or employment, having power to hear and determine all questions between masters and workmen which may be submitted to them by both parties, arising out of or with respect to the particular trade or manufacture, and incapable of being otherwise settled. They have power to apply to a justice to enforce the performance of their award. The members are elected by persons engaged in the trade.

Council of the bar. A body composed of members of the English bar which governs the bar. It hears complaints against barristers and reports its findings with recommendations to the benchers of the Inn of Court of which the barrister is a member, who alone can act.

Council of the north. In England, a court instituted by Henry VIII, in 1537, to administer justice in Yorkshire and the four other northern counties. Under the presidency of Stratford, the court showed great rigor, bordering, it is alleged, on harshness. It was abolished by 16 Car. I, the same act which abolished the Star Chamber.

Counsel /kɔːn(t)sɔːl/. Attorney or counsellor (q.v.). Advice and assistance given by one person to another in regard to a legal matter, proposed line of conduct, claim, or contention. The words "counsel" and "advise" may be, and frequently are, used in criminal law to describe the offense of a person who, not actually doing the felonious act, by his will contributed to it or procured it to be done. See Aid and abet.

See also Legislative counsel; Of counsel.

Junior counsel. The younger of the counsel employed on the same side of a case, or the one lower in standing or rank, or who is intrusted with the less important parts of the preparation or trial of the cause.

Counsellor. An attorney; lawyer. Member of the legal profession who gives legal advice and handles the legal affairs of client, including, if necessary, appearing on his or her behalf in civil, criminal, or administrative actions and proceedings.

Counsel of record. Attorney whose appearance has been filed with court papers.

Counsel, right to. Constitutional right of criminal defendant to court appointed attorney if he is financially unable to retain private counsel; guaranteed by Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to U.S. Constitution, and as well by court rule (Fed.R.Crim.P. 44), and statute (18 U.S.C.A. § 3006A). Such right to counsel exists with respect to felonies (Gideon v. Wainright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792); misdemeanors when the sentence is to a jail term (Argersinger v. Hemlin, 407 U.S. 25, 92 S.Ct. 2060), and to juvenile delinquency proceedings (In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428). The extent of this right extends from the time that judicial proceedings have been initiated against the accused, whether by way of formal charge, preliminary hearing, indictment, information, or arraignment (Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 97 S.Ct. 1232), through to sentencing (Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254) and appeal (Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 83 S.Ct. 814). "Counsel" however within Sixth Amendment does not include a lay person but refers only to person authorized to practice law. U. S. v. Grismore, C.A.Colo., 546 F.2d 844, 847. See also Critical stage; Effective assistance of counsel; Escobedo Rule; Miranda Rule; Public defender.

Count, v. In pleading, to declare; to recite; to state a case; to narrate the facts constituting a plaintiff's cause of action. To plead orally; to plead or argue a case in court; to recite or read in court; to recite a count in court.

Count, n. In pleading, the plaintiff's statement of his cause of action. The different parts of a declaration, each of which, if it stood alone, would constitute a ground for action. This term is no longer used in pleading under Rules of Civil Procedure. Used also to signify the several parts of an indictment, each charging a distinct offense. Fed.R.Crim.P. 7.

"Count" and "charge" when used relative to allegations in an indictment or information are synonymous. State v. Puckett, 39 N.M. 511, 50 P.2d 964, 965.

A separate and independent claim. A civil petition or a criminal indictment may contain several counts.

An earl.

Common counts. Certain general counts or forms inserted in a declaration in an action to recover a money debt, not founded on the circumstances of the individual case, but intended to guard against a possible variance, and to enable the plaintiff to take advantage of any ground of liability which the proof may disclose, within the general scope of the action.

The various forms of an action of assumpsit. In the action of assumpsit, these counts are as follows: For goods sold and delivered, or bargained and sold; for work done; for money lent; for money paid; for money received to the use of the plaintiff; for interest; or for money due on an account stated.

General count. One stating in a general way the plaintiff's claim.

Money counts. A species of common counts, so called from the subject-matter of them; embracing the indebitatus assumpsit count for money lent and advanced, for money paid and expended, and for money had and received, together with the insimul computatassent count, or count for money due on an account stated.

Omnibus count. A count which combines in one all the money counts with one for goods sold and delivered, work and labor, and an account stated.

Several counts. Where a plaintiff has several distinct causes of action, he is allowed to pursue them cumulatively in the same action, subject to certain rules which the law prescribes. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ. P. 8(e).

Special count. As opposed to the common counts, in pleading, a special count is a statement of the actual facts of the particular case, or a count in which the plaintiff's claim is set forth with all needed particularity.

Countee. In old English law, the most eminent dignity of a subject before the Conquest. He was praefectus or praepositus comitatus, and had the charge and custody of the county; but this authority is now vested in the sheriff.

Countenance. In old English law, credit; estimation. Also, encouragement; aiding and abetting.

Counter, adj. Adverse; antagonistic; opposing or contradicting; contrary.

Counter-affidavit. An affidavit made and presented in contradiction or opposition to an affidavit which is made the basis or support of a motion or application.

Counter-bond. Bond which indemnifies a surety. See Counter-security.

Counterclaim. See that title.

Counter-deed. A secret writing, either before a notary or under a private seal, which destroys, invalidates, or alters a public one.

Counter-letter. A species of instrument of defeasance common in the civil law. It is executed by a party who has taken a deed of property, absolute on its face, but intended as security for a loan of money, and by it he agrees to reconvey the property on payment of a specified sum. The two instruments, taken together, constitute what is known in Louisiana as an "antichresis" (q.v.).

Counter-mark. A sign put upon goods already marked; also the several marks put upon goods belonging to several persons, to show that they must not be opened, but in the presence of all the owners or their agents.

Counter-security. A security given to one who has entered into a bond or become surety for another; a countervailing bond of indemnity.

Counterclaim. A claim presented by a defendant in opposition to or deduction from the claim of the plaintiff. Fed.R. Civil P. 13. If established, such will defeat or diminish the plaintiff’s claim. Under federal rule practice, and also in most states, counterclaims are either compulsory (required to be made) or permissive (made at option of defendant).

A counterclaim may be any cause of action in favor of one or more defendants or a person whom a defendant represents against one or more plaintiffs, a person whom a plaintiff represents or a plaintiff and other persons alleged to be liable. New York C.P. L.R. § 39019(a).

For requisite content of counterclaim under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, see Complaint. Compare Cross-claim. See also Offset; Recoupment; Set-off; Transaction or occurrence test.

Compulsory counterclaim. A pleading shall state as a counterclaim any claim which at the time of serving the pleading the pleader has against any opposing party, if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party’s claim and does not require for its adjudication the presence of third parties of whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction. But the pleader need not state the claim if (1) at the time the action was commenced the claim was the subject of another pending action, or (2) the opposing party brought suit upon his claim by attachment or other process by which the court did not acquire jurisdiction to render a personal judgment on that claim. Fed.R. Civil P. 13(a).

Permissive Counterclaim. A pleading may state as a counterclaim any claim against an opposing party not arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party’s claim. Fed.R. Civil P. 13(b).

Counterfeit /kæwntərtf/. To forge; to copy or imitate, without authority or right, and with a view to deceive or defraud, by passing the copy or thing forged for that which is original or genuine. Most commonly applied to the fraudulent and criminal imitation of money or securities. 18 U.S.C.A. § 471 et seq. Counterfeit in common parlance signifies fabrication of false image or representation; counterfeiting an instrument means falsely making it; and in its broadest sense means making of copy without authority or right and with view to deceive or defraud by passing copy as original or genuine. Smith v. State, 7 Md.App. 457, 256 A.2d 357, 360, 361. See also False making; Falsify; Forgery; Imitation.

Counterfeit coin. Coin not genuine, but resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for genuine coin, including genuine coin prepared or altered so as to resemble or pass for coin of a higher denomination.

Counterfeiter. One who unlawfully makes base coin in imitation of the true metal, or forges false currency, or any instrument of writing, bearing a likeness and similitude to that which is lawful and genuine, with an intention of deceiving and imposing upon another.

Counter-feasance. The act of forging.

Counter letter. An agreement to reconvey where property has been passed by absolute deed with the intention that it shall serve as security only.

Countermand. A change or revocation of orders, authority, or instructions previously issued. It may be either express or implied; the former where the order or instruction already given is explicitly annulled or recalled; the latter where the party’s conduct is incompatible with the further continuance of the order or instruction, as where a new order is given inconsistent with the former order.

Counter offer. A statement by the offeror which has the legal effect of rejecting the offer and of proposing a new offer to the offeror. Restatement of Contracts, § 60. However, the provisions of U.C.C. § 2–207(1)(2) modifies this principle of contract law as regards sales of goods by providing that the “additional terms are to be construed as proposals for addition to the contract.”

Counterpart. In conveyancing, the corresponding part of an instrument; a duplicate or copy. Where an instrument of conveyance, as a lease, is executed in parts, that is, by having several copies or duplicates made and interchangeably executed, that which is executed by the grantor is usually called the “original,” and the rest are “counterparts”; although, where all the parties execute every part, this renders them all originals. See Duplicate.
COUNTERPART WRIT

Counterpart writ. A copy of the original writ, authorized to be issued to another county when the court has jurisdiction of the cause by reason of the fact that some of the defendants are residents of the county or found therein.

Counter-rolls. In English law, the rolls which sheriffs have with the coroners, containing particulars of their proceedings, as well of appeals as of inquests, etc.

Countersign. As a noun, the signature of a secretary or other subordinate officer to any writing signed by the principal or superior to vouch for the authenticity of it.

As a verb, to sign in addition to the signature of another in order to attest the authenticity.

Counter-signature. See Countersign.

Countervail. To counterbalance; to avail against with equal force or virtue; to compensate for, or serve as an equivalent of or substitute for.

Countervailing equity. See Equity.

Countervail livery. At common law, a release was a form of transfer of real estate where some right to it existed in one person but the actual possession was in another; and the possession in such case was said to "countervail livery," that is, it supplied the place of and rendered unnecessary the open and notorious delivery of possession required in other cases.

Counteur /kɔwˈnɪtɛr/. In the time of Edward I, a pleader; also called a Nurrator, and Serviteur-Counteur. See Countors.

Countez /kɔwˈnɛt/. L. Fr. Count, or reckon. In old practice, a direction formerly given by the clerk of a court to the crier, after a jury was sworn, to number them; and which Blackstone says was given in his time, in good English, "count these." 4 Bl.Comm. 340, note (u).

Countors /kɔwˈnɔr/. Advocates, or serjeants at law, whom a man retains to defend his cause and speak for him in court, for their fees.

Country. The territory occupied by an independent nation or people, or the inhabitants of such territory. In the primary meaning "country" denotes the population, the nation, the state, or the government, having possession and dominion over a territory.

Rural, as distinguished from urban areas.

Country whence he came. Within statute providing for deportation of aliens means country of alien's nativity, where domicile has not been acquired elsewhere. Immigration Act 1924, § 13, 8 U.S.C.A. § 213; Schenck ex rel. Capodilupo v. Ward, C.C.A.Mass., 80 F.2d 422, 426. But deportation to "country whence alien came" would be complied with if the alien was returned to political dominion in exile and control of country from whence he came. Delany v. Moraitis, C.C.A.Md., 136 F.2d 129-133.

Country. The largest territorial division for local government in state. Its powers and importance vary from state to state. In certain New England states, it exists mainly for judicial administration. In Louisiana, the equivalent unit is called a parish. Counties are held in some jurisdictions to be municipal corporations, and are sometimes said to be voluntary municipal corporations. Other cases, seeking to distinguish between the two, hold that counties are agencies or political subdivisions of the state for governmental purposes, and not, like municipal corporations, incorporations of the inhabitants of specified regions for purposes of local government. Counties are also said to be merely quasi corporations. Jefferson County ex rel. Grauman v. Jefferson County Fiscal Court, 274 Ky. 91, 118 S.W.2d 181, 184.

Body of the county. The county at large, as distinguished from any particular place within it. A county considered as a territorial whole.

County affairs. Those relating to the county in its organic and corporate capacity and included within its governmental or corporate powers.

County attorney. Attorney employed by county to represent it in civil matters; also, the prosecuting attorney in many counties.

County auditor. County official whose responsibility is examination of accounts and financial records of the county.

County board. The administrative body which governs a county.

County board of equalization. A body created for the purpose of equalizing values of property subject to taxation.

County board of supervisors. A body of town and city officers acting for and on behalf of county in such matters as have been turned over to them by law.

County bonds. Broadly, any bonds issued by county officials to be paid for by a levy on a special taxing district, whether or not coextensive with the county.

County business. All business pertaining to the county as a corporate entity. All business of the county, and any other business of such county connected with or interrelated with the business of any other county properly within the jurisdiction of the county commissioners' court.

County commissioners. Officers of a county, charged with a variety of administrative and executive duties, but principally with the management of the financial affairs of the county, its police regulations, and its corporate business. Sometimes the local laws give them limited judicial powers. In some states they are called "supervisors".

County courts. The powers and jurisdiction of such courts are governed by state constitutions or statutes; some with strictly administrative, or strictly judicial functions, or a combination of both; some with only criminal jurisdiction, or only civil, or both; some have exclusive jurisdictions, others concurrent jurisdiction; such jurisdictional powers may, in addition, be either general or specific.

County officers. Those whose general authority and jurisdiction are confined within the limits of the county in which they are appointed, who are appointed in and for a particular county, and whose duties apply only to that county, and through whom the county performs its usual political functions. Public officers who fill a position usually provided for in the organization of counties and county governments, and are selected by the county to represent it continuously and as part of the regular and permanent administration of public power in carrying out certain acts with the performance of which it is charged in behalf of the public.

County palatine. A term bestowed upon certain counties in England, the lords of which in former times enjoyed especial privileges. They might pardon treasons, murders, and felonies. All writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in the king’s; and all offenses were said to be done against their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regis. But these privileges have in modern times nearly disappeared.

County powers. Such only as are expressly provided by law or which are necessarily implied from those expressed.

County property. That which a county is authorized to acquire, hold, and sell.

County purposes. Those exercised by the county acting as a municipal corporation. As regards the rate of taxation, all purposes for which county taxation may be levied. Test whether a tax is levied for county purposes is whether it is for strictly county uses, for which county or its inhabitants alone would benefit, or is it for a purpose in which entire state is concerned and will profit.

County road. One which lies wholly within one county, and which is thereby distinguished from a state road, which is a road lying in two or more counties.

County-seat. A county-seat or county-town is the chief town of a county, where the county buildings and courts are located and the county business transacted.

County supervisors. See County commissioners, supra.

County tax. Tax exclusively for county purposes, in which state has no sovereign interest or responsibility, and which has no connection with duties of county in its relation to state.

County-town. The county-seat; the town in which the seat of government of the county is located.

County warrant. An order or warrant drawn by some duly authorized officer of the county, directed to the county treasurer and directing him to pay out of the funds of the county a designated sum of money to a named individual, or to his order or to bearer.

Foreign county. Any county having a judicial and municipal organization separate from that of the county where matters arising in the former county are called in question, though both may lie within the same state or country.

Coup d’état /kúdvdeytá/. Political move to overthrow existing government by force.

Coupled with an interest. This phrase, in the law of agency, has reference to a writing creating, conveying to, or vesting in the agent an interest in the estate or property which is the subject of the agency, as distinguished from the proceeds or profits resulting from the exercise of the agency.

Coupons. Interest and dividend certificates; also those parts of a commercial instrument which are to be cut, and which are evidence of something connected with the contract mentioned in the instrument. They are generally attached to certificates of loan, where the interest is payable at particular periods, and, when the interest is paid, they are cut off and delivered to the payor. That portion of a bond redeemable at a specified date for interest payment.

Coupons are written contracts for the payment of a definite sum of money on a given day, and being drawn and executed in a form and mode for the purpose, that they may be separated from the bonds and other instruments to which they are usually attached, it is held that they are negotiable and that a suit may be maintained on them without the necessity of producing the bonds. Each matured coupon upon a negotiable bond is a separable promise, distinct from the promises to pay the bonds or the other coupons, and gives rise to a separate cause of action. Thompson v. Perrine, 106 U.S. 589, 1 S.Ct. 564, 27 L.Ed. 298.

Coupon bonds. Bonds to which are attached coupons for the several successive installments of interest to maturity.

Coupon notes. Promissory notes with coupons attached, the coupons being notes for interest written at the bottom of the principal note, and designed to be cut off severally and presented for payment as they mature.

Coupon securities. Usually provides for the payment of principal to the bearer thereof, and for payment of an installment of interest to the bearer of the respective interest coupons upon presentation thereof upon their respective due dates. Coupon securities are usually in the denomination of $1,000. Ownership of the security and/or coupons is transferred by delivery thereof. Such a security is negotiable under the Uniform Commercial Code. U.C.C. §§ 8–105, 8–302.

Cours de cassation /kór da kâsasyón/. The supreme judicial tribunal of France, having appellate jurisdiction only.

Course. In surveying, the direction of a line with reference to a meridian.

Course of business. What is usually and normally done in the management of trade or business. See also Course of dealing: Regular course of business.

In Worker’s Compensation Acts, the usual course of business of the employer covers the normal operations which form part of the ordinary business carried on, and not including incidental and occasional operations having for their purpose the preservation of the premises or the appliances used in the business.

Commercial paper is said to be transferred, or sales alleged to have been fraudulent may be shown to have been made, “in the course of business,” or “in the usual and ordinary course of business,” when the circumstances of the transaction are such as usually and ordinarily attend dealings of the same kind and do not exhibit any signs of haste, secrecy, or fraudulent intention.
Course of dealing. A sequence of previous acts and conduct between the parties to a particular transaction which is fairly to be regarded as establishing a common basis of understanding for interpreting their expressions and other conduct. U.C.C. § 1–205(1). See also Usage (Usage of trade).

Course of employment. Those words as applied to compensation for injuries within the purview of Worker’s Compensation Acts, refer to the time, place, and circumstances under which the accident takes place. A worker is in course of employment when, within time covered by employment, he is doing something which he might reasonably do while so employed at proper place. Generally, in order that an injury may arise out of and in the course of employment, it must be received while the worker is doing the duty he is employed to perform and also as a natural incident of the work flowing therefrom as a natural consequence and directly connected therewith.

The expression “in the course of his employment”, in the rule that an employer is liable for the torts of his employee done in the course of his employment, means while engaged in the service of the employer while engaged generally in the employer’s work, as distinguished from acts done when the employee steps outside of his employment to do an act for himself, not connected with his employer’s business.

State statutes and decisions differ as to the types and scope of activities which fall within “course of employment”.

See also Deviation; Scope of employment.

Course of river. The course of a river is a line parallel with its banks. The term is not synonymous with the “current” of the river.

Course of the voyage. By this term is understood the regular and customary track, if such there be, which a ship takes in going from one port to another, and the shortest way.

Course of trade. What is customarily or ordinarily done in the management of trade or business. See also Course of business.

Course of vein. In mining, the “course of the vein” appearing on the surface is the course of its apex, which is generally inclined and undulated and departs more or less materially from the strike.

Course of vessel. In navigation, the “course” of a vessel is her apparent course, and not her heading at any given moment. It is her actual course.

Courses and distances. A method or form for describing real estate in deeds and mortgages by setting forth the distances in one direction as a boundary, followed by other distances and the direction thereof until the entire parcel has been described. See also Metes and bounds.

Court. A space which is uncovered, but which may be partly or wholly inclosed by buildings or walls. When used in connection with a street, indicates a short street, blind alley, or open space like a short street inclosed by dwellings or other buildings facing thereon.

A legislative assembly. Parliament is called in the old books a court of the king, nobility, and commons assembled. This meaning of the word has also been retained in the titles of some deliberative bodies, such as the “General Court” of Massachusetts, i.e., the legislature.

The person and suit of the sovereign; the place where the sovereign sojourns with his regal residence, wherever that may be. The English government is spoken of in diplomacy as the court of St. James, because the palace of St. James is the official palace.

An organ of the government, belonging to the judicial department, whose function is the application of the laws to controversies brought before it and the public administration of justice. The presence of a sufficient number of the members of such a body regularly convened in an authorized place at an appointed time, engaged in the full and regular performance of its functions. A body in the government to which the administration of justice is delegated. A body organized to administer justice, and including both judge and jury. An incorporeal, political being, composed of one or more judges, who sit at fixed times and places, attended by proper officers, pursuant to lawful authority, for the administration of justice. An organized body with defined powers, meeting at certain times and places for the hearing and decision of causes and other matters brought before it, and aided in this, its proper business, by its proper officers, viz., attorneys and counsel to present and manage the business, clerks to record and attest its acts and decisions, and ministerial officers to execute its commands, and secure due order in its proceedings.

The words “court” and “judge,” or “judges,” are frequently used in statutes as synonymous. When used with reference to orders made by the court or judges, they are to be so understood.

General Classification

Courts may be classified and divided according to several methods, the following being the more usual:

Appellate courts. Such courts review decisions of inferior courts, and may be either intermediate appellate courts (court of appeals) or supreme courts. See Court of Appeals; Supreme Court.

Article III courts. See Constitutional court.

Civil and criminal courts. The former being such as are established for the adjudication of controversies between individual parties, or the ascertainment, enforcement, and redress of private rights; the latter, such as are charged with the administration of the criminal laws, and the punishment of wrongs to the public. While in some states there are both civil and criminal courts, in most states the trial court is a court of general jurisdiction (q.v.).

Court above, court below. In appellate practice, the “court above” is the one to which a cause is removed for review, whether by appeal, writ of error, or certiorari; while the “court below” is the one from which the case is removed (normally the trial court).

Court in banc (en banc). A meeting of all the judges of a court, usually for the purposes of hearing arguments on demurrers, motions for new trial, etc., as distinguished from sessions of the same court presided over by a single judge or panel of judges. See Full court, infra.

Court of competent jurisdiction. One having power and authority of law at the time of acting to do the particular act. One having jurisdiction under the Constitution and/or laws to determine the question in controversy.

Court of general jurisdiction. A court having unlimited trial jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, though its judgments and decrees are subject to appellate review. A superior court; a court having full jurisdiction within its own jurisdictional area.

Court of limited jurisdiction. Court with jurisdiction over only certain types of matters; e.g., probate or juvenile court. When a court of general jurisdiction proceeds under a special statute, it is a "court of limited jurisdiction" for the purpose of that proceeding, and its jurisdiction must affirmatively appear.

Court of original jurisdiction. Courts where actions are initiated and heard in first instance.

Court of record. A court that is required to keep a record of its proceedings, and that may fine or imprison. Such record imports verity and cannot be collaterally impeached.

De facto court. One established, organized, and exercising its judicial functions under authority of a statute apparently valid, though such statute may be in fact unconstitutional and may be afterwards so adjudged; or a court established and acting under the authority of a de facto government.

Equity courts and law courts. The former being such as possess the jurisdiction of a chancellor, apply the rules and principles of chancery (i.e., equity) law, and follow the procedure in equity; the latter, such as have no equitable powers, but administer justice according to the rules and practice of the common law. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, however, equity and law have been merged at the procedural level, and as such this distinction no longer exists in the federal courts nor in most state courts, though equity substantive jurisprudence remains viable. Fed.R.Civ. P. 2. See Court of Chancery; Court of Equity.

Full court. A session of a court, which is attended by all the judges or justices composing it. See Court in bank, infra.

Spiritual courts. In English law, the ecclesiastical courts, or courts Christian. 3 Bl.Comm. 61. See Ecclesiastical courts.

Superior and inferior courts. The former being courts of general original jurisdiction in the first instance, and which exercise a control or supervision over a system of lower courts, either by appeal, error, or certiorari; the latter being courts of small or restricted jurisdiction, and subject to the review or correction of higher courts. Sometimes the former term is used to denote a particular group or system of courts of high powers, and all others are called "inferior courts".

Trial courts. Generic term for courts where civil actions or criminal proceedings are first commenced at the state level such are variously called municipal, circuit, superior, district, or county courts. At the federal level, the U.S. district courts are the trial courts.

As to the division of courts according to their jurisdiction, see Jurisdiction.

As to several names or kinds of courts not specifically described in the titles immediately following, see Admiralty court; Appellate court; Arches Court; Bankruptcy proceedings (Bankruptcy courts); Circuit courts; City courts; Commonwealth court; Consistory courts; Constitutional court; Consular courts; County (County courts); Court-baron; Court of High Commission; Customs Court; District (District courts); Ecclesiastical courts; Family court; Federal courts; Forest courts; Instance court; Insular courts; International Court of Justice; Justice's courts; Kangaroo court; Land court; Legislative courts; Maritime court; Mayor's court; Military courts; Moot court; Municipal courts; Orphan's courts; Police court; Prerogative court; Prize courts; Probate court; Superior (Superior courts); Supreme court; Surrogate court; Tax court; United States Courts.

Court administrator. Generally, a non-judicial officer whose responsibility is the administration of the courts as to budgets, calendars and non-judicial personnel.

Court-baron. In English law, a court which, although not one of record, was incident to every manor, and could not be severed therefrom. It was ordained for the maintenance of the services and duties stipulated for by lords of manors, and for the purpose of determining actions of a personal nature, where the debt or damage was under forty shillings. Customary court-baron was one appertaining entirely to copyholders. 3 Bl.Comm. 33. Freeholders' court-baron was one held before the freeholders who owed suit and service to the manor. It was the court-baron proper.

Court calendar. A list of cases for trial or appellate argument prepared for a given period of time as a week, month or even a term of the sitting of the court. Such may include scheduling of motions and other pretrial matters. See also Docket.

Court Christian. The ecclesiastical courts in England often so called, as distinguished from the civil courts. 1 Bl.Comm. 83; 3 Bl.Comm. 64.

Court commissioner. A person appointed by a judge to take testimony and find facts or to carry out some specific function connected with a case, such as selling property which is the subject of a petition to partition. See also Commissioner; Court administrator; Master; Referee.

Court en banc /kùrt om böŋk/. See Court (Court in bank).

Courtesies. See Curtseys.

Court for Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved. In England, a court established by St. 11 & 12, Vict., c. 78, composed of such of the judges of the superior courts of Westminster as were able to attend, for the consideration of questions of law reserved by any judge in a court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or quarter sessions, before which a prisoner had been found guilty by verdict. Such questions are stated in the form of a special case. 4 Steph. The trial judge was empowered to "state a case" for the opinion of that court. He could not be compelled to do so, and only a question of law could be raised. If the court considered that the point had been wrongly decided at the trial, the conviction would be quashed. By Act of 1907, the Court of Criminal Appeal was created and the Court for Crown Cases Reserved was abolished.

Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. This court was established by St. 20 & 21, Vict., c. 85, which transferred to it all jurisdiction then exercisable by any ecclesiastical court in England, in matters matrimonial, and also gave it new powers. The court consisted of the lord chancellor, the three chiefs, and three senior puisne judges of the common-law courts, and the judge ordinary, who together constituted, and still constitute, the "full court." The judge ordinary heard almost all matters in the first instance. By the Judicature act, 1873, § 3, the jurisdiction of the court was transferred to the supreme court of judicature.

Court for the Correction of Errors. The name of a court having jurisdiction for review, by appeal or writ of error. The name was formerly used in New York and South Carolina.

Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors. In English law, a local court which had its sitting in London only, which received the petitions of insolvent debtors, and decided upon the question of granting a discharge. Abolished by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861.

Court for the Trial of Impeachments. A tribunal empowered to try any officer of government or other person brought to its bar by the process of impeachment. In England, the house of lords constitutes such a court; in the United States, the senate; and in the several states, usually the upper house of the legislative assembly. See also Impeachment.

Court-hand. In old English practice, the peculiar hand in which the records of courts were written from the earliest period down to the reign of George II. Its characteristics were great strength, compactness, and undeviating uniformity; and its use undoubtedly gave to the ancient record its acknowledged superiority over the modern, in the important quality of durability.

The writing of this hand, with its peculiar abbreviations and contractions, constituted, while it was in use, an art of no little importance, being an indispensable part of the profession of "clerkship," as it was called. Two sizes of it were employed, a large and a small hand; the former, called "great court-hand," being used for initial words or clauses, the placita of records, etc.

Court-house. The building occupied for the public sessions of a court, with its various offices. The building occupied and appropriated according to law for the holding of courts.

Court, Hundred. See Hundred Court.

Court-Lands. Domains or lands kept in the lord's hands to serve his family.

Court-Leet. The name of an English court of record held once in the year, and not oftener, within a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the leet; being the king's court granted by charter to the lords of those hundreds or manors. Its office was to view the frankpledges, that is, the freemen within the liberty; to present by jury crimes happening within the jurisdiction; and to punish trivial misdemeanors.

Court-Martial. A military court, convened under authority of government and the Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq., for trying and punishing offenses committed by members of the armed forces. Courts-martial are courts of law and courts of justice although they are not part of the Federal Judiciary established under Article III of the Constitution. They are legislative criminal courts established in the Armed Forces under the Constitutional Power of Congress to regulate the Armed Forces. Their jurisdiction is entirely penal and disciplinary. They may be convened by the President, Secretaries of Military Departments and by senior commanders specifically empowered by law. The type (e.g. summary, special, or general) and composition of courts-martial varies according to the gravity of offenses. Courts-martial are ad hoc bodies empowered to try only persons who are made constitutionally amenable to such trial by Act of Congress for offenses punishable under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Generally they are designed to deal with the internal affairs of the military when summary command discipline is inadequate to achieve corrective results, but they have concurrent jurisdiction with civil courts over a wide range of civil offenses. Appeals are to the Court of Military Appeals.

Court of Admiralty. A court having jurisdiction of admiralty and maritime matters; such jurisdiction being possessed by federal district courts. See Admiralty Court.

High Court of Admiralty. In English law, this was a court which exercised jurisdiction in prize cases, and had general jurisdiction in maritime causes, on the instance side. Its proceedings were usually in rem, and its practice and principles derived in large measure from the civil law. The judicature acts of 1873 transferred all the powers and jurisdiction of this tribunal to the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the high court of justice. The Justice Act of 1970 established a new Admiralty Court as part of the Queens Bench Division of the High Court.

Court of Ancient Demesne. In English law, a court of peculiar constitution, held by a bailiff appointed by the king, in which alone the tenants of the king's demesne could be impleaded.

Court of Appeal, His Majesty's. Formerly, the chief appellate tribunal of England. It was established by the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875, and invested with the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the court of appeal in chancery, the exchequer chamber, the judicial committee of the privy council in admiralty and lunacy appeals, and with general appellate jurisdiction from the high court of justice.

Court of Appeals. In those states with courts of appeals, such courts are usually intermediate appellate courts. In New York, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, however, such are the highest appellate courts. In West Virginia the Supreme Court of Appeals is the court of last resort. Alabama, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Texas have Courts of Criminal Appeals, with those in Oklahoma and Texas being the highest appellate courts for criminal matters. Alabama, Oklahoma, and Texas have Courts of Civil Appeals, which are intermediate appellate courts. See also Supreme Court.

The United States is divided into eleven federal judicial circuits in each of which there is established a court of appeals known as the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 41, 43. See Courts of Appeals, U.S.

Court of Appeals in Cases of Capture. A court erected by act of congress under the articles of confederation which preceded the adoption of the Constitution. It had appellate jurisdiction in prize causes.

Court of Archdeacon. The most inferior of the English ecclesiastical courts, from which an appeal generally lies to that of the bishop (i.e., to the Consistory Court). Such court is now virtually obsolete.

Court of Assistants. Formerly a court in Massachusetts organized in 1630, consisting of the governor, deputy governor and assistants. It exercised the whole power both legislative and judicial of the colony and an extensive chancery jurisdiction as well.

Court of Attachments. In old English law, the lowest of the three courts held in the forests. It has fallen into total disuse. It was held before the verderers of the forest once in every forty days, to view the attachments by the foresters for offences against the vert and the venison. It had cognizance only of small trespasses. Larger ones were enrolled and heard by the Justices in Eyre.

Court of Audience. An ecclesiastical court, in which the priories once exercised in person a considerable part of their jurisdiction. Such courts, which existed in England for both the Archbishop of Canterbury and York, have long since been disused.

Court of Augmentation. An English court created in the time of Henry VIII (27 Hen. VIII, c. 27), with jurisdiction over the property and revenue of certain religious foundations, which had been made over to the king by act of parliament, and over suits relating to the same. It was called "The Court of the Augmentations of the Revenues of the King's Crown" (from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown derived from the suppression of the monasteries), and was dissolved in the reign of Queen Mary, but the Office of Augmentation remained long after; the records of the court are now at the Public Record Office.

Court of Bankruptcy. Federal court established in each judicial district, as an adjunct to the U.S. district court for such district, with general jurisdiction over bankruptcy matters. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 151, 1471.

Court of Brotherhood. In old English law, an assembly of the mayors or other chief officers of the principal towns of the Cinque Ports in England, originally administering the chief powers of those ports, now almost extinct.

Court of Chancery. A court administering equity and proceeding according to the forms and principles of equity. In England, prior to the judicature acts, the style of the court possessing the largest equitable powers and jurisdiction was the "high court of chancery." In some of the United States, the title "court of chancery" is applied to a court possessing general equity powers, distinct from the courts of law. Courts of chancery (equity courts) have been abolished by all states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure. See also Court of Equity.

Court of Chivalry. In English law, the name of a court anciently held as a court of honor merely, before the earl-marshall, and as a criminal court before the lord high constable, jointly with the earl-marshall. But it is also said that this court was held by the constable, and after that office reverted to the crown in the time of Henry VIII, by the earl-marshall. It had jurisdiction as to contracts and other matters touching deeds of arms or war, as well as pleas of life or member. It also corrected encroachments in matters of coat-armor, precedency, and other distinctions of families. It is now grown entirely out of use (except for one case in 1955, after a lapse of 200 years) on account of the feebleness of its jurisdiction and want of power to enforce its judgments, as it could neither fine nor imprison, not being a court of record.

Court of Civil Appeals. Such exist as intermediate appellate courts in Alabama, Oklahoma, and Texas. The Texas Court of Civil Appeals has appellate jurisdiction of cases decided in district and county courts.

Court of Claims. This federal court was established on February 25, 1855 (10 Stat. 612; 28 U.S.C.A. § 171); its jurisdiction is set forth in 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1491–1506. The court has original jurisdiction to render judgment upon any claim against the United States founded upon the Constitution, upon any act of Congress, upon any regulation of an executive department, upon any expressed or implied contracts with the United States, and for liquidated or unliquidated damages in cases not sounding in tort. A growing number of states also have courts of claims (e.g. Illinois, Michigan, New York, Ohio).

Court of Common Pleas. In English law, one of the four superior courts at Westminster, which existed up to the passing of the judicature acts. It was also styled the "Common Bench". It was one of the courts derived from the breaking up of the aula regis, and had exclusive jurisdiction of all real actions and of communia placita, or common pleas, i.e., between subject and subject. It was presided over by a chief justice with four puisne judges (later five, by virtue of 31 & 32, Vict., c. 125, 1851, subsec. 8). Appeals lay ancienly to the king's bench, but afterwards to the exchequer chamber. See 3 Bl.Comm. 37, et seq. Its jurisdiction was altogether confined to civil matters, having no cognizance in criminal cases, and was concurrent with that of the queen's bench and exchequer in personal actions and ejectment. In the United States, such courts exist in Pennsylvania wherein all civil and criminal actions are begun (except such as are brought before courts of inferior jurisdiction). Most such courts have been abolished, however, their jurisdiction being transferred to district, circuit, or superior courts.

Court of Conciliation. A court which proposes terms of adjustment, so as to avoid litigation; e.g. conciliation between debtor and creditor over disputed debt. May also function to aid in resolving marital disputes. See also Small Claims Court.

Court of Conscience. The same as courts of request (q.v.). This name was also frequently applied to the courts of equity or of chancery, not as name but as a description. See also Conscience.

Court of Convocation. In English ecclesiastical law, a court, or assembly, comprising all the high officials of each province and representatives of the minor clergy. It was in the nature of an ecclesiastical parliament; and, so far as its judicial functions extend, it had jurisdiction of cases of heresy, schism, and other purely ecclesiastical matters. An appeal was to the king in council.

Court of County Commissioners. In some states, a court of record in each county.

Court of Criminal Appeals. See Court of Appeals.

Court of Delegates. An English tribunal composed of delegates appointed by royal commission, and formerly the great court of appeal in all ecclesiastical causes. The powers of the court were, by 2 & 3 Wm. IV, c. 92, transferred to the privy council. 3 Bl. Comm. 66. A commission of review was formerly granted, in extraordinary cases, to revise a sentence of the court of delegates, when that court had apparently been led into material error.

Court of Equity. A court which has jurisdiction in equity, which administers justice and decides controversies in accordance with the rules, principles, and precedents of equity, and which follows the forms and procedure of chancery; as distinguished from a court having the jurisdiction, rules, principles, and practice of the common law. Equity courts have been abolished in all states which have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure; law and equity actions having been merged procedurally into a single form of "civil action". Fed.R. Civil P. 2. See also Court of Chancery.

Court of Error. An expression formerly applied especially in England to the court of exchequer chamber and the house of lords, as taking cognizance of error brought. It was formerly applied in some of the United States (e.g. Connecticut) to the court of last resort in the state; and in its most general sense denotes any court having power to review the decisions of lower courts on appeal, error, certiorari, or other process. See Court of Appeals.

Court of Errors and Appeals. Formerly, the court of last resort in the states of New Jersey and New York.

Court of Exchequer /kôrd av ekshēkər/. In English law, a very ancient court of record, set up by William the Conqueror as a part of the aula regis, and afterwards one of the four superior courts at Westminster. It was, however, inferior in rank to both the king's bench and the common pleas. It was presided over by a chief baron and four puisne barons. It was originally the king's treasury, and was charged with keeping the king's accounts and collecting the royal revenues. But pleas between subject and subject were customarily heard there, until this was forbidden by the Articula super Chartas (1290), after which its jurisdiction as a court only extended to revenue cases arising out of the non-payment or withholding of debts to the crown. But the privilege of suing and being sued in this court was extended to the king's accountants, and later, by the use of a convenient fiction to the effect that the plaintiff was the king's debtor or accountant, the court was thrown open to all suitors in personal actions. The exchequer had formerly both an equity side and a common-law side, but its equity jurisdiction was taken away by the statute 5, Vict., c. 5 (1842), and transferred to the court of chancery. The judicature act (1873) transferred the business and jurisdiction of this court to the "Exchequer Division" of the "High Court of Justice" and by Orders in Council under Sec. 32 of that Act the Exchequer Division was in turn merged in the Queen's Bench Division.

Court of Exchequer Chamber /kôrd av ekshēkər chéymbar/ . The name of a former English court of appeal, intermediate between the superior courts of common law and the house of lords. When sitting as a court of appeal from any one of the three superior courts of common law, it was composed of judges of the other two courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 56, 57. By the judicature act (1873) the jurisdiction of this court was transferred to the court of appeal.

Court of Faculties /kôrd av fækralítəz/ . A tribunal of the archbishop in England. It does not hold pleas in any suits, but grants special dispensations, and creates rights to pews, monuments, and other mortuary matters. It has also various other powers as given by the Ecclesiastical Licenses Act of 1533.

Court of First Instance. A court of original or primary jurisdiction, e.g. trial court. Courts of this title may be found in the jurisprudence of the Philippine Islands.

Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace. Formerly, a court of criminal jurisdiction in New Jersey.

In English law, a court of criminal jurisdiction held in each county once in every quarter of a year, but in the county of Middlesex twice a month. When held at other times than quarterly, the sessions were called "general sessions of the peace." Quarter sessions were abolished by the Courts Act of 1971, with most jurisdiction transferred to the Crown Court (q.v.).

Court of General Sessions. The name given in some states to a court of general original jurisdiction in criminal cases.

Court of Great Sessions in Wales. A court formerly held in Wales; abolished by 11 Geo. IV, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 70 (1830) and the Welsh judicature incorporated with that of England.

Court of Guestling. In old English law, an assembly of the members of the Court of Brotherhood (supra) together with other representatives of the corporate members of the Cinque Ports, invited to sit with the mayors of the seven principal towns.
Court of High Commission. In English law, an ecclesiastical court of formidable jurisdiction, for the vindication of the peace and dignity of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offenses, contempt, and enormities. 3 Bl.Com. 67. It was erected by St. 1 Eliz., c. 1 (1588), and abolished by 16 Car. I, c. 11 (1688).

Court of Honor. In old English law, a court having jurisdiction to hear and redress injuries or affronts to a man's honor or personal dignity, of a nature not cognizable by the ordinary courts of law, or encroachments upon his rights in respect to heraldry, coat-armor, right of precedence, and the like. It was one of the functions of the Court of Chivalry (q.v.) in England to sit and act as a court of honor. 3 Bl. Comm. 104.

The name is also given in some European countries to a tribunal of army officers more or less distinctly recognized by law as a "court" convened for the purpose of inquiring into complaints affecting the honor of brother officers and punishing derelictions from the code of honor and deciding on the causes and occasions for fighting duels, in which officers are concerned, and the manner of conducting them.

Court of Hustings. In English law, the county court of London, held before the mayor, recorder, and sheriff, but of which the recorder, is, in effect, the sole judge. No actions can be brought in this court that are merely personal. Since the abolition of all real and mixed actions except ejectment, the jurisdiction of this court has fallen into comparative desuetude.

Formerly, a local court in some parts of Virginia.

Court of Inquiry. In English law, a court sometimes appointed by the crown to ascertain whether it be proper to resort to extreme measures against a person charged before a court-martial. Also a court for hearing the complaints of private soldiers.

In American law, formerly, a court constituted by authority of the articles of war, invested with the power to examine into the nature of any transaction of, or accusation or imputation against, any officer or soldier, when demanded by him. Rev.St. § 1342, arts. 115, 116. Repealed by Act June 4, 1920, c. 227, § 4, 41 Stat. 812. They were not strictly courts, having no power to try and determine guilt or innocence. They were rather agencies created by statute to investigate facts and report thereon. They could not compel the attendance of witnesses nor require them to testify.

In Texas when a judge of any county or district court of this state, acting in his capacity as magistrate, has good cause to believe that an offense has been committed against the laws of this state, he may summon and examine any witness in relation thereto in accordance with the rules hereinafter provided, which procedure is defined as a "Court of Inquiry".

Court of Justice Seat. In English law, the principal of the forest courts. Called also Court of the Chief Justice in Eyre (q.v.).

Court of King's (or Queen's) Bench. In English law, the supreme court of common law in the kingdom; merged in the high court of justice under the judicature act of 1873, § 16. It was one of the successors of the curia regis and received its name, it is said, because the king formerly sat in it in person. During the reign of a queen it was called the Queen's Bench, and during Cromwell's Protectorate it was called the Upper Bench.

Court of law. In a wide sense, any duly constituted tribunal administering the laws of the state or nation; in a narrower sense, a court proceeding according to the course of the common law and governed by its rules and principles, as contrasted with a "court of equity (q.v.)."

Court of Magistrates and Freeholders. The name of a court formerly established in South Carolina for the trial of slaves and free persons of color for criminal offenses.

Court of Marshalsea /kord av marshalsly/. In English law, the court or seat of the marshal. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the king's house, instituted to administer justice between the king's domestic servants. It had jurisdiction of all trespasses committed within the verge of the king's court, where one of the parties was of the royal household; and of all debts and contracts, when both parties were of that establishment. It was abolished by 12 & 13, Vict., c. 101, § 13 (1849).

Court of Military Appeals. This court was established pursuant to the act approved May 5, 1950, as amended (64 Stat. 129, 82 Stat. 178, 1342; 10 U.S.C.A. § 867), as the final appellate tribunal to review court-martial convictions of all the services. It is exclusively an appellate criminal court. The Court, consisting of three civilian judges appointed by the President, is called upon to exercise jurisdiction as to questions of law in all cases affecting a general or flag officer, or extending to death; questions certified to the Court by the Judge Advocates General of the armed services, and by the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation, acting for the Coast Guard; petitions by accused who have received a sentence of a year or more confinement, and/or a punitive discharge.

Court of Nisi Prius /kord av náysay práýo/. Though this term is frequently used as a general designation of any court exercising general, original jurisdiction in civil cases (being used interchangeably with "trial court"), it belonged as a legal title only to a court which formerly existed in the city and county of Philadelphia, and which was presided over by one of the judges of the supreme court of Pennsylvania. This court was abolished by the constitution of 1874. See Assize; Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius; Nisi prius.

Court of Ordinary. In Georgia such courts formerly had exclusive and general jurisdiction over probate of wills; granting letters testamentary, or of administration, and revocation of same; management, disposition and distribution of estate of decedents, idiots, lunatics and insane persons and of all such other matters and things as appertain or relate to same; appointment and removal of guardians of minors and persons of unsound mind and all controversies as to right of guardianship; receiving and hearing applications for homestead and exemption and granting same; and concurrently with judge of the county court, jurisdiction in binding out of orphans and apprentices, and all controversies between master and apprentice. The Probate Court now has jurisdiction over such matter.

Court of Orphans /kör'd əv ór-fánz/. In Maryland and Pennsylvania, a court, elsewhere known as a "Probate" or "Surrogates" court, with general jurisdiction over matters of probate and administration of estates, orphans, wards, and guardians.

Court of Oyer and Terminer /kör'd əv óýər ənd tármnər/. In England, formerly, a court for the trial of cases of treason and felony. The commissioners of assise and nisi prius were judges selected by the king and appointed and authorized under the great seal, including usually two of the judges at Westminster, and sent out twice a year into most of the counties of England, for the trial (with a jury of the county) of causes then depending at Westminster, both civil and criminal. They sat by virtue of several commissions, each of which, in reality, constituted them a separate and distinct court. The commission of oyer and terminer gave them authority for the trial of treasons and felonies; that of general gaol delivery empowers them to try every prisoner then in gaol for whatever offense, so that, altogether, they possessed full criminal jurisdiction. The assize courts have since been abolished and replaced by the Crown Court.

In American law, this name was generally used (sometimes, with additions) as the title, or part of the title, of a state court of criminal jurisdiction, or of the criminal branch of a court of general jurisdiction, being commonly applied to such courts as may try felonies, or the higher grades of crime. Such courts existed in Delaware and Pennsylvania. They were abolished in New York and New Jersey in 1895.

Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol (or Jall) Delivery /kör'd əv óýər ənd tármnər ənd jënəral jëyl dal-fər-i-vi/. In American law, formerly, a court of criminal jurisdiction in the state of Pennsylvania. It was held at the same time with the court of quarter sessions, as a general rule, and by the same judges. Pa.Const. art. 5, § 1.

In English law, formerly a tribunal for the examination and trial of criminals. Such jurisdiction is now in the Crown Court.

Court of Palace at Westminster. In England, this court had jurisdiction of personal actions arising within twelve miles of the palace at Whitehall. Abolished by 12 & 13 Vict., c. 101. See Court of the Steward and Marshal.

Court of Passage. In England, an inferior court, possessing a very ancient jurisdiction over causes of action arising within the borough of Liverpool. It appears to have been also called the "Borough Court of Liverpool." It had the same jurisdiction in admiralty matters as the Lancashire county court. Such court was abolished by the Courts Act of 1971.

Court of Peculars /kör'd əv pək-ə-wîl-ərz/. A spiritual court in England, being a branch of, and annexed to, the Court of Arches. It has a jurisdiction over all those parishes dispersed through the province of Canterbury, in the midst of other dioceses, which are exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the metropolitan only. All ecclesiastical causes arising within these peculiar or exempt jurisdictions are originally cognizable by this court, from which an appeal lies to the Court of Arches. Most of such courts have been abolished by legislation. See also Arches Court.

Court of Piepowdre /kör'd əv pï-pôw-dr/. (Also spelled Pipowder, Pie Powder, Py-Powder, Piedpouder, etc.) The lowest (and most expeditious) of the courts of justice known to the older law of England. It is supposed to have been so called from the dusty feet of the suitors. It was a court of record incident to every fair and market, was held by the steward, and had jurisdiction to administer justice for all commercial injuries and minor offenses done in that same fair or market (not a preceding one). An appeal lay to the courts at Westminster. This court long ago fell into disuse. 3 Bl.Comm. 32.

Court of Pleas. In England, a court of the county palatine of Durham, having a local common-law jurisdiction. It was abolished by the judicature act, which transferred its jurisdiction to the high court. 3 Bl. Comm. 79.

Court of Private Land Claims. A federal court created by act of Congress in 1891 (26 Stat. 854), to hear and determine claims by private parties to lands within the public domain, where such claims originated under Spanish or Mexican grants, and had not already been confirmed by Congress or otherwise adjudicated. The existence and authority of this court were to cease and determine at the end of the year 1895.

Court of Probate. In England, the name of a court established in 1857, under the probate act of that year (20 & 21 Vict., c. 77), to be held in London, to which court was transferred the testamentary jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts. The probate court was merged in the Supreme Court of Judicature in 1873, and its jurisdiction is now split between the Chancery and Family divisions.

In American law, a court existing in many states having jurisdiction over the probate of wills, the grant of administration, and the supervision of the management and settlement of the estates of deceivers, including the collection of assets, the allowance of claims, and the distribution of the estate. In some states the probate courts also have jurisdiction of the estates of minors, including the appointment of guardians and the settlement of their accounts, and of the estates of lunatics, habitual drunkards, and spendthrifts. And in some states these courts possess a limited jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases. They are also called in some jurisdictions "Orphans' courts" (e.g. Maryland, Pennsylvania) and "Surrogate's courts" (e.g. N.Y.).

Court of Pypowder, Py-Powder, or Py-Powders /kör'd əv pə-pôw-dr(ə)/. See Court of Piepowdre.

Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace. Formerly, a court of criminal jurisdiction in the state of Pennsyvania, having power to try misdemeanors, and exercising certain functions of an administrative nature.

Court of Queen's Bench. See Court of King's Bench.

Court of Record. See Court, supra.

Court of Regard. One of the forest courts, in England, held every third year, for the lawing or expeditation of dogs, to prevent them from running after deer. It has long since been obsolete. 3 Bl. Comm. 71, 72.

Court of Sessions. Courts of criminal jurisdiction existing in only a few states.

Court of Shepway. A court held before the lord warden of the Cinque Ports. A writ of error lay from the mayor and jurats of each port to the lord warden in this court, and thence to the queen’s bench. The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports was abolished by 18 & 19 Vict., c. 48.

Court of Special Sessions. A generic term, applicable to those courts which have no stated terms and are not continuous, but which are organized only for the trial of each particular case and become functus officio when judgment is rendered therein.

Court of Stannaries /kɔːrd ɔv stænəriəz/. In English law, a court established in Devonshire and Cornwall, for the administration of justice among the miners and tanners, that they might not be drawn away from their business to attend suits in distant courts. The stannary court was a court of record, with a special jurisdiction. By the Stannaries Court (Abolition) Act of 1896 their jurisdiction was transferred to country courts.

Court of Star Chamber. This was an English court of very ancient origin, but new-modeled by St. 3 Hen. VII, c. 1, and 21 Hen. VIII, c. 20, consisting of divers lords, spiritual and temporal, being privy councillors, together with two judges of the courts of common law, without the intervention of any jury. The jurisdiction extended legally over riots, perjury, misbehavior of sheriffs, and other misdemeanors contrary to the laws of the land, yet it was afterwards stretched to the ascertaining of all proclamations and orders of state, to the vindicating of illegal commissions and grants of monopolies; holding for honorable that which it pleased, and for just that which it profited, and becoming both a court of law to determine civil rights and a court of revenue to enrich the treasury. It was finally abolished by Car. I, c. 10, to the general satisfaction of the Habeas Corpus Act of 1860.

Court of Survey. A court for the hearing of appeals by owners or masters of ships, from orders for the detention of unsafe ships, made by the English board of trade, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, § 6.

Court of Sweinmote /kɔːrd ɔv swéynmɔːt/. (Spelled, also, Swainmote, Swain-gemote.) Saxon, swang, an attendant, a freeholder, and mote or gemote, a meeting. In England, one of the old forest courts, held before the verderers, as judges, by the steward, thrice in every year, the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. This court had jurisdiction to inquire into grievances and oppressions committed by the officers of the forest, and also to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments, certifying the cause, in turn, under the seals of the jury, in case of conviction, to the court of justice seat for the rendition of judgment.

Court of the Chief Justice in Eyre. In England, the highest of the courts of the forest, held every three years, by the chief justice, to inquire of purpurstresses or encroachments, assarts, or cultivation of forest land, claims to franchises, parks, warrens, and vineyards in the forest, as well as claims of the hundred, claims to the goods of felons found in the forest, and any other civil questions that might arise within the forest limits. But it had no criminal jurisdiction, except of offenses against the forest laws. It was called also the court of justice seat. After the Restoration, the forest laws fell into disuse. The office was abolished in 1817.

Court of the Clerk of the Market. An English court of inferior jurisdiction formerly held in every fair or market for the punishment of misdemeanors committed therein. The jurisdiction over weights and measures formerly exercised was taken away by Stat. 526 Will. IV, c. 63.

Court of the Coroner. In England, formerly a court of record to inquire, when any one died in prison, or came to a violent or sudden death, by what manner he came to his end. 4 Bl. Comm. 274. Such functions are now performed by the coroner or by a coroner’s inquest. See Coroner.

Court of the Counties Palatine. In English law, a species of private court which formerly appertained to the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham.

Court of the Duchy of Lancaster. In England, a court of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the duchy or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands helden of the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster. 3 Bl. Comm. 78. Though not formerly abolished, such court has not sat since 1835.

Court of the Earl Marshal. In the reign of William the Conqueror the marshal was next in rank to the constable, in command of the army. When the constable’s office ceased, his duties devolved upon the earl marshal. The military Court of the Constable was to be known as the Marshal’s Court, or, in its modern form, Court-Martial. Aside from its criminal jurisdiction, it had much to do with questions relating to fiefs and military tenures, though not to property rights involved therein. See Constable Court of Chivalry; Court-Martial.

Court of the Lord High Admiral. In the earlier part of the 14th century, the Admiral possessed a disciplinary jurisdiction over his fleet. After 1340 it is reasongable to suppose that the Admiral could hold an independent court and administer justice in piracy and other maritime cases. There were at first several admirals and several courts. From the early 15th century there was one Lord High Admiral and one Court of Admiralty.

Court of the Lord High Steward. In English law, a court formerly instituted for the trial, during the recess of parliament, of peers indicted for treason or felony, or for misprision of either. This court was not a permanent body, but was created when occasion required and for the time being, only; and the lord high steward, so constituted, with such of the temporal lords as may take the proper oath, and act, constituted the court. Privilege of peerage was abolished by Sec. 30 of the Criminal Justice Act of 1948.

Court of the Lord High Steward of the Universities. In English law, a court constituted for the trial of scholars or privileged persons connected with the university at Oxford or Cambridge who were indicted for treason, felony, or mayhem. 3 Bl.Comm. 83.

Court of the Official Principal. This court, the Court of the “Official Principal” of the Archbishop of Canterbury, is more commonly called the Arches Court, or Court of the Arches. See Arches Court.

Court of the Steward and Marshal. A high court, formerly held in England by the steward and marshal of the king’s household, having jurisdiction of all actions against the king’s peace within the bounds of the household for twelve miles, which circuit was called the “verge.” It had also jurisdiction of actions of debt and covenant, where both the parties were of the household. This court was created by Charles I, and abolished in 1849. It was held in the borough of Southwark, and was called also the “palace court,” having jurisdiction of all personal actions arising within twelve miles of the royal palace of Whitehall, exclusive of London.

Court of the Steward of the King’s Household. In English law, a court which had jurisdiction of all cases of treason, misprision of treason, murder, manslaughter, bloodshed, and other malicious strikings whereby blood is shed, occurring in or within the limits of any of the palaces or houses of the king, or any other house where the royal person is abiding. It was created by statute 33 Hen. VIII, c. 12, but long ago fell into disuse. 4 Bl.Comm. 276, 277.

Court of Wards and Liveries. A court of record, established in England in the reign of Henry VIII. For the survey and management of the valuable fruits of tenure, a court of record was created by St. 32 Hen. VIII, c. 46, called the “Court of the King’s Wards.” To this was annexed, by St. 33 Hen. VIII, c. 22, the “Court of Liveries;” so that it then became the “Court of Wards and Liveries.” This court was not only for the management of “wards,” properly so called, but also of idiots and natural fools in the king’s custody, and for licenses to be granted to the king’s widows to marry, and fines to be made for marrying without his license. It was abolished by St. 12 Car. II, c. 24.

Court packing plan. An attempt by President F. D. Roosevelt in 1937 to replace those justices of the U.S. Supreme Court who did not subscribe to his social philosophy with men whose views were consonant with his.

Court reporter. A person who transcribes by shorthand or stenographically takes down testimony during court proceedings, or at trial related proceedings such as depositions. If an appeal is to be taken wherein an official record is required, the reporter prepares an official transcript from his or her record. A reporter may also constitute the person responsible for publication of the opinions of the court; sometimes called “Reporter of Decisions”.

Court rolls. In England, the rolls of a manor, containing all acts relating thereto. While belonging to the lord of the manor, they are not in the nature of public books for the benefit of the tenant. Under the law of Property Act of 1922 copyholds became freeholds and manorial rights were extinguished subject to the provisions therein contained.

Court room. That portion of a courthouse in which the actual proceedings (i.e. trials, motions, etc.) take place. Compare Chamber.

Court rule. Regulations with the force of law governing practice and procedure in the various courts. They may cover all procedures in a trial court system (e.g. Federal Rules of Civil and Criminal Procedure), or govern only procedures before a specific court (e.g. U.S. Supreme Court Rules); or only certain aspects of procedure (e.g. Federal Rules of Evidence), or they may be so called housekeeping rules which govern internal court practices and procedures. Most states have adopted in whole, or substantially, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to govern their trial courts. Also, a growing number of states have adopted Rules of Criminal Procedure and Rules of Appellate Procedure modeled after the Federal Rules of Criminal and Appellate Procedure. In addition, a number of states have adopted Rules of Evidence patterned on the Federal Rules of Evidence.

Courts martial. See Court-martial.

Courts of Appeals, U.S. Intermediate appellate courts created by Congress in 1891 and known until 1948 as United States Circuit Courts of Appeals, sitting in ten numbered circuits and the District of Columbia. Normally cases are heard by divisions of three judges sitting together, but on certain matters all the judges of a circuit may hear a case. Courts of Appeals have appellate jurisdiction over most cases decided by United States District Courts and review and enforce orders of many federal administrative bodies. The decisions of the courts of appeals are final except as they are subject to discretionary review on appeal by the Supreme Court. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291. See also Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals.

Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius /kərts av əsəz ən ˈnɪsɪ prɪəs/. Courts in England composed of two or more commissioners, called “judges of assize” (or of “assize and nisi prius”), who were twice in every year sent by the king’s special commission, on circuits all round the kingdom, to try, by a jury of the respective counties, the truth of such matters of fact as were there under dispute in the courts of Westminster Hall. With the establishment of the Crown Court (1971), these courts were abolished.

Courts of Record. Those courts whose proceedings are permanently recorded, and which have the power to fine or imprison for contempt.

Courts of Request. Inferior courts in England, having local jurisdiction in claims for small debts, established in various parts of the kingdom by special acts of parliament. They were superseded in 1846 by the county courts.

Courts of the Forest. Courts held for the enforcement of the forest laws. See Forest Courts.
Courts of the Franchises. Jurisdictions in the early Norman period which rested upon royal grants—often assumed. Edward I, in 1274, sent out commissioners to enquire by what warrant different landowners were exercising their jura regalia. There were many varieties of lesser franchises. Some of these franchises were recognized as existing by the County Courts Acts, 1846–1888.

Courts of the United States. "Court of the United States" means any of the following courts: the Supreme Court of the United States, a United States court of appeals, a United States district court, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, the District Court of Guam, the District Court of the Virgin Islands, the United States Court of Claims, the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the Tax Court of the United States, the Customs Court, bankruptcy courts, and the Court of Military Appeals. 28 U.S. C.A. § 451. Also, the senate sitting as a court of impeachment.

Courts of Westminster Hall. The superior courts, both of law and equity, were for centuries fixed at Westminster, an ancient palace of the monarchs of England. Formerly, all the superior courts were held before the king’s capital jurisdiction of England, in the aula regis, or such of its palaces wherein his royal person resided, and removed with his household from one end of the kingdom to another. This was found to occasion great inconvenience to the suitors to remedy which it was made an article of the great charter of liberties, both of King John and King Henry III, that "common pleas should no longer follow the king’s court, but be held in some certain place," in consequence of which they have ever since been held (a few necessary removals in times of the plague excepted) in the palace of Westminster only.

Court system. The network of courts in a particular jurisdiction; e.g. trial, appellate, juvenile, land, etc., courts.

Courtyard. A corrupted form of "curtilage", signifying a space of land about a dwelling house, which not only might be inclosed, but within which appurtenant buildings and structures might be erected.

Cousin /ˈkʰʒən/. Kindred in the fourth degree, being the issue (male or female) of the brother or sister of one’s father or mother.

Those who descend from the brother or sister of the father of the person spoken of are called "paternal cousins", "maternal cousins" are those who are descended from the brothers or sisters of the mother. Cousins-german are first cousins.

First cousins. Cousins-german; the children of one’s uncle or aunt.

Quarter cousin. Properly, a cousin in the fourth degree; but the term has come to express any remote degree of relationship, and even to bear an ironical significatation in which it denotes a very trifling degree of intimacy and regard. Often corrupted into “cater” cousin.

Second cousins. Persons who are related to each other by descending from the same great-grandfather or great-grandmother. The children of one’s first cousins are his second cousins. These are sometimes called “first cousins once removed.”

Cousinage. See Cosenage.

Coustom. (Fr. Coutum.) Custom; duty; toll; tribute. See Custom and usage.

Coutoumier /ˈkʰwɑːt(ʒ)ɪˈmɛr/. (Otherwise spelled “Coutumier” or “Coutumier.”) In old French law, a collection of customs, unwritten laws, and forms of procedure. Two such volumes are of especial importance in juridical history, viz., the Grand Coutumier de Normandie, and the Coutumier de France or Grand Coutumier.

Couthutlaugh /ˈkʰwʌθʌlə/. A person who willingly and knowingly received an outlaw, and cherished or concealed him; for which offense he underwent the same punishment as the outlaw himself.

Couverture /ˌkʰuːvərˈtʃʊr/. In French law, the deposit ("margin") made by the client in the hands of the broker, either of a sum of money or of securities, in order to guaranty the broker for the payment of the securities which he purchases for the client.

Covenable /ˈkɵvənəbəl/ˌkɵvənəbəl//. A French word signifying convenient or suitable; as conveniently endowed. Anciently written "covenable."

Covenant /ˈkɵvənənt/. An agreement, convention, or promise of two or more parties, by deed in writing, signed, and delivered, by which either of the parties pledges himself to the other that something is either done, or shall be done, or shall not be done, or stipulates for the truth of certain facts. At common law, such agreements were required to be under seal. The term is currently used primarily with respect to promises in conveyances or other instruments relating to real estate.

In its broadest usage, means any contract.

The name of a common-law form of action ex contractu, which lies for the recovery of damages for breach of a covenant, or contract under seal.

General Classification

Covenants may be classified according to several distinct principles of division:

Absolute or conditional. An absolute covenant is one which is not qualified or limited by any condition.

Affirmative or negative. The former being those in which the party binds himself to the existence of a present state of facts as represented or to the future performance of some act; while the latter are those in which the covenantor obliges himself not to do or perform some act.

Declaratory or obligatory. The former being those which serve to limit or direct uses; while the latter are those which are binding on the party himself.

Dependent, concurrent, and independent. Covenants are either dependent, concurrent, or mutual and independent. The first depends on the prior performance of some act or condition, and, until the condition is performed, the other party is not liable to an action on his covenant. In the second, mutual acts are to be performed at the same time; and if one party is ready, and offers to perform his part, and the other neglects or refuses to perform his, he who is ready and offers has fulfilled his engagement, and may maintain an action for the default of the other, though it is not certain that either is obliged to do the first act. The third sort is where either party may recover damages from the other for the injuries he may have received by a breach of the covenants in his favor; and it is no excuse for the defendant to allege a breach of the covenants on the part of the plaintiff. Mutual and independent covenants are such as do not go to the whole consideration on both sides, but only to a part, and where separate actions lie for breaches on either side to recover damages for the injury sustained by breach.

Covenants are dependent where performance by one party is conditioned on and subject to performance by the other, and in such case the party who seeks performance must show performance or a tender or readiness to perform on his part; but covenants are independent when actual performance of one is not dependent on another, and where, in consequence, the remedy of both sides is by action.

Disjunctive covenants. Those which are for the performance of one or more of several things at the election of the covenantor or covenantee, as the case may be.

Executed or executory. The former being such as relate to an act already performed; while the latter are those whose performance is to be future.

Express or implied. The former being those which are created by the express words of the parties to the deed declaratory of their intention, while implied covenants are those which are inferred by the law from certain words in a deed which imply (though they do not express) them. An implied covenant is one which may reasonably be inferred from whole agreement and circumstances attending its execution. Anderson v. Britt, Ky., 375 S.W.2d 258, 260. Express covenants are also called covenants “in deed,” as distinguished from covenants “in law.”

General or specific. The former relate to land gen-early and place the covenantee in the position of a specialty creditor only; the latter relate to particular lands and give the covenantee a lien thereon.

Inherent and collateral. The former being such as immediately affect the particular property, while the latter affect some property collateral thereto or some matter collateral to the grant or lease. A covenant inherent is one which is conversant about the land, and knit to the estate in the land; as, that the thing demised shall be quietly enjoyed, shall be in repair, or shall not be aliened. A covenant collateral is one which is conversant about some collateral thing that doth nothing at all, or not so immediately, concern the thing granted; as to pay a sum of money in gross, etc.

Joint or several. The former bind both or all the covenants together; the latter bind each of them separately. A covenant may be both joint and several at the same time, as regards the covenants; but, as regards the covenantees, they cannot be joint and several for one and the same cause, but must be either joint or several only. Covenants are usually joint or several according as the interests of the covenantees are such; but the words of the covenant, where they are unambiguous, will decide, although,
where they are ambiguous the nature of the interests as being joint or several is left to decide.

Principal and auxiliary. The former being those which relate directly to the principal matter of the contract entered into between the parties; while auxiliary covenants are those which do not relate directly to the principal matter of contract between the parties, but to something connected with it.

Real. A real covenant is one which binds the heirs of the covenantor and passes to assignees or purchasers;
a covenant the obligation of which is so connected with the reality that he who has the latter is either titled to the benefit of it or is liable to perform it; a covenant which has for its object something annexed to, or inherent in, or connected with, land or other real property, and runs with the land, so that the grantee of the land is invested with it and may sue upon it for a breach happening in his time.

Transitive or intransitive. The former being those personal covenants the duty of performing which passes over to the representatives of the covenantor; while the latter are those the duty of performing which is limited to the covenantor himself, and does not pass over to his representative.

Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

Continuing covenant. One which indicates or necessarily implies the doing of stipulated acts successively or as often as the occasion may require; as, a covenant to pay rent by installments, to keep the premises in repair or insured, to cultivate land, etc.

Full covenants. As this term is commonly used, it includes: covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty, this last often taking the place of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and indeed in many states being the only covenant in practical use.

Restrictive covenants. See that title.

Separate covenant. A several covenant; one which binds the several covenants each for himself, but not jointly.

Usual covenants. An agreement on the part of a seller of real property to give the usual covenants bids him to insert in the grant covenants of “seisin,” “quiet enjoyment,” “further assurance,” “general warranty,” “right to convey,” and “against incumbrances.” Collectively they are called covenants for title to distinguish them from restrictive covenants.
See Covenants for title, below.

Specific Covenants

Covenants against incumbrances. A covenant that there are no incumbrances on the land conveyed. A stipulation against all rights to or interests in the land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate granted.

Covenant appurtenant. A covenant which is con-ected with land of the grantor, and not in gross. A covenant running with the land and binding heirs, executors and assigns of the immediate parties.
Covenant for further assurance. An undertaking, in the form of a covenant, on the part of the vendor of real estate to do such further acts for the purpose of perfecting the purchaser's title as the latter may reasonably require. This covenant is deemed of great importance, since it relates both to the vendor's title of and to the instrument of conveyance to the vendee, and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts necessary for supplying any defect in the former as to remove all objections to the sufficiency and security of the latter.

Covenant for possession. A covenant by which the grantee or lessee is granted possession.

Covenant for quiet enjoyment. An assurance against the consequences of a defective title, and of any disturbances thereupon. A covenant that the tenant or grantee of an estate shall enjoy the possession of the premises in peace and without disturbance by hostile claimants.

Covenants for title. Covenants usually inserted in a conveyance of land, on the part of the grantor, and binding him for the completeness, security, and continuance of the title transferred to the grantee. They comprise covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, or quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty.

Covenant in gross. Such as do not run with the land.

Covenant not to compete. An agreement, generally part of a contract of employment or a contract to sell a business, in which the covenantor agrees for a specific period of time and within a particular area to refrain from competition with the covenantee.

Covenant not to sue. A covenant by one who had a right of action at the time of making it against another person, by which he agrees not to sue to enforce such right of action.

Covenant of non-claim. A covenant formerly sometimes employed, particularly in the New England states, and in deeds of extinguishment of ground rents in Pennsylvania, that neither the vendor, nor his heirs, nor any other person, etc., shall claim any title in the premises conveyed.

Covenant of right to convey. An assurance by the covenantor that the grantor has sufficient capacity title and to convey the estate which he by his deed undertakes to convey.

Covenant of seisin. An assurance to the purchaser that the grantor has the very estate in quantity and quality which he purports to convey.

Covenant of warranty. An assurance by the grantor of an estate that the grantee shall enjoy the same without interruption by virtue of paramount title.

Covenant running with land. A covenant which goes with the land, as being annexed to the estate, and which cannot be separated from the land, and transferred without it. A covenant is said to run with the land, when not only the original parties or their representatives, but each successive owner of the land, will be entitled to its benefit, or be liable (as the case may be) to its obligation. Or, in other words, it is so called when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of the land. One which touches and concerns the land itself, so that its benefit or obligation passes with the ownership. Local Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n of Oklahoma City v. Eckrodt, 186 Okl. 660, 100 P.2d 261, 262. Essentials of a "covenant running with the land" are that the grantor and grantee must have intentended that the covenant run with the land, the covenant must affect or concern the land with which it runs, and there must be privity of estate between party claiming the benefit and the party who rests
App. 310, 224 N.W.2d 67, 73.

Covenant running with title. A covenant which goes with the title. Stipulation in a lease granting to lessee the option of renewing it for another specified period was such a covenant. See also Covenants for title, supra.

Covenant to convey. A covenant by which the cove-nantor agrees to convey to the covenantee a certain estate, under certain circumstances.

Covenant to renew. An executory contract, giving lessee the right to renew on compliance with the terms specified in the renewal clause, if any, or, if none, on giving notice, prior to termination of the lease, of his desire to renew, whereupon the contract becomes executed as to him.

Covenant to stand seised. A conveyance adapted to the case where a person seised of land in possession, reversion, or vested remainder, proposes to convey it to his wife, child, or kinsman. In its terms it consists of a covenant by him, in consideration of his natural love and affection, to stand seised of the land to the use of the intended transferee. Before the statute of uses this would merely have raised a use in favor of the covenantee; but by that act this use is converted into the legal estate, and the covenant therefore operates as a conveyance of the land to the covenantee.
It is now almost obsolete.

Covenantee /kævəntənti/. The party to whom a covenant is made.

Covenantor /kævənɔntər/. The party who makes a covenant.

Covenants performed. In Pennsylvania practice, this was the name of a plea to the action of covenant whereby the defendant, upon informal notice to the plaintiff, was allowed to give anything in evidence which he might have pleaded. With the addition of the words "abuse hoc" it amounted to a denial of the allegations of the declaration; and the further addition of "with leave," etc., imported an equitable defense, arising out of special circumstances, which the defendant meant to offer in evidence. This plea was abolished in 1887.

Covent. A contraction, in the old books, of the word "convent."

Coventry Act. The name given to the statute 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 1, which provided for the punishment of assaults with intent to maim or disfigure a person. It was so named from its being occasioned by an assault on Sir John Coventry in the street as was supposed, for some obnoxious words uttered by him in parliament. 4 Bl.Comm. 207.
Cover. To protect by means of insurance; sometimes orally pending issuance of policy. See also Binder; Cover note.

The right of a buyer, after breach by a seller, to purchase goods in substitution for those due from the seller if such purchase is made in good faith and without unreasonable delay. The buyer may then recover as damages the difference between the cost of cover and the contract price plus any incidental and consequential damages but less expenses saved in consequence of the seller's breach. U.C.C. § 2-712(1), (2).

Coverage. In insurance, amount and extent of risk covered by insurer.

Cover-all clause. A provision in a document which purportedly embraces all eventualities of which the parties are aware as possibilities.

Cover into. The phrase "covered into the treasury," as used in acts of Congress and the practice of the United States Treasury Department, means that money has actually been paid into the treasury in the regular manner, as distinguished from merely depositing it with the treasurer. U. S. v. Johnston, 124 U.S. 236, 8 S.Ct. 446, 31 L.Ed. 389.

Cover note. Written statement by insurance agent that coverage is in effect. Distinguished from binder which is prepared by company.

Guile, artful cunning, trickiness. Not a legal term in this sense, though often used in connection with such terms as "fraud" and "artifice."

Craft union. A labor union all of whose members do the same kind of work (i.e. trade) such as plumbing or carpentry for different employers and industries.

Cranage. A liberty to use a crane for drawing up goods and wares of burden from ships and vessels, at any creek of the sea, or wharf, unto the land, and to make a profit of doing so. It also signifies the money paid and taken for the service.

Crank. A term vulgarly applied to a person of eccentric, ill-regulated, and unpractical mental habits; an ill-tempered person.

Crassus /krəssəs/. Large; gross; excessive; extreme. Crassa ignorantia /krəsə ignoralëns(i)yə/ gross ignorance.

Crassa negligentia /krəsə néglaøjëns(i)yə/ Gross neglect; absence of ordinary care and diligence.

Crastino /krəstənəu/. Lat. On the morrow, the day after. In old English law, the return-day of writs; because the first day of the term was always some saint's day, and writs were returnable on the day after.

Crave. To ask or demand; as to crave oyer. See Oyer.

Craven /krəvən/. In old English law, a word of disgrace and obloquy, pronounced on either champion, in the ancient trial by battle, proving recreant, i.e., yielding.

Crazy. Non-medical, lay expression or description for a broken, shattered, or deranged condition of the mind; insane.

Creamer. A foreign merchant, but generally taken for one who has a stall in a fair or market.

Creamus /kriəymesə/. Lat. We create. One of the words by which a corporation in England was formerly created by the king. 1 Bl. Comm. 473.

Creance /kreyˈən(t)sə/. In French law, a claim; a debt; also belief, credit, faith.

Creancer /kriənˈsər/. One who trusts or gives credit; a creditor.

Creansor /kriənˈsər/. A creditor.

Create. To bring into being; to cause to exist; to produce; as, to create a trust, to create a corporation.

Credentials /kroˈdɛnsələ/. Documentary evidence of a person's authority; commonly in the form of letters, licenses or certificates which on their face indicate the authority and capacity of the bearer.

Credibility. Worthiness of belief; that quality in a witness which renders his evidence worthy of belief. After the competence of a witness is allowed, the consideration of his credibility arises, and not before. As to the distinction between competency and credibility, see Competency. See also Character; Reputation.

Credible. Worthy of belief; entitled to credit. See Competency; Character; Reputation.
Credible person. One who is trustworthy and entitled to be believed. In law and legal proceedings, one who is entitled to have his oath or affidavit accepted as reliable, not only on account of his good reputation for veracity, but also on account of his intelligence, knowledge of the circumstances, and disinterested relation to the matter in question. Also one who is competent to testify. Burleson v. State, 131 Tex. Cr.R. 576, 100 S.W.2d 1019, 1020.

Credible witness. One who is competent to give evidence; also one who is worthy of belief. Burleson v. State, 131 Tex.Cr.R. 576, 100 S.W.2d 1019, 1020. See Credibility, supra.

Credibly informed. The statement in a pleading or affidavit, that one is “credibly informed and verily believes” such and such facts, means that, having no direct personal knowledge of the matter in question, he has derived his information in regard to it from authentic sources or from the statements of persons who are not only “credible,” in the sense of being trustworthy, but also informed as to the particular matter or conversant with it.

Credit. The ability of a business or person to borrow money, or obtain goods on time, in consequence of the favorable opinion held by the particular lender as to solvency and reliability. In re Ford, D.C.Wash., 14 F.2d 848, 849. Time allowed to the buyer of goods by the seller, in which to make payment for them. The correlative of a debt; that is, a debt considered from the creditor's standpoint, or that which is incoming or due to one. That which is due to a person, as distinguished from debt, that which is due by him. Claim or cause of action for specific sum of money.

"Credit" means the right granted by a creditor to a debtor to defer payment of debt or to incur debt and defer its payment. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, Section 1.301(7).

In accounting, as a noun, an entry on the right-hand side of an account. As a verb, to make an entry on the right-hand side of an account. Records increases in liabilities, owners' equity, and revenues; and decreases in assets and expenses.

In taxation, an amount which may be subtracted from the computed tax itself in contrast to a deduction which is generally subtracted from gross income to arrive at adjusted gross income or taxable income.

In motion pictures, the preliminary statement which gives the names of the players, producer, director, etc. May also refer to similar acknowledgments of contributors or assistants in authorship of books, production of plays, or the like.

Credit memorandum. A document used by a seller to inform a buyer that the buyer's account receivable is being credited (reduced) because of errors, returns, or allowances.

Credit mobilier /крèдит мòвбильèв/. A company or association formed for carrying on a banking business or for the construction of public works, building or railroads, operation of mines, or other such enterprises, by means of loans or advances on the security of personal property.

The word is susceptible of latitudinous construction. In its broad sense the word means one who has any legal liability upon a contract, express or implied, or in tort; in its narrow sense, the term is limited to one who holds a demand which is certain and liquidated. In statutes the term has various special meanings, depending upon context, purpose of statute, etc.

The term “creditor,” within the common-law and statutes that conveyances with intent to defraud creditors shall be void, includes every one having right to require the performance of any legal obligation, contract, or guaranty, or a legal right to damages growing out of contract or tort, and includes not merely the holder of a fixed and certain present debt, but every one having a right to require the performance of any legal obligation, contract, or guaranty, or a legal right to damages growing out of contract or tort, and includes one entitled to damages for breach of contract to convey real estate, notwithstanding the abandonment of his action for specific performance.

Under U.C.C., term includes a general creditor, a secured creditor, a lien creditor and any representative of creditors, including an assignee for the benefit of creditors, a trustee in bankruptcy, a receiver in equity and an executor or administrator of an insolvent debtor’s or assignor’s estate. U.C.C. § 1-201(12).

Under Bankruptcy Act, term includes entity that has a claim against the debtor that arose at the time of or before the order for relief concerning the debtor. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(9).

Classification

A creditor may be called a “simple contract creditor,” a “specialty creditor,” a “bond creditor,” or otherwise, according to the nature of the obligation giving rise to the debt.

Attaching creditor. One who has caused an attachment to be issued and levied on property of his debtor.

Certificate creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation who receives a certificate of indebtedness for the amount of his claim, there being no funds on hand to pay him.

Confidential creditor. A term sometimes applied to creditors of a failing debtor who furnished him with the means of obtaining credit to which his real circumstances did not entitle him, thus involving loss to other creditors not in his confidence.

Creditor at large. One who has not established his debt by the recovery of a judgment or has not otherwise secured a lien on any of the debtor’s property.

Domestic creditor. One who resides in the same state or country in which the debtor has his domicile or his property.

Double creditor. See that title.

Execution creditor. One who, having recovered a judgment against the debtor for his debt or claim, has also caused an execution to be issued thereon.

Foreign creditor. One who resides in a state or country foreign to that where the debtor has his domicile or his property.

General creditor. A creditor at large (supra), or one who has no lien or security for the payment of his debt or claim.

Joint creditors. Persons jointly entitled to require satisfaction of the same debt or demand.

Judgment creditor. See that title.

Junior creditor. One whose claim or demand accrued at a date later than that of a claim or demand held by another creditor, who is called correlatively the “senior” creditor. Creditor whose claim ranks below other creditors in rights to the debtor’s property. For example, a creditor with an unperfected security interest in a property is a junior creditor to one holding a perfected security interest.

Lien creditor. A creditor who has acquired a lien on the property involved by attachment, levy or the like and includes an assignee for benefit of creditors from the time of assignment, and a trustee in bankruptcy from the date of the filing of the petition or a receiver in equity from the time of appointment. U.C.C. § 9-301. See also Lien creditor.

Preferred creditor. See that title.

Principal creditor. One whose claim or demand very greatly exceeds the claims of all other creditors in amount is sometimes so called.

Secondary creditors. One whose claim is secondary to preferred creditor(s).

Secured creditor. See Secured creditor; also, Lien creditor, supra.
Single creditor. See that title.

Subsequent creditor. One whose claim or demand accrued or came into existence after a given fact or transaction, such as the recording of a deed or mortgage or the execution of a voluntary conveyance. See also Junior creditor, supra.

Warrant creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation to whom is given a municipal warrant for the amount of his claim, because there are no funds in hand to pay it.

Creditor beneficiary. A third person to whom performance of promise comes in satisfaction of legal duty. Where performance of a promise in a contract will benefit a person other than the promisor, that person is a creditor beneficiary if no purpose to make a gift appears from the terms of the promise in view of the accompanying circumstances and performance of the promise will satisfy an actual or supposed or asserted duty of the promisee to the beneficiary, or a right of the beneficiary against the promisee which has been barred by the Statute of Limitations or by a discharge in bankruptcy, or which is unenforceable because of the Statute of Frauds. Restatement of Contracts, § 133(1)(b).

Creditor's bill or suit. Equitable proceeding brought to enforce payment of debt out of property or other interest of debtor which cannot be reached by ordinary legal process. Sackin v. Kersting, 105 Ariz. 464, 466 P.2d 758. By use of the creditor's bill, a judgment creditor can reach any nonexempt property interest of the debtor that is alienable or assignable under state law. A suit by judgment creditor in equity for purpose of reaching property which cannot be reached by execution at law. A proceeding to enforce the security of a judgment creditor against the property or interests of his debtor. This action proceeds upon the theory that the judgment is in the nature of a lien, such as may be enforced in equity. Under rules of civil procedure, such action is simply a civil action in which demand is made for this type of equitable relief because of the merger of law and equity. Fed.R. Civ. P. 2.

Creditor's claim. Generic term to describe any right which a creditor has against his debtor. For recovery in bankruptcy, they must be provable. See also Claim.

Creditors' meeting. In bankruptcy, first meeting of creditors and equity security holders. Bankruptcy Act, § 341. See also Meeting of creditors.

Creditorum apellatione non hi tantum accipuntur qui pecuniam crediderunt, sed omnes quibus ex qualibet causa debetur /krédatórém ápeléshiyójóny nón há tyántam ákšípiyántár kwáy pákýüwúnýam kredédíránt, séd ónmíny zówbis éks kwéylabat kózó dábýdárr/.. Under the head of "creditors" are included, not alone those who have lent money, but all to whom from any cause a debt is owing.

Credit rating. The evaluation of a person's or business' ability and past performance in paying debts. Generally established by a credit bureau and used by merchants, suppliers and bankers to determine whether a loan should be granted or a line of credit given. Reports of credit ratings are regulated by the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act.

Credit report. A document from a credit bureau setting forth a credit rating and pertinent financial data concerning a person or a company and used by banks, merchants, suppliers and the like in evaluating a credit risk. Credit reports are regulated by the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act.

Creditrix /krédrétiks/. A female creditor.

Credits. A term of universal application to obligations due and to become due. Colbert v. Superior Confection Co., 154 Okl. 28, 6 P.2d 791, 793. See also Credit; Tax credit.

Credit sale. A sale in which the buyer is permitted to pay for the goods at a later time, as contrasted with a cash sale. Any sale with respect to which consumer credit is extended or arranged by the seller. The term includes any contract in the form of a bailment or lease if the bailee or lessee contracts to pay as compensation for use a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the aggregate value of the property and services involved and it is agreed that the bailee or lessee will become, or for no other or for a nominal consideration has the option to become, the owner of the property upon full compliance with his obligations under the contract. See also Installment sale.

Credit slip. A document generally given by stores and suppliers when a person returns merchandise and which permits the customer to purchase another item, or receive the equivalent in cash or open credit for future purchases, in return for the credit extended by the slip.

Credit union. Cooperative association that uses money deposited by a closed group of persons (e.g., fellow employees) and lends it out again to persons in the same group at favorable interest rates. Credit unions are commonly regulated by state banking boards or commissions.

Creed. The word "creed" has been defined as "confession or articles of faith," "formal declaration of religious belief," "any formula or confession of religious faith," and "a system of religious belief." Cummings v. Weinfeld, 177 Misc. 129, 30 N.Y.S.2d 36, 38.

Creek. A small stream less than a river. The term imports a recess, cove, bay, or inlet in the shore of a river, and not a separate or independent stream; though it is sometimes used in the latter meaning.

Cremation. The act or practice of reducing a corpse to ashes by means of extreme heat or fire. See also Dead body.

Cremement comitatus /kréméntám kómáté jádəs/. The increase of a county. The sheriffs of counties answered in their accounts for the improvement of the king's rents, above the viscontiel rents, under this title.

Crepare octulum /krépéríy ókýálam/. In Saxon law, to put out an eye; which had a pecuniary punishment of fifty shillings annexed to it.

Crepusculum /krépsúkälam/. Twilight. In the common law of burglary, this term means the presence of sufficient light to discern the face of a man; such light as exists immediately before the rising of the sun or directly after its setting.
Crescens et aeternum /mow-ndt-um/, n. In the civil law, a certain number of days assigned by a court, and required before a suit may be commenced, to give to each party an opportunity to deliberate as to whether to continue or discontinue the suit.

Crest. A term used in heraldry; it signifies the devices set over a coat of arms. High point of an action or process. Highest or upper edge, prominence, level, or limit.

Crest. A term used in heraldry; it signifies the devices set over a coat of arms. High point of an action or process. Highest or upper edge, prominence, level, or limit.

Crest. A term used in heraldry; it signifies the devices set over a coat of arms. High point of an action or process. Highest or upper edge, prominence, level, or limit.

Crest. A term used in heraldry; it signifies the devices set over a coat of arms. High point of an action or process. Highest or upper edge, prominence, level, or limit.

Cretan /kri-t-an/. Lat. In the civil law, a certain number of days allowed an heir to deliberate whether he would take the inheritance or not.

Crew. Usually referred to and is primarily thought of as those who are on board and aiding in the navigation; e.g. flight crew, ship's crew. The aggregate of seamen who man a ship or vessel, including the master and officers; or it may mean the ship's company, exclusive of the master, or exclusive of the master and all other officers.

Crew does not have an absolutely unvarying legal significance or any well-defined factual significance. Schantz v. American Dredging Co., C.C.A.Pa., 138 F.2d 534, 537.

Crew list. A list of the crew of a vessel or aircraft; one of a ship's or aircraft's papers. This instrument is required by statute and sometimes by treaties. 46 U.S.C.A. §§ 322, 323.

Crier /kr-ayr/. An officer of a court, who makes proclamations. His principal duties are to announce the opening of the court and its adjournment and the fact that certain special matters are about to be transacted, to announce the admission of persons to the bar, to call the names of jurors, witnesses, and parties, to announce that a witness has been sworn, to proclaim silence when so directed, and generally to make such proclamations of a public nature as the judges order. An auctioneer (cryan). See also Bailiff.

Criez la peez /kr-ia-z la p-ys/. Rehearse the concord, or peace. A phrase used in the ancient proceedings for levying fines. It was the form of words by which the justice before whom the parties appeared directed the serjeant or county in attendance to recite or read aloud the concord or agreement between the parties, as to the lands intended to be conveyed.

Crime. A positive or negative act in violation of penal law; an offense against the State or United States.

"Crime" and "misdemeanor", properly speaking, are synonymous terms; though in common usage "crime" is made to denote such offenses as are of a more serious nature.

A crime may be defined to be any act done in violation of those duties which an individual owes to the community, and for the breach of which the law has provided that the offender shall make satisfaction to the public. A crime or public offense is an act committed or omitted in violation of a law forbidding or commanding it, and to which is annexed, upon conviction, either, or a combination, of the following punishments: (1) death; (2) imprisonment; (3) fine; (4) removal from office; or (5) disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or office. While many crimes have their origin at common law, most have been created by statute; and, in many states, such have been codified. In addition, there are both state and federal crimes (as to the latter, see Title 18, U.S.C.A.).

See also Classification of crimes; Compounding crime; Continuing offense; Criminal; Degrees of crime; Federal crimes; Felony; Inchoate crimes; Instantaneous crime; Lesser included offense; Misdemeanor; Offense; Petty offense; Political crime; Serious crime.

General Classification

Crimes are classified for various purposes, the principal classification being that which divides crimes into felonies and misdemeanors. Other classifications are: (a) crimes which are in sentencing crimes mala prohibita; (b) infamous crimes versus crimes which are not infamous; (c) crimes involving moral turpitude versus those which do not involve moral turpitude; (d) major crimes versus petty crimes; and (e) common law crimes versus statutory crimes.

Capital crime. See Capital (adj.).

Common law crimes. Such crimes as are punishable by the force of the common law, as distinguished from crimes created by statute.

Continuous crime. One consisting of a continuous series of acts, which endures after the period of consummation, as, the offense of carrying concealed weapons. In the case of instantaneous crimes, the statute of limitations begins to run with the consummation, while in the case of continuous crimes it only begins with the cessation of the criminal conduct or act.

Crime against law of nations. Term which is understood to include crimes which all nations agree to punish such as murder and rape.

Crime against nature. Deviate sexual intercourse per os or per anum between human beings who are not husband and wife and any form of sexual intercourse with an animal. Model Penal Code, § 213.0. Crime of buggery or sodomy.

Crime against property. Term used to describe a crime, the object of which is property as contrasted with person; e.g. larceny.

Crime insurance. See Insurance.

Crime of omission. Any offense, the gravamen of which is the failure to act when there is an obligation to act. May amount to manslaughter if the failure is wilful, wanton and reckless.

Crime of violence. Crimes of violence include voluntary manslaughter, murder, rape, mayhem, kidnapping, robbery, burglary or housebreaking in the night-time, extortion accompanied by threats of violence, assault with a dangerous weapon or assault with intent to commit any offense punishable by imprisonment for more than one year, arson punishable as a felony, or an attempt or conspiracy to commit any of the foregoing offenses. 18 U.S.C.A. § 4251.

Crimes mala in se. Crimes mala in se embrace acts immoral or wrong in themselves, such as burglary, larceny, arson, rape, murder, and breaches of peace.

Crimes mala prohibita. Crimes mala prohibita embrace things prohibited by statute as infringing on others' rights, though no moral turpitude may attach, and constituting crimes only because they are so prohibited.

Felony. See Felony.

Infamous crime. A crime which entails infamy upon one who has committed it. The term "infamous"—i.e., without fame or good report—was applied at common law to certain crimes, upon the conviction of which a person became incompetent to testify as a witness, upon the theory that a person would not commit so heinous a crime unless he was so depraved as to be unworthy of credit. These crimes are treason, felony, and the crimen falsi. A crime punishable by imprisonment in the state prison or penitentiary, with or without hard labor, is an infamous crime, within the provision of the fifth amendment of the constitution, that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury." Mackin v. U. S., 117 U. S. 348, 8 S. Ct. 777, 29 L.Ed. 909; Brede v. Powers, 263 U. S. 4, 44 S.Ct. 8, 68 L.Ed. 132. It is not the character of the crime but the nature of the punishment which renders the crime "infamous." Whether an offense is infamous depends on the punishment which may be imposed therefor, not on the punishment which was imposed. United States v. Moreland, 258 U.S. 433, 42 S.Ct. 368, 370, 66 L.Ed. 700.

Misdemeanor. See Misdemeanor.

Organized crime. Term used to describe that form of crime which is the product of groups and organizations as contrasted with the crime planned and committed by individuals without organizational backing; gambling and narcotics are common subjects of organized crime.

Quasi crimes. This term embraces all offenses not crimes or misdemeanors, but that are in the nature of crimes. A class of offenses against the public which have not been declared crimes, but wrongs against the general or local public which it is proper should be repressed or punished by forfeitures and penalties. This would embrace all qui tam actions and forfeitures imposed for the neglect or violation of a public duty. A quasi crime would not embrace an indictable offense, whatever might be its grade, but simply forfeitures for a wrong done to the public, whether voluntary or involuntary, where a penalty is given, whether recoverable by criminal or civil process. Also, offenses for which some person other than the actual perpetrator is responsible, the perpetrator being presumed to act by command of the responsible party. Sometimes, injuries which have been unintentionally caused. D.W.I. (driving while intoxicated) offenses are sometimes classified as quasi crimes.

Statutory crimes. Those created by statutes, as distinguished from such as are known to, or cognizable by, the common law.

Crime statistic. Those figures compiled by federal and state agencies showing the incidence of various types of crime on a geographical basis.

Crimen /kráyman/. Lat. Crime. Also an accusation or charge of crime.

Crimen furti /kráyman fásday/. The crime or offense of theft.

Crimen incendii /kráyman anšéndiyay/. The crime of burning, which included not only the modern crime of arson, but also the burning of a man, a beast, or other chattel.

Crimen innominatum /kráyman anómanéydam/. The nameless crime; the crime against nature; sodomy or buggery.

Crimen raptus /kráyman ráptas/. The crime of rape.

Crimen roberie /kráyman rásbriyiy/. The offense of robbery.

Flagrants crimen; Locus criminis; Particeps criminis. See those titles.

Crimen falsi /kráyman fól(t)say/. Term generally refers to crimes in the nature of perjury or subornation of perjury; false statement, criminal fraud, embezzlement, false pretense, or any other offense which involves some element of deceitfulness, untruthfulness, or falsification bearing on witness' propensity to testify truthfully. Government of Virgin Islands v. Toto, C.A.Virgin Islands, 529 F.2d 278, 282.

At common law, any crime which rendered the perpetrator incompetent to be a witness, such as forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury and other crimes affecting the administration of justice.

In the civil law, the crime of falsifying which might be committed either by writing, as by the forgery of a will or other instrument; by words, as by bearing false witness, or perjury; and by acts, as by counterfeiting or adulterating the public money, dealing with false weights and measures, counterfeiting seals, and other fraudulent and deceitful practices.

Crimen falsi dicitur, cum quis illicitus, cui non fuerit ad hoc data auctoritas, de sigillo regis, rapto vel invento, brevia, cartasve consignaverit /kráyman fóltsay disadar, kám kwsí alíssadas, k(yúw)ən non fýwvarad əd hiyk déyda októrhræs, diy saJíllow riýjas, rásptow vél invéntov, brívyiya kartásvisív könsignéyvarat/. The crime of forgery is when any one illicitly, to whom power has not been given for such purposes, has signed wirts or charters with the king's seal, either stolen or found.

Crimen lēsc majestatis /kráyman lŷwij zi majæstátydás/. The crime of lēsc-majesty, or injuring majesty or royalty; high treason. The term was used by the older English law writers to denote any crime affecting the king's person or dignity.

It is borrowed from the civil law, in which it signified the undertaking of any enterprise against the emperor or the republic.

Crimen lēsc majestatis omnia alia crimina excedit quoad penam /kráyman lŷwij mæjæstátydás òmniya élyiya krimana aksiydad kwówæd piýnam/. The crime of treason exceeds all other crimes in its punishment.
Criminal, adj. That which pertains to or is connected with the law of crimes, or the administration of penal justice, or which relates to or has the character of crime. Of the nature of or involving a crime.

Criminal act. Commission of a crime.

Criminal action. Proceeding by which person charged with a crime is brought to trial and either found not guilty or guilty and sentenced. An action, suit, or cause instituted to punish an infraction of the criminal laws. See also Penal action.

Criminal anarchy. The doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by force and violence or other unlawful means. The advocacy of such doctrine has been made a felony. Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 47 S.Ct. 641, 71 L.Ed. 1095; 18 U.S.C.A. § 2384.

Criminal Appeals Act. Federal Act which allows the United States to appeal to a court of appeals from certain judgments, orders, or rulings of district courts. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3731.

Criminal attempt. Crime of a criminal attempt consists of an attempt to commit a crime and some step or overt act towards commission of the crime. State v. Harvill, 106 Ariz. 386, 476 P.2d 841. A substantial step towards a criminal offense with specific intent to commit that particular crime. A criminal attempt is defined as an overt act done in pursuance of intent to do a specific thing, tending to the end but falling short of complete accomplishment of it; such overt act must be sufficiently proximate to intended crime to form one of natural series of acts which intent requires for its full execution. Com. v. McCloskey, 234 Pa.Super. 577, 341 A.2d 500, 503. See also Attempt.

Criminal behavior. Conduct which causes any social harm which is defined and made punishable by law.

Criminal capacity. Legal qualifications necessary to commit a crime such as voluntariness of the act, age and mental condition. See also Capacity; Insanity.

Criminal charge. An accusation of crime, formulated in a written complaint, information, or indictment, and taking shape in a prosecution.

Criminal conspiracy. An agreement or confederacy of two or more persons to do a criminal or unlawful act or to do a lawful act in an unlawful or criminal manner. In many jurisdictions, an overt act in furtherance of the confederacy is required. See also Conspiracy.

Criminal contempt. A crime which consists in the obstruction of judicial duty generally resulting in an act done in the presence of the court; e.g., contumacous conduct directed to the judge or a refusal to answer questions after immunity has been granted. Conduct directed against the majesty of the law or the dignity and authority of the court or judge acting judiciously, whereas a "civil contempt" ordinarily consists in failing to do something ordered to be done by a court in a civil action for the benefit of an imposing party therein. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 16 Ill. App.3d 548, 306 N.E.2d 604, 605. See also Contempt.

Criminal conversation. Defilement of the marriage bed, sexual intercourse of an outsider with husband or wife, or a breaking down of the covenant of fidelity. Tort action based on adultery, considered in its aspect of a civil injury to the husband or wife entitling him or her to damages; the tort of debauching or seducing of a wife or husband. Often abbreviated to crim. con. Statutes in several states prohibit actions for criminal conversation. See Alienation of affections; Heart-balm statutes.

Criminal forfeiture. The taking by the government of property because of its involvement in a crime; e.g., an automobile used to smuggle narcotics; gun used in hunting without license or out of season. See also, Confiscate; Forfeiture; Seizure.

Criminal fraud. In taxation, the attempt to evade the payment of lawfully due taxes by willfully filing a false or fraudulent tax return. I.R.S. §§ 7201, 7207. In other contexts, the crime of larceny by false pretenses or larceny by trick.

Criminal gross negligence. Gross negligence is culpable or criminal when accompanied by acts of commission or omission of a wanton or willful nature, showing a reckless or indifferent disregard of the rights of others, under circumstances reasonably calculated to produce injury, or which make it improbable that injury will be occasioned, and the offender knows or is charged with knowledge of the probable result of his acts; "culpable" meaning deserving of blame or censure. See also Criminal negligence, infra.

Criminal insanity. See Insanity.

Criminal instrumentality rule. Where the wrong is accomplished by a crime, the crime and not the negligent act of the party which made it possible is the "proximate cause". Fouch v. Alexandria Bank & Trust Co., 177 Tenn. 348, 149 S.W.2d 76, 85.

Criminal intent. The intent to commit a crime; malice, as evidenced by a criminal act; an intent to deprive or defraud the true owner of his property. Includes those consequences which represent the very purpose for which an act is done, regardless of the likelihood of occurrence, or are known to be substantially certain to result, regardless of desire. May be general or specific intent; mens rea. See also Mens rea; Specific intent.

Criminal jurisdiction. Power of tribunal to hear and dispose of criminal cases.

Criminal laws. See Penal code; Penal laws.

Criminal libel. Criminal libel is the malicious publication of durable defamation. The malicious defamation of a person made public by any printing or writing tending to provoke him to wrath and to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse. It is a misdemeanor at common law and also under modern statutes unless it has been made a felony which is not common. Four elements are included: (1) defamation, (2) durable, (3) publication and (4) malice. It should be noted however that criminal sanctions for defamation of public officials is subject to same constitutional limitations as for civil actions. Garrison v. State of Louisiana, 379 U.S. 64, 85 S.Ct. 209, 13 L.Ed.2d 125. See also Libel.

Criminal mischief. A species of wilful and malicious injury to property made punishable by statutes in most jurisdictions.

Criminal motive. Something in the mind or that condition of the mind which incites to action or induces action, or gives birth to a purpose. Distinguishable from intent which represents the immediate object in view while motive is the ulterior intent.

Criminal negligence. That failure to use the degree of care required to avoid criminal consequences. Sometimes equated erroneously with wanton and reckless conduct. See Criminal gross negligence, supra; also, Negligence.

Criminal non-support. The wilful and unreasonable failure to support one whom the law requires a person to support (i.e. spouse and children). See Non-support; Support.

Criminal proceeding. One instituted and conducted for the purpose either of preventing the commission of crime, or for fixing the guilt of a crime already committed and punishing the offender; as distinguished from a "civil" proceeding, which is for the redress of a private injury. Strictly, a "criminal proceeding" means some step taken before a court against some person or persons charged with some violation of the criminal law. See also Criminal procedure.

Criminal process. Process which issues to compel a person to answer for a crime or misdemeanor; e.g. arrest warrant. See also Indictment; Information; Process; Warrant.

Criminal prosecution. An action or proceeding instituted in a proper court on behalf of the public, for the purpose of securing the conviction and punishment of one accused of crime.

Criminal syndicalism. Any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching or aiding and abetting the commission of crime of sabotage or unlawful acts of force and violence or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership or control or affecting any political change. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 45 S.Ct. 625, 69 L.Ed. 1138. The advocacy of sabotage, violence, terrorism, or other unlawful methods for revolutionary purposes. See also Syndicalism.

Criminal trespass. The offense committed by one who, without license or privilege to do so, enters or surreptitiously remains in any building or occupied structure. Model Penal Code, § 221.2. Offense is committed when a person without effective consent enters or remains on property or in building of another knowingly or intentionally or recklessly when he had notice that entry was forbidden or received notice to depart but failed to do so. Day v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 532 S.W.2d 302, 306.

Criminalistics. The science of crime detection, based upon the application of chemistry, physics, physiology, psychology, and other sciences. See also Crimino-logy.

Criminalite, /kʁi'manjɛlyadɛ̃/ . Lat. Criminality. This term is used, in distinction or opposition to the word "civilite," civilly, to distinguish a criminal liability or prosecution from a civil one.

Criminalization. The rendering of an act criminal and hence punishable by the government in a proceeding in its name.

Criminal justice system. The network of courts and tribunals which deal with criminal law and its enforcement.

Criminal law. The substantive criminal law is that law which for the purpose of preventing harm to society, (a) declares what conduct is criminal, and (b) prescribes the punishment to be imposed for such conduct. It includes the definition of specific offenses and general principles of liability. Substantive criminal laws are commonly codified into criminal or penal codes; e.g. U.S.C.A. Title 18, California Penal Code, Model Penal Code. Compare Criminal Procedure.

Criminal procedure. Criminal procedure is concerned with the procedural steps through which a criminal case passes, commencing with the initial investigation of a crime and concluding with the unconditional release of the offender. Generic term to describe the network of laws and rules which govern the procedural administration of criminal justice; e.g. laws and court rules (e.g. Rules of Criminal Procedure) governing arrest, search and seizure, bail, etc. Compare Criminal law. See also Code of criminal procedure.

Criminal protector. An accessory after the fact to a felony. Skelly v. U.S., 10th Cir., 76 F.2d 483. One who aids or harbors a felon after the commission of a crime.

Criminal registration. Statutes in certain jurisdictions require that persons who are convicted felons register with the police so that their presence in the community will be known at all times. Lambert v. California, 355 U.S. 225, 78 S.Ct. 240, 2 L.Ed.2d 228.

Criminal sanctions. Punishments attached to conviction of crimes such as fines, probation and sentences. See also Civil death.

Criminal statutes or codes. Federal and state laws enacted by legislative bodies which define, classify, and set forth punishments for specific crimes; e.g., Title 18 of United States Code; Model Penal Code.

Criminale morte extinguuntur /krímana mórdy ékstigvántar/. Crimes are extinguished by death.

Criminate. To charge one with crime; to furnish ground for a criminal prosecution; to implicate, accuse, or expose a person to a criminal charge. A witness cannot be compelled to answer any question which has a tendency to criminate him. See Self-

Criminology. The science which treats of crimes and their prevention and punishment.

Crimp. One who decoys and plunders sailors under cover of harboring them.

Crippling. The word "crippling" is equivalent of words "physical disability" and is defined as to deprive of use of limbs, particularly of leg or foot, to deprive of strength, activity or capability for service or use and to disable.

Crisis. A crucial point or situation in the course of things; a turning point; a very tense moment; an unstable or crucial time.

Critical stage. Critical stage in a criminal proceeding at which accused is entitled to counsel is one in which a defendant’s rights may be lost, defenses waived, privileges claimed or waived, or in which the outcome of the case is otherwise substantially affected. See Mempa v. Rhay, 198 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254. Test of "critical stage" of criminal proceeding as it relates to right to counsel is whether proceeding either requires or offers opportunity to take procedural step which will have prejudicial effects in later proceedings, or whether events transpire that are likely to prejudice ensuing trial. Miller v. State of S. C., D.C.S.C.; 309 F.Supp. 1287, 1290. See also Counsel, right to; Custodial interrogation.

Crocla /krós(h)iya/. The croiser, or pastoral staff.

Crociarius /krósíviýrias/. A cross-bearer, who went before the prelate.

Croft. A little close adjoining a dwelling-house, and inclosed for pasture and tillage or any particular use. A small place fenced off in which to keep farm-cattle. The word is now entirely obsolete.

Croises /kroýz/ /kroýlyyz/. Pilgrims; so called as wearing the sign of the cross on their upper garments. The knights of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, created for the defense of the pilgrims.

Croletir. A crofter; one holding a croft.

Crook. A person given to crooked or fraudulent practices; a swindler, sharper, thief, forger, or the like. Term "crook" has been defined as a professional rogue; a criminal; or one consorting with criminals; a person recognized by the authorities as belonging to the criminal class.

Crooked. Deviating from rectitude or uprightness; not straightforward; dishonest; wrong; perverse. A "crook" is a dishonest person; one who is crooked in conduct; a tricky or underhand schemer; a thief or swindler.

Crop. Products of the soil, as are annually grown, raised, and harvested. Growing crops are considered "goods" under U.C.C. § 2–105(1). Term includes fruit grown on trees, and grass used for pasturage. See also Growing crop.

Crop insurance. See Insurance.

Cropper. See Sharecropper.

Cross. A mark made by persons who are unable to write, to stand instead of a signature. A mark usually in the form of an X, by which voters are commonly required to express their selection. There are four principal forms of the cross: The St. Andrew’s cross, which is made in the form of an X; the Latin cross, †, as used in the crucifixion; St. Anthony’s cross, which is made in the form of a T; and the Greek cross, +, which is made by the intersection at right angles of lines at their center point.

As an adjective, the word is applied to various demands and proceedings which are connected in subject-matter, but opposite or contradictory in pur-

Crossexposure. An action brought by one who is defend-

Crossexamine. See Cross-examine; Cross-examen;

Cross-appeal. An appeal by the appellee. In the federal courts a cross appeal is argued with the initial appeal of the appellant. Fed.R.App.P. 34(d). See also Appeal.

Cross-claim. Cross-claims against co-parties are governed in the federal district courts and in most state trial courts by Rule of Civil Procedure 13(g): "A pleading may state as a cross-claim any claim by one party against a co-party arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter either of the original action or of a counterclaim therein or relating to any property that is the subject matter of the original action. Such cross-claim may include a claim that the party against whom it is asserted is or may be liable to the cross-claimant for all or part of a claim asserted in the action against the cross-claimant." See also New York C.P.L.R. § 3019(b).

For requisite content of cross-claim under Rules of Civil Procedure, see Complaint. See also Cross-com-

Cross-complaint; Transaction or occurrence test.

Counterclaim distinguished. "Cross-claims" are litigated by parties on the same side of the main litigation, while "counterclaims" are litigated between opposing parties to the principal action. Resource Engineer, Cross collateral. Security given by both parties to a contract or undertaking for performance or payment.

Cross-complaint. A defendant or cross-defendant may file a cross-complaint setting forth either or both of the following: (a) Any cause of action he has against any of the parties who filed the complaint against him. (b) Any cause of action he has against a person alleged to be liable thereon, whether or not such person is already a party to the action, if the cause of action asserted in his cross-complaint, (1) arises out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the cause brought against him or (2) asserts a claim, right, or interest in the property or controversy which is the subject of the cause brought against him. Calif. Code of Civil Proc. § 428.10. See also Cross-claim.

Cross-demand. Where a person against whom a demand is made by another, in his turn makes a demand against that other, these mutual demands are called "cross-demands." A set-off is a familiar example. See also Counterclaim.

Crossed check. See Check.

Cross-errors. Errors being assigned by the respondent in a writ of error; the errors assigned on both sides are called "cross-errors."

Cross-examination. The examination of a witness upon a trial or hearing, or upon taking a deposition, by the party opposed to the one who produced him, upon his evidence given in chief, to test its truth, to further develop it, or for other purposes. The examination of a witness by a party other than the direct examiner upon a matter that is within the scope of the direct examination of the witness. Generally the scope of examination is limited to matters covered on direct examination. Fed.R. Civil P. 43(b).

Crossing. A portion of a street over which pedestrians may lawfully cross from one side to the other. With reference to railroads, that portion of the right of way covered by intersection with a street or highway. In a broader sense, the term includes embankments constructed as necessary approaches to a railroad track, and approaches or embankments reasonably necessary to enable crossings or bridges to be used. For "Farm Crossing", see that title.

Cross interrogatory. A party to an action who has been interrogated may serve cross questions on all other parties. Fed.R. Civil P. 31(a).

Cross-licensing. Permission or right to use a thing or property given in exchange between two or more parties. Exchange of licenses by two or more patent holders in order that each may use or benefit from the patents of the other.

Cross remainder. Cross remainders are remainders which are so limited after particular estates to two or more persons in several parcels of land, or in several undivided shares in the same parcel of land, that, on the determination of the particular estates in any of the several parcels of undivided shares, they remain over to the other grantees, and the reversioner or ulterior remainderman is not let in until the determination of all of the particular estates. Hartford Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Harvey, 143 Conn. 233, 121 A.2d 276.

Crown. The sovereign power and position of a monarch. An ornamental badge of regal power worn on the head by sovereign princes. The word is frequently used when speaking of the sovereign himself, or the rights, duties, and prerogatives belonging to him. Also a silver coin of the value of five shillings.

Crown cases. In English law, criminal prosecutions on behalf of the crown, as representing the public; causes in the criminal courts.

Crown cases reserved. In English law, questions of law arising in criminal trials at the assizes (otherwise than by way of demurrer), and not decided there, but reserved for the consideration of the court of criminal appeal. Superseded by criminal division of Court of Appeal.

Crown court. In England, such court was established by Courts Act of 1971, superseding the former assize courts and courts of quarter sessions. It is part of the Supreme Court with jurisdiction throughout England and Wales, and is a superior court of record.

Crown debts. In England, debts due the crown, which are put, by various statutes, upon a different footing from those due to a subject. Bankruptcy does not discharge such debts unless Commissioners of the Treasury certify in writing their consent to discharge.

Crown lands. The demesne lands of the crown. In England and Canada, lands belonging to the sovereign personally or to the government or nation, as distinguished from such as have passed into private ownership.

Crown law. Criminal law in England is sometimes so termed, the crown being always the prosecutor in criminal proceedings.

Crown office. In England, the criminal side of the former court of king’s bench. The king’s attorney in this court was called “master of the crown office”. Now the Crown Office and Associates' Department of the Central Office of the Supreme Court.

Crown office in chancery. Formerly one of the offices of the English high court of chancery; later transferred to the high court of justice. The principal official, the clerk of the crown, was an officer of parliament, and of the lord chancellor, in his nonjudicial capacity, rather than an officer of the courts of law.

Crown paper. A paper containing the list of criminal cases, which await the hearing or decision on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench Division.

Crown side. That jurisdiction of Queen's Bench Division by which it takes jurisdiction of criminal cases.

Crown solicitor. In England, the solicitor to the treasury acts, in state prosecutions, as solicitor for the crown in preparing the prosecution. Public prosecutions are now handled either by the Director of Public Prosecutions or by police or some other public authority.

Crucis signati /krju:wi:s sainįdi:/. In old English law, signed or marked with a cross. Pilgrims to the holy land, or crusaders; so called because they wore the sign of the cross upon their garments.
CRUEDE

Crude. A flexible term depending largely on context. In natural state; raw; unrefined; not artificially altered; unfinished. Vulgar.

Cruel and inhuman treatment. As ground for divorce, consists of unwarranted and unjustifiable conduct on part of defendant causing other spouse to endure suffering and distress, thereby destroying peace of mind and making living with such spouse unbearable, completely destroying real purpose and object of matrimony. Welling v. Welling, 144 Ind.App. 182, 245 N.E.2d 173, 176.

Cruel and unusual punishment. See Corporal punishment; Punishment.

Cruelty. The intentional and malicious infliction of physical or mental suffering upon living creatures, particularly human beings; or, as applied to the latter, the wanton, malicious, and unnecessary infliction of pain upon the body, or the feelings and emotions; abusive treatment; inhumanity; outrage.

Chiefly used in the law of divorce, in such phrases as “cruel and abusive treatment,” “cruel and barbarous treatment,” or “cruel and inhuman treatment” (q.v.). In domestic relations, term includes mental injury as well as physical. Williams v. Williams, 351 Mich. 210, 213, 88 N.W.2d 483, 484. Generally, single act of cruelty is not sufficient for divorce—there must be course of cruel conduct over period of time, Richardson v. Richardson, 258 S.C. 135, 187 S.E.2d 528. This ground for divorce is of limited importance with the enactment by most states of no-fault divorce laws.

See also Legal cruelty; Mental anguish; Mental cruelty.

Cruelty to animals. The infliction of physical pain, suffering, or death upon an animal, when not necessary for purposes of training or discipline or (in the case of death) to procure food or to release the animal from incurable suffering, but done wantonly, for mere sport, for the indulgence of a cruel and vindictive temper, or with reckless indifference to its pain.

A person commits a misdemeanor if he purposely or recklessly: (1) subjects any animal to cruel mistreatment; or (2) subjects any animal in his custody to cruel neglect; or (3) kills or injures any animal belonging to another without legal privilege or consent of the owner. Model Penal Code, § 250.11.

Cruelty to children. Most jurisdictions have “battered child” statutes in which both emotional and physical injuries are embraced in the term “cruelty.” See also Child abuse.

Legal cruelty. See Legal cruelty.

Crush. To break by means of pressure; to compress or bruise between two hard bodies; to squeeze or force by pressure so as to destroy the natural condition, shape, or integrity of the parts, or to force together into a mass. To defeat.

Cry. To call out aloud; to proclaim; to publish; to sell at auction. A clamor raised in the pursuit of an escaping felon. See Hue and cry.

Cry de pais, or cri de pais /kráy da péyz/. The hue and cry raised by the people in ancient times, where a felony had been committed and the constable was absent.

Cryer /kréyr/. An auctioneer. One who calls out aloud; one who publishes or proclaims. See Crier.

Crypta /krípta/. A chapel or oratory underground, or under a church or cathedral.

C.S.C. Civil Service Commission.

C.T.A. An abbreviation for cum testamento annexo, in describing a species of administration.

Cucking-stool. An engine of correction for common scolds, which in the Saxon language is said to signify the scolding-stool, though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking-stool, because the judgment was that, when the woman was placed therein, she should be plunged in the water for her punishment. It was also variously called a “trebucket,” “tumbrel,” or “castigatory.” 4 Bl.Comm. 169.

Cuckold. A man whose wife is unfaithful; the husband of an adulteress. It is explained that the word alludes to the habit of the female cuckold, which lays her eggs in the nests of other birds to be hatched by them. To make a cuckold of a man is to seduce his wife.

Cuellelette. A term of French maritime law. See A cueillelette.

Cui ante divertium /kyúway ántiy dávórsh(ly)am /k(w)áy*/. (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui ipsa ante divertium contradicere non potuit, whom she before the divorce did not gainsay). A writ which, in its form, was always in favor of a woman who had been divorced from her husband, to recover lands or tenements which she had in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband had aliened them during marriage, when she could not gainsay it. 3 Bl.Comm. 183. Abolished in 1833.

Cui bono /kyúway bónow /k(w)áy*/ /k(w)áy*/. For whose good; for whose use or benefit. “Cui bono is ever of great weight in all agreements.” Sometimes translated, for what good, for what useful purpose.

Culcunque alquis quid concedit concedere videtur et id, sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit /k(yúw)aykákgwiw áískwas kwid kansiýdá kwáis kansiýdírí vádýeri ét id saýniy kwów ríyz ipsa éisy nón póduwat/.. Whoever grants anything to another is supposed to grant that also without which the thing itself would be of no effect.

Cui in vita /kyúway án váyda/. (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui in vita sua ipsa contradicere non potuit, whom in his lifetime she could not gainsay). A writ of entry which lay for a widow against a person to whom her husband had in his lifetime aliened her lands. It was a method of establishing the fact of death, being a trial with witnesses, but without a jury. The object of the writ was to avoid a judgment obtained against the husband by confession or default. It was rendered obsolete in England by force of 32 Hen. VIII, c. 28, § 6.

Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur, sìne quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest /k(yúw)ay júrasdíksh(ly)ow déyda est, íya kwówkwiw
CULPA IN CONTRAHENDO

Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad caelum et ad inferos /kyuwyjas est sowlam, iyjas est akwyiyi aklelyam / yuwyfars / / To whomsoever the soil belongs, he owns also to the sky and to the depths. The owner of a piece of land owns everything above and below it to an indefinite extent.

Cuius juris (i.e., jurisdictionis) est principale, ejusdem juris erit accessorium /kyuwyjas juras est inprisepelley, iyjasdami juras ehret askasasiriyam/. An accessory matter is subject to the same jurisdiction as its principal.

Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, ejus consulta dati donatio est /kyuwyjas par arorom deyday repeshiyom iywyiyi / He who gives a thing by mistake has a right to recover it back; but, if he gives designedly, it is a gift.

Cujusque reg potissima pars est principalum /kyuwyjaskiwyi riyay patasama parz /prisipiyyam/. The chiefest part of everything is the beginning.

Culagium /kalayjyam/. In old records, the laying up a ship in a dock, in order to be repaired.

Cul de sec /kil de sekh/. (Fr. the bottom of a sack.) A blind alley: a street which is open at one end only. A street closed at one end. Beckham v. State, 64 Cal. App.2d 487, 149 P.2d 296, 300.

Culpa /kelfa/. Lat. A term of the civil law, meaning fault, neglect, or negligence. There are three degrees of culpa, lata culpa, gross fault or neglect; levius culpa, ordinary fault or neglect; levisima culpa, slight fault or neglect, and the definitions of these degrees are precisely the same as those in our law. This term is to be distinguished from dolus, which means fraud, guile, or deceit.

Culpability /kalpebyldiy/. Blameworthiness. Except in cases of absolute liability, a person's criminal culpability requires a showing that he acted purposely, knowingly, recklessly or negligently, as the law may require, with respect to each material element of the offense. Model Penal Code, § 2.02(1).

Culpable /kalpabal/. Blamable; censurable; criminal; involving the breach of a legal duty or the commission of a fault. That which is deserving of moral blame.

As to culpable Homicide; Ignorance; Neglect; Negligence; and Wantonness, see those titles.

Culpa caret qui scit sed probihere non potest /kelfa kerts kwayy sit sed prouhabyiyi non poudast/. He is clear of blame who knows, but cannot prevent.

Culpa est immiscere se rel ad se non pertinenti /kyuwyjas est amiseryi sii riiyay aklelyi non pardinatay/. It is a fault for any one to meddle in a matter not pertaining to him.

Culpa in contrahendo /kelfa in kocontrahendow/. Term used to describe the liability which attaches to breach of contract, especially a breach by the offeror after the offeree has begun performance in a unilateral contract and is stopped by the offeror before completion of the performance which is also the acceptance of the offer in a unilateral contract.

Culpa lata dolo equiparatur /kāp̬a lēyda dōlow ekwapārēydar/. Gross negligence is held equivalent to intentional wrong.

Culpa tenet [tenet] suos auctores /kāp̬a tēn̪t s(ŷ)wōws ̪dōktōrīyza/sēntīyat/. Misconduct binds [should bind] its own authors. It is a never-failing axiom that every one is accountable only for his own delicts.

Culprit. One accused or charged with commission of crime. Also, commonly used to mean one guilty of a crime or fault.

Blackstone believes this term to be an abbreviation of the old forms of arraignment, whereby, on the prisoner’s pleading not guilty, the clerk would respond, “culpabiliis, prit”, i.e., he is guilty and the crown is ready. It was (he says) the viva voce replication by the clerk, on behalf of the crown, to the prisoner’s plea of non culpabiliis; prit being a technical word, anciently in use in the formula of joining issue. 4 Bl.Comm. 339. The ordinary derivation is from culpa.

Cultura /kaltyūra/. A parcel of arable land.

Culvertage /kāvärdāj/. In old English law, a base kind of slavery. The confiscation or forfeiture which takes place when a lord seizes his tenant’s estate.

Cum actio fuerit mere criminalis, institui poterit ab initio criminaliter /kām āsk̬h(i)yow fyīwarat miřiy kriminēy las, instityuyow pōdarad āb anish(i)yow kriminēyldar vēl savūlarad/. When an action is merely criminal, it can be instituted from the beginning either criminally or civilly.

Cum adsunt testimonia rerum, quid opus est verba? /kām ād̪s̪ānt tēstāmōwnyia rīram, kw̪d̪ owp̪s ēst vārbas/. When the proofs of facts are present, what need is there of words?

Cum aliquis renunciaverit societati, solvitur societas /kām āl̪k̪wis raṁs̪įyēvyvarat sasīsyaṭēyday, sōlarad sasāyastas/. When any partner renounces the partnership, the partnership is dissolved.

Cum confilente sponte mitius est agendum /kām kōfmtēntiy spōntī mīsh(i)yas ēst ajēnd̪am/. One confessing willingly should be dealt with more leniently.

Cum copula /kām kōp̪yala/. Lat. With copulation, i.e., sexual intercourse. Used in speaking of the validity of a marriage contracted “per verba de futuro cum copula,” that is, with words referring to the future (a future intention to have the marriage solemnized) and consummated by sexual connection.

Cum de lucro duorum quaeritur, melior est causa possidentis /kām dī l(ŷ)wkr̪ow dyuwōrm kw̪r̪d̪ar, miłiyyar ēst kōza pasādiyēntas/. When the question is as to the gain of two persons, the cause of him who is in possession is the better.

Cum dividend /k̪yūwm dividēnd/. Means that when a share of stock is sold after a dividend is declared, the buyer has the right to the dividend; lit., with dividend. See also Dividendi (Cumulative dividend).

Cum duo inter se pugnantia referuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est /kām d(ŷ)yuwōr intar siy pagmāns̪(ỹ)yapāriyāntar in testamēntōw, āl̪tām rēydam ēst/. Where two things repugnant to each other are found in a will, the last shall stand.

Cum duo jura concurrunt in una persona æquum est ac sī essent in duobus /kām d(ŷ)yuwōr jūra kānkāntar in ūwōn parswōna līk̪w̪m ēst āk sāy ēsant in d(ŷ)yuwōwbas/. When two rights meet in one person, it is the same as if they were in two persons.

Cum grano salis /kām grēynow sēylas/kām grēnow sēlis/. (With a grain of salt.) With allowance for exaggeration.

Cum in corpore dissentituir, apparat nullam esse acceptionem /kām kīn̪purāy di̪sēntēt̪dr̪, spār̪ēt nīlām ēsī̪ ak̪s̪ēspyšyōwn̪am/. When there is a disagreement in the substance, it appears that there is no acceptance.

Cum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scripsum est benignae interpretari et secundum id quod creditibile est cogitatum credendum est /kām kōn̪t̪stāmēntōw āmbīgyuwi ̪ōt̪ ēsh(i)yam̪ pār̪p̪r̪am skrip̪t̪̪sam̪ ēst bān̪n̪i̪g̪ni̪j in̪t̪ār̪p̪t̪r̪āt̪r̪ay ēt̪ sāk̪k̪ānd̪ ēm̪ kw̪d̪ kōrd̪̪b̪īli̪ ēst kōj̪t̪ēyd̪m̪ kr̪ād̪̪m̪ ēst/. Where an ambiguous, or even an erroneous, expression occurs in a will, it should be construed liberally, and in accordance with the testator’s probable meaning.

Cum legitime nuptiae factae sunt, patrem liberi sequuntur /kām lāj̪d̪āmiy nāp̪s̪h̪iyi fākt̪i̪y sānt, pāt̪r̪am lib̪r̪am sk̪w̪w̪n̪t̪ar̪/. Children born under a legitimate marriage follow the condition of the father.

Cum onere /kām ōn̪n̪r̪i̪y/. With the burden; subject to an incumbrance or charge. What is taken cum onere is taken subject to an existing burden or charge.

Cum par delictum est duorum, semper oneratur petitor et melior habetur possessoris causa /kām pār dl̪k̪̪tam ēst d(ŷ)ywōr̪am, sēmp̪ar ōn̪n̪r̪i̪yēd̪ar pōd̪̪r̪ad ēt mīy(i)y̪ar hābyd̪ar pōw̪z̪w̪s̪ōr̪s̪ kōz̪a/. When both parties are in fault the plaintiff must always fail, and the cause of the person in possession be preferred.

Cum pertinentilis /kām pārd̪ān̪n̪ēshy̪yas/. With the appurtenances.

Cum quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest /kām kw̪d̪ ēg̪ōw nōn vāl̪d̪ ēd̪ ēg̪ōw, vāl̪y̪at kw̪ōnt̪am val̪i̪r̪y̪ pōw̪d̪̪st̪/. When that which I do is of no effect as I do it, it shall have as much effect as it can; i.e., in some other way.

Cum rights. Lit. with rights; a share of stock sold under conditions which permit the buyer to buy new stock of the issuer in a stated amount.

Cum testamento annexo /kām testamēntōw mēks̪ōw/. L. Lat. With the will annexed. A term applied to administration granted where a testator makes an incomplete will, without naming any executors, or where he names incapable persons, or where the executors named refuse to act. If the executor has died, an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo (of the goods not [already] administered upon with the will annexed) is appointed. Often abbreviated d. b. n. c. t. a.

Cumulative /kyúmyyaladəv/. Additional; heaping up; increasing; forming an aggregate. The word signifies that two things are to be added together, instead of one being a repetition or in substitution of the other.

As to cumulative Dividend, and Punishment, see those titles.

Cumulative evidence. Additional or corroborative evidence to the same point. That which goes to prove what has already been established by other evidence. See also Corroborating evidence.

Cumulative legacies. Legacies given in addition to a prior legacy, as when one legacy is given in a will and another legacy is given to the same person in a codicil. See also Legacy.

Cumulative offense. One which can be committed only by a repetition of acts of the same kind but committed on different days or times.

Cumulative preferred dividend. Dividend on preferred stock which, if declared at the end of a particular year, must be paid before any common stock dividend is paid. See also Dividend.

Cumulative remedy. A remedy created by statute in addition to one which still remains in force. Wulff-Hansen & Co. v. Silvers, Cal.App., 120 P.2d 677, 680.

Cumulative sentence. Any sentence which is to take effect after the expiration of a prior sentence; also known as “from and after” sentence. See also Sentence.

Cumulative voting. Type of voting in which a stockholder may cast as many votes for directors as he has shares of stock multiplied by the number of directors to be elected. The stockholder may cast all his votes for one or more but fewer than all the directors on the slate, and hence, minority representation is prohibited. Cumulative voting is required under the corporate laws of some states, and is permitted in most states.

A system of minority representation which is used for the election of members of the lower house of the Illinois legislature. Each voter has three votes which he may lump together on one candidate or distribute among two or three candidates as he chooses.

Cunadas /kuwndəsəs/. In Spanish law, affinity; alliance; relation by marriage.

Cuneator /kyúwniye’dər/ Lat. /kyúwniye’ydər/. A coiner. Cuneare /kyúwniye’rə/, to coin. Cuneus /kyúwniye’s/, the die with which to coin. Cuneata /kyúwniye’də/, coined.

Cunnilingus /kənənlɪŋgəs/. An act of sex committed with the mouth and the female sexual organ.

Cur. A common abbreviation of curia.

Cura /kyúrə/. Lat. Care; charge; oversight; guardianship. In the civil law a species of guardianship which commenced at the age of puberty (when the guardianship called “tutela” expired), and continued to the completion of the twenty-fifth year.

Curagulos /kyúrygıyəлас/. One who takes care of a thing.

Curate /kyúrət/. In ecclesiastical law, an incumbent who has the cure of souls, but now generally restricted to signify the spiritual assistant of a rector or vicar in his cure. An officiating temporary minister in the English church, who represents the proper incumbent; being regularly employed either to serve in his absence or as his assistant, as the case may be. He may be temporary or stipendiary or perpetual.

Curateur /kyúrətyʊr/. In French law, a person charged with supervising the administration of the affairs of an emancipated minor, giving him advice, and assisting him in the important acts of such administration.

Curatio /kyárəշəʊ/. In the civil law, the power or duty of managing the property of him who, either on account of infancy or some defect of mind or body, cannot manage his own affairs. The duty of a curator or guardian.

Curative /kyúrədəv/. Intended to cure (that is, to obviate the ordinary legal effects or consequences of) defects, errors, omissions or irregularities. The word is defined as relating to, or employed in, the cure of diseases; tending to cure; a remedy.

Curative admissibility of evidence. As applied to evidence, curative admissibility is the doctrine that an opponent may reply with similar evidence whenever it is needed for removing an unfair prejudice which might otherwise have ensued. Biener v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo.App., 160 S.W.2d 780, 786. In some jurisdictions, an opponent may counter or answer evidence which has been admitted without objection though otherwise inadmissible to cure the effect of such evidence. This rule is not of universal application or acceptance.

Curative statute. A law, retrospective in effect, which is designed to remedy some legal defect in previous transactions. A form of retrospective legislation which reaches back into the past to operate upon past events, acts or transactions in order to correct errors and irregularities and to render valid and effective many attempted acts which would otherwise be ineffective for the purpose intended. As applied to conveyances they supply one or more ingredients of a legal act which the parties intended to perform but which they failed to accomplish completely or which they executed only imperfectly.

Curator /kyúrədər/ /kyərədər/. A temporary guardian or conservator appointed by the court to care for the property or person or both of an incompetent, spendthrift, or a minor. One in charge of museum, art gallery, or the like.

In Louisiana, a person appointed to take care of the estate of an absentee.

Curator ad hoc /kyərədər ad hək/. A guardian or other person appointed to take charge or care of a single matter or transaction; a special guardian.

Curator ad litem /kyərədər ad ləydəm/. Guardian for the suit or action.
Curator bonis /kyrátýdar bónnas/. In the civil law, a guardian or trustee appointed to take care of property in certain cases; as for the benefit of creditors.

Curatorship. The office of a curator or guardian. Compare Tutorship.

Curatrix /kyrátýtrakts/. A woman who has been appointed to the office of curator; a female guardian.

Curatus non habet titulum /kyrátýyds nón hýybat títýlam/. A curate has no title [to tithes].

Cure. The act of healing; restoration to health from disease, or to soundness after injury.

Under rule that a vessel and her owner must provide maintenance, and "cure" for seaman injured or falling ill while in service, "cure" is care, including nursing and medical attention during such period as the duty continues. Calmar S. S. Corporation v. Taylor, 303 U.S. 525, 58 S.Ct. 651, 653, 82 L.Ed. 993. See also Maintenance and cure.

The right of a seller under U.C.C. to correct a non-conforming delivery of goods to buyer within the contract period. § 2-508.

Cure by verdict. In common law pleading, the rectification or rendering nugatory of a defect in the pleadings by the rendition of a verdict; the court presuming after a verdict, that the particular thing omitted or defectively stated in the pleadings was duly proved at the trial. This function is served by Rule of Civil Procedure 15 which permits amendment of pleadings to conform to the evidence.

Cure of souls. In ecclesiastical law, the ecclesiastical or spiritual charge of a parish, including the usual and regular duties of a minister in charge.

Curfew. A law (commonly an ordinance) which imposes on people (particularly children) the obligation to remove themselves from the streets on or before a certain time of night.

An institution supposed to have been introduced into England by order of William the Conqueror, which consisted in the ringing of a bell or bells at eight o'clock at night, at which signal the people were required to extinguish all lights in their dwellings, and to put out or rake up their fires, and retire to rest, and all companies to disperse. The word is probably derived from the French couvre feu, to cover the fire. The curfew is spoken of in 1 Social England 373, as having been ordained by William I, in order to prevent nightly gatherings of the people of England. But the custom is evidently older than the Norman; for we find an order of King Alfred that the inhabitants of Oxford should at the ringing of that bell cover up their fires and go to bed. And there is evidence that the same practice prevailed at this period in France, Normandy, Spain, and probably in most of the other countries of Europe. It was doubtless intended as a precaution against fires, which were very frequent and destructive when most houses were built of wood. It appears to have met with so much opposition that in 1103 we find Henry I, repealing the enactment of his father on the subject; and Blackstone says that, though it is mentioned a century afterwards, it is rather spoken of as a time of night then as a still subsisting custom. Shakespeare frequently refers to it in the same sense.

Curia /kyúyriya/. In old European law, a court. The palace, household, or retinue of a sovereign. A judicial tribunal or court held in the sovereign's palace. A court of justice. The civil power, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical. A manor; a nobleman's house; the hall of a manor. A piece of ground attached to a house; a yard or courtyard. A lord's court held in his manor. The tenants who did suit and service at the lord's court. A manse.

In Roman law, a division of the Roman people, said to have been made by Romulus. They were divided into three tribes, and each tribe into ten curiae, making thirty curiae in all. The place or building in which each curia assembled to offer sacred rites. The place of meeting of the Roman senate; the senate house. The senate house of a province; the place where the decuriones assembled. See Decurio.

Curia admissatis /kyúyriya àdmíssátýyds/. The court of admittance.

Curia advisari vult /kyúyriya ádvísáray váyl/. L. Lat. The court will advise; the court will consider. A phrase frequently found in the reports, signifying the resolution of the court to suspend judgment in a cause, after the argument, until they have deliberated upon the question, as where there is a new or difficult point involved. It is commonly abbreviated to cur. adv. vult, or c. a. v.

Curia baronis, or baronom /kyúyriya báróNum/*báró-nam/. In old English law, a court-baron.

Curia cancellarie officina justitie /kyúyriya kánsálañícííy ofásáña jostañíshyiy/. The court of chancery is the workshop of justice.

Curia christianitas /kyúyriya kriñístiññatýyds/. The ecclesiastical court.

Curia claudenda /kyúyriya kłodénda/. The name of a writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he was bound to make, between his land and the plaintiff's. Now obsolete.

Curia comitatus /kyúyriya kómátýyds/. The county court (q.v.).

Curia domini /kyúyriya dómana/. In old English law, the lord's court, house, or hall, where all the tenants met at the time of keeping court.

Curia magna /kyúyriya mágná/. In old English law, the great court; one of the ancient names of parliament.

Curia majoris /kyúyriya májořis/. In old English law, the mayor's court.

Curia millitum /kyúyriya mílañám/. A court so called, anciently held at Carisbrooke Castle, in the Isle of Wight.

Curia palatii /kyúyriya paléyshiyay/. In old English law, the palace court. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict., c. 101.

Curia parliamenti suis propriis legibus subsistit /kyúyriya prátilyaméntay sýyuvás prówprimris liyjábas subsístat/. The court of parliament is governed by its own laws.

Curia pedis pulverizati /kyúyriya pyy̩das pá̩varazéyday/. In old English law, the court of piedpoured or pie-poured. See Court of Piepoured.
Curia personae /k'yúrýə par'sónwǐ/.

Curia regis /k'yúrýə rýjəs/.
The king's court. A term applied to the aula regis, the bancus, or communis bancus, and the iter or eyre, as being courts of the king, but especially to the aula regis (which title see).

Curing title. Removal of defects from land title which render such unmarketable. "Clearing", "curing", "straightening out", or "removing cloud from" title denotes acts or proceedings necessary to render title marketable. See Action to quiet title.

Curiosœ et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur /k'yúrýjówsə et kɛ̃pshiyówsə intɛprɛtɛʃ(ɪ)yəw in lɨjɨj reɔpɛbɛyda/. A curious [overnice or subtle] and captious interpretation is reprobated in law.

Curnock /kærnək/.
In old English law, a measure containing four bushels or half a quarter of corn.

Currency. Coined money and such banknotes or other paper money as are authorized by law and do in fact circulate from hand to hand as the medium of exchange. See also Blocked currency; Comptroller of Currency; Current money; Legal tender.

Current. Running; now in transit; present existence; now in progress; whatever is at present in course of passage, as "the current month." American Fruit Growers v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 105 F.2d 722, 726. Most recent; up-to-date.

A continuous movement in the same direction, as a fluid stream. Buckeye Incubator Co. v. Blum, D.C. Ohio, 17 F.2d 456, 458.

Passing in time or belonging to the time actually passing. Now passing or present in its course, as the current month, and as applied to current obligations it denotes the obligations then passing or present in its progress, the service rendered and the compensation therefor measured by the time of the occurrence of the event.

The word "current", when used as an adjective, has many meanings, and definition depends largely on word which it modifies, or subject-matter with which it is associated. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Keller, C.C.A., 59 F.2d 499, 501.

Current account. An open, running, or unsettled account between two parties.

Current assets. Any property that will be converted into cash in the normal operation of business at an early date, usually within one year. Short-term assets.

Current expenses. Ordinary, regular, recurring, and continuing expenditures for the maintenance of property, the carrying on of a business, an office, municipal government, etc.

Current income. Income which is due within the present accounting period.

Current liabilities. A liability that will be paid in the normal operation of a business at an early date, usually within one year, normally by expending current assets. The phrase "current liability" carries with it the idea of a liability that is presently enforceable. Warren Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ga., 135 F.2d 679, 684, 685.

Current market value. The value of an asset which may be realized by liquidation within the present accounting period. Present value which may be realized in an arms length transaction between a willing buyer and a willing seller. See also Fair market value.

Current money. The currency of the country; whatever is intended to and does actually circulate as currency; every species of coin or currency. In this phrase the adjective "current" is not synonymous with "convertible". It is employed to describe money which passes from hand to hand, from person to person, and circulates through the community, and is generally received. Money is current which is received as money in the common business transactions, and is the common medium in barter and trade. See also Currency; Legal tender.

Current obligations. The word "current" means passing in time or belonging to the time actually passing, now passing, present in its course, as the current month, and as applied to current obligations it denotes the obligations then passing or present in its progress, the service rendered and the compensation therefor measured by the time of the occurrence of the event. Pecos Mercantile Co. v. Textile, Inc., Tex. Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 811, 812. One presently enforceable and not past due. Naylor v. Gutteridge, Tex.Civ.App., 430 S.W.2d 726, 733.

Current price. This term means the same as "market value", "market price", "going price", the price that runs or flows with the market. See also Current market value; Fair market value.

Current revenues. See Current income.

Current value. See Current market value; Fair market value.

Current wages. Such as are paid periodically, or from time to time as the services are rendered or the work is performed; more particularly, wages for the current period, hence not including such as are past-due or deferred. See also Minimum wage.

Current year. The year now running. Ordinarily, a calendar year in which the event under discussion took place; though the current fiscal year of a business may run from July 1st to June 30th, or some other twelve month period.

Curriculum. The set of studies or courses for a particular period, designated by a school or branch of a school.
Currit quattuor pedibus /kæræt kwóduwær pédaybas/. L. Lat. It runs upon four feet; or, as sometimes expressed, it runs upon all fours. A phrase used in arguments to signify the entire and exact application of a case quoted. "It does not follow that they run quattuor pedibus."

Currit tempus contra desides et sui juris contemptores /kæræt tæmæs kærætra důsædæjz æt súwyæj jüræs køræmem prájærijz/. Time runs against the slothful and those who neglect their rights.

Cursing. Malediction; imprecation; execration; profane words intended to convey hate and to invoke harm; swearing.

Cursitor baron /kærædær bæræn/. In old English law, an officer of the court of exchequer, who is appointed by patent under the great seal to be one of the barons of the exchequer. The office was abolished by St. 19 & 20 Vict., c. 86.

Cursitors /kærædarz/. In old English law, clerks in the chancery office, whose duties consisted in drawing up those writs which were of course, de cursu, whence their name. They were abolished by St. 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 82.

Cursor /kærær/. An inferior officer of the papal court.

Cursory examination /kæræryi æjzæmænæjæshæn/. An inspection for defects visible or ascertainable by ordinary examination; contrasted from a thorough examination.

Cursus curie est lex curiae /kæræs kúryriiæi æst lëks kúryriiæi/. The practice of the court is the law of the court.

Curtail. To cut off the end or any part of; hence to shorten, abridge, diminish, lessen, or reduce; and term has no such meaning as abolish. State v. Edwards, 207 La. 506, 21 So.2d 624, 625.

Curtesy /kærædæi/. The estate to which by common law a man is entitled, on the death of his wife, in the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession in fee-simple or in tail during her coverture, provided they have had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate. It is a freehold estate for the term of his natural life.

In some jurisdictions, there is no requirement that issue be born of the union. The estate has gradually lost much of its former value and now in some jurisdictions it attaches only to the real estate which the wife owns at death, rather than to the real estate owned by the wife during the marriage, while in most states it has been abolished or otherwise materially altered.

Initiate and consummate. Curtesy initiate is the interest which a husband has in his wife's estate after the birth of issue capable of inheriting, and before the death of the wife; after her death, it becomes an estate "by the curtesy consummate." Hopper v. Gurtman, 126 N.J. 263, 18 A.2d 245, 246, 250.

A piece of ground commonly used with the dwelling house. A small piece of land, not necessarily inclosed, around the dwelling house, and generally includes the buildings used for domestic purposes in the conduct of family affairs. A court yard or the space of ground adjoining the dwelling house necessary and convenient and habitually used for family purposes and the carrying on of domestic employments. A piece of ground within the common inclosure belonging to a dwelling house, and enjoyed with it, for its more convenient occupation.

For search and seizure purposes includes those outbuildings which are directly and intimately connected with the habitations and in proximity thereto and the land or grounds surrounding the dwelling which are necessary and convenient and habitually used for family purposes and carrying on domestic employment. State v. Hanson, 113 N.H. 689, 313 A.2d 730, 732.

Curtles terre /kæræliiæj tóeri/. In old English law, court lands. See Court lands.

Curtillium /kæriliiæj/. A curtilage (q.v.): the area or space within the inclosure of a dwellinghouse.

Curtis /kæræs/. A garden; a space about a house; a house, or manor; a court, or palace; a court of justice; a nobleman's residence.

Custode admittendo, custode amovendo /kústædi ædæmtænæwæwæwæ, kústædi æymænæwæwæ/. Writs for the admitting and removing of guardians.

Custodes /kastówðizæ/. In Roman law, guardians; observers; inspectors. Persons who acted as inspectors of elections, and who counted the votes given.

In old English law, keepers; guardians; conservators.

Custodes libertatis anglie auctoritate parlamentorum /kastówðiz ælæertiææ æGlæliæ ækkærætæææ æpærlææ ækæmæntæwæ/. The style in which writs and all judicial processes were made out during the great revolution, from the execution of King Charles I, till Oliver Cromwell was declared protector.

Custodes pacis /kastówðizæ péyæææ/. Guardians of the peace. 1 Bl.Comm. 349.

Custodial arrest. Confinement or detention by police or government authorities during which a person is entitled to certain warnings as to his rights when questioned. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694. See Custodial interrogation.

Custodia legis /kastówðiæ æliæjæ/. In the custody of the law. Doctrine of "custodia legis" provides that when personal property is repossessed under writ of replevin, property is considered to be in custody of the court, though actual possession may be in either of the parties to the replevin action, and that property remains in custody of court until judgment in replevin action finally determines whether replevining party or prior holder is entitled to possession. Brunswick Corp. v. J & P, Inc., C.A.Okl., 424 F.2d 100, 102.
Custodial interrogation. Custodial interrogation, requiring that defendant be advised of his constitutional rights, means questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom in any significant way; custody can occur without formality of arrest and in areas other than in police station. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694; Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 97 S.Ct. 1232. See Miranda Rule.

Custodial lease /kástówdjiyam liy/. In old English law, a grant from the crown under the exchequer seal, by which the custody of lands, etc., seised in the king's hands, was demised or committed to someone as custodee or lessee thereof.

Custodian. General term to describe anyone who has charge or custody of property, papers, etc.

Custody. The care and control of a thing or person. The keeping, guarding, care, watch, inspection, preservation or security of a thing, carrying with it the idea of the thing being within the immediate personal care and control of the person to whose custody it is subjected. Immediate charge and control, and not the final, absolute control of ownership, implying responsibility for the protection and preservation of the thing in custody. Also the detainer of a man's person by virtue of lawful process or authority.

The term is very elastic and may mean actual imprisonment or physical detention or mere power, legal or physical, of imprisoning or of taking manual possession. Term "custody" within statute requiring that petitioner be "in custody" to be entitled to federal habeas corpus relief does not necessarily mean actual physical detention in jail or prison but rather is synonymous with restraint of liberty. U. S. ex rel. Wirtz v. Sheehan, D.C.Wis., 319 F.Sup. 146, 147. Accordingly, persons on probation or released on own recognizance have been held to be "in custody" for purposes of habeas corpus proceedings.

See Chain of custody; Custodial interrogation; Protective custody.

Custody account. A type of agency account in which the custodian has the obligation to preserve and safekeep the property entrusted to him for his principal.

Custody of children. The care, control and maintenance of a child which may be awarded by a court to one of the parents as in a divorce or separation proceeding. A number of states have adopted the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. See also Guardianship.

Custody of the law. Property is in the custody of the law when it has been lawfully taken by authority of legal process, and remains in the possession of a public officer (as a sheriff) or an officer of a court (as a receiver) empowered by law to hold it. See Forfeiture; Seizure.

Custom and usage. A usage or practice of the people, which, by common adoption and acquiescence, and by long and unvarying habit, has become compulsory, and has acquired the force of law with respect to the place or subject-matter to which it relates. It results from a long series of actions, constantly repeated, which have, by such repetition and by uninterupted acquiescence, acquired the force of a tacit and common consent. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reverman, 243 Ky. 702, 49 S.W.2d 558, 560. An habitual or customary practice, more or less widespread, which prevails within a geographical or sociological area; usage is a course of conduct based on a series of actual occurrences. Corbin-Dykes Elec. Co. v. Burr, 18 Ariz.App. 101, 500 P.2d 632, 634.

Parol evidence rule does not bar evidence of custom or usage to explain or supplement a contract or memorandum of the parties. U.C.C. § 2–203.

Classification. Customs are general, local or particular. General customs are such as prevail throughout a country and become the law of that country, and their existence is to be determined by the court. Or as applied to usages of trade and business, a general custom is one that is followed in all cases by all persons in the same business in the same territory, and which has been so long established that persons sought to be charged thereby, and all others living in the vicinity, may be presumed to have known of it and to have acted upon it as they had occasion. Local customs are such as prevail only in some particular district or locality, or in some city, county, or town. Particular customs are nearly the same, being such as affect only the inhabitants of some particular district.

Usage distinguished. "Usage" is a repetition of acts, and differs from "custom" in that the latter is the law or general rule which arises from such repetition; while there may be usage without custom, there cannot be a custom without a usage accompanying or preceding it. U. S. for Use of E & R Const. Co., Inc. v. Guy H. James Const. Co., D.C.Tenn., 390 F.Sup. 1193, 1209. See also Usage.

Customarily. Means usually, habitually, according to the custom; general practice or usual order of things; regularly. Fuller Brush Co. v. Industrial Commission of Utah, 99 Utah 97, 104 P.2d 201, 203.

Customary. According to custom or usage; founded on, or growing out of, or dependent on, a custom (q.v.); ordinary; usual; common.

Customary court-baron. See Court-baron.

Customary discharge. Due diligence according to lawful, reasonable and well-known custom of port or ports involved. Context and conditions existing or contemplated will, of course, affect the meaning of the phrase. Taisho Kaiu Kabushiki Kaisha v. Gano Moore Co., D.C.Del., 14 F.2d 985, 986.

Customary estates. Estates which owe their origin and existence to the custom of the manor in which they are held. 2 Bl.Comm. 149.

Customary freehold. In old English law, a variety of copyhold estate, the evidences of the title to which are to be found upon the court rolls; the entries declaring the holding to be according to the custom of the manor, but it is not said to be at the will of the lord. The incidents are similar to those of common or pure copyhold.

Customary interpretation. See Interpretation.

Customary services. Such as are due by ancient custom or prescription only.
CUSTOMARY TENANTS

Customary tenants. Tenants holding by custom of the manor.

Custom duties. Taxes on the importation and exportation of commodities. The tariff or tax assessed upon merchandise, imported from, or exported to a foreign country.

Tax levied by federal government on goods shipped into U.S., though in other countries it may include export taxes as well. See also Customs.

In banking, any person having an account with a bank or for whom a bank has agreed to collect items and includes a bank carrying an account with another bank. U.C.C. § 4-104(e). As to letters of credit, a buyer or other person who causes an issuer to issue credit or a bank which procures issuance or confirmation on behalf of that bank's customer. U.C.C. § 5-103(g).

Customers' goods. The words "customers' goods," as used in statement of claim on fire policy referring to merchandise destroyed as "customers' goods," in their ordinary sense, mean goods belonging to insured's customers in his custody as a bailee for the purpose of his trade.

Customers' man. One who has duty to greet customers of broker, when they appear in office on business, to assist them in placing their orders, and generally to see that their wants are taken care of. Fenner & Beane v. Lincoln, Tex.Civ.App., 101 S.W.2d 305, 308. An employee of a brokerage house who solicits or processes orders from the investing public for the purchase and sale of commodities and securities to be executed upon various commodities and securities exchanges. Such persons also give investment advice to customers about the purchase and sale of securities. Clothier v. Beane, 187 Okl. 693, 105 P.2d 752, 756.

Custome serra prise stricte /kústant séhra práyz(ī)y/ strikt(ī)y/. Custom shall be taken [is to be construed] strictly.

Custom-house. The house or office where commodities are entered for importation or exportation; where the duties, bounties, or drawbacks payable or receivable upon such importation or exportation are paid or received; and where ships are cleared out, etc. A public establishment for the inspection and assessment of duties on imported goods. See also Bureau of Customs; Customs broker; Customs Service.

Custom-house broker. One whose occupation it is, as an agent, to arrange entries and other custom-house procedures, for import or export business, at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise. A person authorized by the commissioners of customs to act for parties, at their option, in the entry or clearance of ships and the transaction of general business.

Customs. This term is usually applied to those taxes which are payable upon goods and merchandise imported or exported. Pollock v. Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912, 39 L.Ed. 1108. The duties, toll, tribute, or tariff payable upon merchandise exported or imported. See also Custom duties; Custom-house; Customs Service.

Customs and Patent Appeals Court. This court was established in 1929 under Article III of the Constitution of the United States as successor to the United States Court of Customs Appeals (28 U.S.C.A. § 211). The jurisdiction of the court is nationwide and includes (1) appeals from the United States Customs Court (28 U.S.C.A. § 1541), (2) appeals from the United States Patent and Trademark Office (28 U.S.C.A. § 1542), (3) appeals from the United States International Trade Commission (28 U.S.C.A. § 1543), (4) appeals from the Secretary of Commerce under the Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Materials Importation Act (28 U.S.C.A. § 1544), (5) appeals from the Secretary of Agriculture under the Plant Variety Protection Act (28 U.S.C.A. § 1545), and (6) petitions for extraordinary writs under the All Writs Act (28 U.S.C.A. § 1651(a)). Judgments of the court are final and conclusive unless reviewed by the Supreme Court on writ of certiorari. See also Customs Court.

Customs broker. Licensed agent or broker whose function is to handle the process of clearing goods through customs.

Customs Court. A court created in 1890 as the Board of United States General Appraisers and given its present name in 1926. The court has exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions arising under the tariff laws including those involving the appraised value of imported merchandise; classification and rate and amount of duties chargeable; exclusion of merchandise from entry of delivery under any provisions of customs laws; liquidation or reliquidation of an entry, or a modification thereof; refusal to pay a claim for drawback. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1582.

Customs duty. See Custom duties.

Customs House. See Custom-house; Customs Service.

Customs Service. The United States Customs Service collects the revenue from imports and enforces customs and related laws and also administers the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and other customs laws. Some of the responsibilities which the Customs Service is specifically charged with are as follows: properly assessing and collecting customs duties, excise taxes, fees, and penalties due on imported merchandise; interfering and seizing contraband, including narcotics and illegal drugs; processing persons, carriers, cargo, and mail into and out of the United States; administering certain navigation laws; detecting and apprehending persons engaged in fraudulent practices designed to circumvent customs and related laws; protecting American business and labor by enforcing statutes and regulations such as the Antidumping Act; countervailing duty; copyright, patent, and trademark provisions; quotas; and marking requirements for imported merchandise. See also Bureau of Customs; Custom-house.
Custos /kástas/. Lat. A custodian, guard, keeper, or warden; a magistrate.

Custos brevim /kástas břyvjiyam/. In England, the keeper of the writs. A principal clerk belonging to the courts of queen's bench and common pleas, whose office it was to keep the writs returnable into those courts. The office was abolished by 1 Wm. IV, c. 5.

Custos ferarum /kástas faréram/. A gamekeeper.

Custos horrei regii /kástas hóriy rayriyay/. In old English law, protector of the royal granary. 2 Bl. Comm. 394.

Custos maris /kástas máras/. In old English law, ward-en of the sea. The title of a high naval officer among the Saxons and after the Conquest, corresponding with admiral.

Custos morum /kástas mórum/. The guardian of morals. The court of queen’s bench has been so styled.

Custos placitorum corone /kástas plešatóram karówniy/. In old English law, keeper of the pleas of the crown. Cowell supposes this office to have been the same with the custos rotulorum. But it seems rather to have been another name for “coroner.”

Custos rotulorum /kástas rocháloram/. Keeper of the rolls. An officer in England who had the custody of the rolls or records of the sessions of the peace, and also of the commission of the peace itself. He was always a justice of the quorum in the county where appointed and was the principal civil officer in the county. 1 Bl.Comm. 349; 4 Bl.Comm. 272.

Custos spiritualium /kástas spiráchwéliyam/. In English ecclesiastical law, keeper of the spiritualities. He who exercised the spiritual jurisdiction of a diocese during the vacancy of the see.

Custos statum hereditis in custodia existentis meliorum, non deteriorem, facere potest /kástas stéydam harýdas in kástówdyja égzasténtas miyliyóram, nón datríyóram, féoxyarí pówdast/. A guardian can make the estate of an existing heir under his guardianship better, not worse.

Custos temporale /kástas témparélyiam/. In English ecclesiastical law, the person to whom a vacant see or abbey was given by the king, as supreme lord. His office was, as steward of the goods and profits, to give an account to the escheator, who did the like to the exchequer.

Custos terrae /kástas téhriy/. In old English law, guardian, warden, or keeper of the land.

Custuma antiqua sive magna /káchama antáykwa sávy viy máyna/. (Lat. Ancient or great duties.) In old English law, the duties on wool, sheepskin, or wool-pelts and leather exported were so called, and were payable by every merchant, stranger as well as native, with the exception that merchant strangers paid one-half as much again as natives. 1 Bl.Comm. 314.

Custuma parva et nova /káchama párvá et nórvva/.
(Small and new customs.) Imposts of 3d. in the pound, due formerly in England from merchant strangers only, for all commodities, as well imported as exported. This was usually called the “aliens duty,” and was first granted in 31 Edw. I. 1 Bl.Comm. 314.

Cut. To penetrate, separate or lacerate as with a sharp instrument. To shorten or reduce in content, time or amount. To divide into parts or segments. One’s share of something.

Cuthred /kúred/. A knowing or skillful counsellor.

Cut-over land. Land which has been logged; from which desired timber has been removed.

Cutpurse /kátphors/. One who steals by the method of cutting purses; a common practice in old England when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom.

Cutter of the tallies /kádar av ða táliyiz/. In old English law, an officer in the exchequer, to whom it belonged to provide wood for the tallies, and to cut the sum paid upon them, etc.

CWAS. Contractor Weighted Average Share In Cost Risk.

Cwt. A hundred-weight.

Cy /síy/. In law French, here. (Cy-apres /síypréy/, hereafter; cy-devant /síy dávón/, heretofore.) Also as, so.

Cycle. A measure of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

Cyne-bot /kína bówt/, or cyne-gild /kíngild/. In feudal law, the portion belonging to the nation of the mulct for slaying the king, the other portion or were being due to his family.

Cynebote /kína bówt/. A mulct anciently paid by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased.

Cyphonism /síyfánizam/. That kind of punishment used by the ancients, and later by the Chinese, called by Staunton the “wooden collar,” by which the neck of the malefactor is bent or weighed down.

Cy-pres /síypréy/. As near as (possible). The rule of cy-pres is a rule for the construction of instruments in equity, by which the intention of the party is carried out as near as may be, when it would be impossible or illegal to give it literal effect. Thus, where a testator attempts to create a perpetuity, the court will endeavor, instead of making the devise entirely void, to explain the will in such a way as to carry out the testator’s general intention as far as the rule against perpetuities will allow. So in the case of bequests to charitable uses; and particularly where the language used is so vague or uncertain that the testator’s design must be sought by construction.

Equitable power which makes it possible for court to carry out testamentary trust established for particular charitable purpose if testator has expressed general charitable intent, and for some reason his purpose cannot be accomplished in manner specified in the will. In re Gatlin’s Estate, 16 C.A.3d 644, 94 Cal.Rptr. 295, 296.

Cyrichryce /chár(s)chbryych/. A breaking into a church.
Cyricsceat /chár(ə)chshīt/. (From cyric, church, and sceat, a tribute). In Saxon law, a tribute or payment due to the church.

Cyrographarius /sáyrografērīas/. In old English law, a cyrographer: an officer of the bancus, or court of common bench.

Cyrographum /sayarógrafum/. A chirograph.

Czar /zár/(t)sár/. (Also written zar, tsar, tzar, etc.) The title of the former emperors of Russia, derived from the old Slavonic cesar, king or emperor, which, although long held to be derived from the Roman title Caesar, is almost certainly of Tartar origin. The Slavonic word ultimately represents the Latin Caesar, but came through the medium of a Germanic language in which the word had the general sense “emperor.”

In the beginning of the 10th century the Bulgarian prince Symeon assumed this title, which remained attached to the Bulgarian crown. In 1346 it was adopted by Stephen Duschan, king of Serbia. Among the Russians the Byzantine emperors were so called, as were also the khans of the Mongols that ruled in Russia. Ivan III, grand prince of Moscow, held the title, and Ivan IV, the Terrible, in 1547, caused himself to be crowned as czar. In 1721 the Senate and clergy conferred on Peter I, in the name of the nation, the title Emperor of Russia, for which in Russia the Latin word imperator is used. Peter the Great introduced the title imperator, “emperor,” and the official style then became “Emperor of all the Russias, Tsar of Poland, and Grand Duke of Finland”; but the Russian popular appellation continued to be tsar (the preferable modern spelling). The last tsar was Nicholas II, who abdicated on March 15, 1917, and was later executed.
The letter "D" is used as an abbreviation for a number of words, the more important and usual of which are as follows:

1. Digestum, or Digesta, that is, the Digest or Pandects in the Justinian collections of the civil law. Citations to this work are sometimes indicated by this abbreviation, but more commonly by "Dig."

2. Dictum. A remark or observation, as in the phrase "obiter dictum" (q.v.).

3. Demissione. "On the demise." An action of ejectment is entitled "Doe d. Stiles v. Roe;" that is, "Doe, on the demise of Stiles, against Roe."

In the Roman system of notation, this letter stands for five hundred; and, when a horizontal dash or stroke is placed above it, it denotes five thousand.

Dabris? dabo /dēybas? déybow/. Lat. (Will you give? I will give.) In the Roman law, one of the forms of making a verbal stipulation.

Dacion /dasyōn/. In Spanish law, the real and effective delivery of an object in the execution of a contract.

Dactylography /dæktələˈɡrafi/. Dactylography is the scientific study of finger prints as a means of identification.

Daily. Every day; every day in the week; every day in the week except one. A newspaper which is published six days in each week has been held to be a "daily" newspaper.

Daily balances; average daily balance. The various balances for the different days in the period for which interest is to be paid, and the "average daily balance" for the interest period means the sum of these daily balances divided by the number of days in the interest period.

Daily rate of pay. Obtained by multiplying hourly rate by number of hours in normal working day, though actual number of hours worked may be fewer.

Dale and sale. Fictitious names of places, used in the English books, as examples "The manor of Dale and the manner of Sale, lying both in Vale."

Dalus, dallus, dallia /dēylas, déylía(s)/. A certain measure of land; such narrow slips of pasture as are left between the plowed furrows in arable land.

Damage. Loss, injury, or deterioration, caused by the negligence, design, or accident of one person to another, in respect of the latter's person or property. The word is to be distinguished from its plural, "damages", which means a compensation in money for a loss or damage. An injury produces a right in them who have suffered any damage by it to demand reparation of such damage from the authors of the injury. By damage we understand every loss or diminution of what is a man's own, occasioned by the fault of another. The harm, detriment, or loss sustained by reason of an injury. See also Damages; Injury; Loss.

Damage-clear. In old English law, a fee assessed of the tenth part in the common pleas, and the twentieth part in the queen's bench and exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks recovered in those courts, in actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, etc., wherein the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary or the officer of the court wherein he recovered, before he could have execution for the damages. This was originally a gratuity given to the prothonotaries and their clerks for drawing special writs and pleadings; but it was taken away by statute, since which, if any officer in these courts took any money in the name of damage-clear, or anything in lieu thereof, he forfeited treble the value.

Damage feasant or faisant /dəmaj fīˈzənt/. Doing damage. A term formerly applied to a person's cattle or beasts found upon another's land, doing damage by treading down the grass, grain, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 7, 211. This phrase seems to have been introduced in the reign of Edward III, in place of the older expression "en son damage" (in damnum suo).

Damages. A pecuniary compensation or indemnity, which may be recovered in the courts by any person who has suffered loss, detriment, or injury, whether to his person, property, or rights, through the unlawful act or omission or negligence of another. A sum of money awarded to a person injured by the tort of another. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12A.

Damages may be compensatory or punitive according to whether they are awarded as the measure of actual loss suffered or as punishment for outrageous conduct and to deter future transgressions. Nominal damages are awarded for the vindication of a right where no real loss or injury can be proved. Generally, punitive or exemplary damages are awarded only if compensatory or actual damages have been sustained.

Compensatory or actual damages consist of both general and special damages. General damages are the natural, necessary, and usual result of the wrongful act or occurrence in question. Special damages are those "which are the natural, but not the necessary and inevitable result of the wrongful act."

See also Injury; Just compensation; Loss; Pain and suffering.

Actual damages. Real, substantial and just damages, or the amount awarded to a complainant in compensation for his actual and real loss or injury, as opposed on the one hand to "nominal" damages, and on the other to "exemplary" or "punitive" damages. Synonymous with "compensatory damages" and with "general damages."

Civil Damage Acts. See Dram Shop Acts.

Compensatory damages. Compensatory damages are such as will compensate the injured party for the injury sustained, and nothing more; such as will simply make good or replace the loss caused by the wrong or injury. Damages awarded to a person as compensation, indemnity, or restitution for harm sustained by him. Northwestern Nat. Cas. Co. v. McNulty, C.A.Fla., 307 F.2d 432, 434.

Consequential damages. Such damage, loss or injury as does not flow directly and immediately from the act of the party, but only from some of the consequences or results of such act. Richmond Redevelopment and Housing Authority v. Laburnum Const. Corp., 195 Va. 827, 80 S.E.2d 574, 580. Damages which arise from intervention of special circumstances are not ordinarily predictable. Roanoke Hospital Ass'n v. Doyle & Russell, Inc., 215 Va. 796, 214 S.E.2d 155, 160. Those losses or injuries which are the result of an act but are not direct and immediate. Consequential damages resulting from a seller's breach of contract include any loss resulting from general or particular requirements and needs of which the seller at the time of contracting had reason to know and which could not reasonably be prevented by cover or otherwise, and injury to person or property proximately resulting from any breach of warranty. U.C.C. § 2–715(2).

Continuing damages. Such as accrue from the same injury, or from the repetition of similar acts, between two specified periods of time.

Criminal damage. Criminal damage to property is by means other than by fire or explosive: (a) Willfully injuring, damaging, mutilating, defacing, destroying, or substantially impairing the use of any property in which another has an interest without the consent of such other person; or (b) Injuring, damaging, mutilating, defacing, destroying, or substantially impairing the use of any property with intent to injure or defraud an insurer or lienholder. See Arson.

Damages ultra. Additional damages claimed by a plaintiff not satisfied with those paid into court by the defendant.

Direct damages. Direct damages are such as follow immediately upon the act done. Damages which arise naturally or ordinarily from breach of contract; they are damages which, in ordinary course of human experience, can be expected to result from breach. Roanoke Hospital Ass'n v. Doyle & Russell, Inc., 215 Va. 796, 214 S.E.2d 155, 160.

Excessive damages. Damages awarded by a jury which are grossly in excess of the amount warranted by law on the facts and circumstances of the case; unreasonable or outrageous damages. See Remittitur.

Excess liability damages. A cause of action in tort by an insured against his liability carrier for the negligent handling of settlement negotiations which result in a judgment against the insured in excess of his policy limits. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. v. American Indemnity Co., Tex.Com.App., 15 S.W.2d 544.

Exemplary or punitive damages. Exemplary damages are damages on an increased scale, awarded to the plaintiff over and above what will merely compensate him for his property loss, where the wrong done to him was aggravated by circumstances of violence, oppression, malice, fraud, or wanton and wicked conduct on the part of the defendant, and are intended to solace the plaintiff for mental anguish, laceration of his feelings, shame, degradation, or other aggravations of the original wrong, or else to punish the defendant for his evil behavior or to make an example of him, for which reason they are also called "punitive" or "punitory" damages or "vindictive" damages. Unlike compensatory or actual damages, punitive or exemplary damages are based upon an entirely different public policy consideration—that of punishing the defendant or of setting an example for similar wrongdoers, as above noted. In cases in which it is proved that a defendant has acted willfully, maliciously, or fraudulently, a plaintiff may be awarded exemplary damages in addition to compensatory or actual damages. Damages other than compensatory damages which may be awarded against person to punish him for outrageous conduct. Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America, 18 C.A.3d 266, 95 Cal.Rptr. 678, 680.

Expectancy damages. As awarded in actions for nonperformance of contract, such damages are calculable by subtracting the injured party's actual dollar position as a result of the breach from that party's projected dollar position had performance occurred. The goal is to ascertain the dollar amount necessary to ensure that the aggrieved party's position after the award will be the same—to the extent money can achieve the identity—as if the other party had performed. Alover Distrib., Inc. v. Kroger Co., C.A.III., 513 F.2d 1137, 1140; Pletz v. Christian Herald Ass'n, C.A.Tex., 486 F.2d 94, 97.

Fee damages. Damages sustained by and awarded to an abutting owner of real property occasioned by the construction and operation of an elevated railroad in a city street, are so called, because compensation is made to the owner for the injury to, or deprivation of, his easements of light, air, and access, and these are parts of the fee.

Future damages. See Future damages.

General damages. Such as the law itself implies or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of, for the reason that they are its immediate, direct, and proximate result, or such as necessarily result from the injury, or such as did in fact result from the wrong, directly and proximately, and without reference to the special character, condition, or circumstances of the plaintiff. Myers v. Stephens, 43 Cal.Rptr. 420, 433, 233 C.A.2d 104.

Inadequate damages. Damages are called “inadequate,” within the rule that an injunction will not be granted where adequate damages at law could be recovered for the injury sought to be prevented, when such a recovery at law would not compensate the parties and place them in the position in which they formerly stood.

Incidental damages. Under U.C.C. § 2–710, such damages include any commercially reasonable charges, expenses or commissions incurred in stopping delivery, in the transportation, care and custody of goods after the buyer's breach, in connection with the return or resale of the goods or otherwise resulting from the breach. Also, such damages, resulting from a seller's breach of contract, include expenses reasonably incurred in inspection, receipt, transportation and care and custody of goods rightfully rejected, any commercially reasonable charges, expenses or commissions in connection with effecting cover and any other reasonable expense incidental to the delay or other breach. U.C.C. § 2–715(1).

Irreparable damages. In the law pertaining to injunctions, damages for which no certain pecuniary standard exists for measurement. Damages not easily ascertainable at law. With reference to public nuisances which a private party may enjoin, the term includes wrongs of a repeated and continuing character, or which occasion damages estimable only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard.

Land damages. A term sometimes applied to the amount of compensation to be paid for land taken under the power of eminent domain or for injury to, or depreciation of, land adjoining that taken. See Just compensation; also, Severance damages, infra, this topic.

Limitation of damages. Provision in contract or agreement by which parties agree in advance as to the amount or limit of damages for breach. U.C.C. § 2–718. See also Liquidated damages and penalties, below.

Liquidated damages and penalties. The term is applicable when the amount of the damages has been ascertained by the judgment in the action, or when a specific sum of money has been expressly stipulated by the parties to a bond or other contract as the amount of damages to be recovered by either party for a breach of the agreement by the other. Stein v. Bruce, 366 S.W.2d 732, 735. The purpose of a penalty is to secure performance, while the purpose of stipulating damages is to fix the amount to be paid in lieu of performance. The essence of a penalty is a stipulation as in terrorem while the essence of liquidated damages is a genuine covenanted preestimate of such damages.

Liquidated damages is the sum which party to contract agrees to pay if he breaks some promise and, which having been arrived at by good faith effort to estimate actual damage that will probably ensue from breach, is recoverable as agreed damages if breach occurs. In re Plywood Co. of Pa., C.A.Pa., 425 F.2d 151, 154.

Damages for breach by either party may be liquidated in the agreement but only at an amount which is reasonable in the light of the anticipated or actual harm caused by the breach, the difficulties of proof of loss, and the inconvenience or nonfeasibility of otherwise obtaining an adequate remedy. A term fixing unreasonably large liquidated damages is void as a penalty. U.C.C. § 2–718(1).

Mitigation of damages. Although the law of damages contemplates full and just compensation for negligently inflicted injuries, the law likewise prescribes, as a reciprocal principle, that a tortfeasor should not sustain liability for those damages not attributable to the injury producing event. Consequently, a plaintiff may not recover damages for the effects of an injury which reasonably could have been avoided or substantially ameliorated. This limitation on recovery is generally denominated as “mitigation of damages” or “avoidance of consequences.” Mitigation of damages or avoidance of consequences arises only after the injury producing event has occurred.

Necessary damages. A term said to be of much wider scope in the law of damages than “pecuniary.” It embraces all those consequences of an injury usually denominated “general” damages, as distinguished from special damages; whereas the phrase “pecuniary damages” covers a smaller class of damages within the larger class of “general” damages.

Nominal damages. Nominal damages are a trifling sum awarded to a plaintiff in an action, where there is no substantial loss or injury to be compensated, but still the law recognizes a technical invasion of his rights or a breach of the defendant's duty, or in cases where, although there has been a real injury, the plaintiff's evidence entirely fails to show its amount.

Pecuniary damages. Such as can be estimated in and compensated by money; not merely the loss of money or salable property or rights, but all such loss, deprivation, or injury as can be made the subject of calculation and of recompense in money. See also Pecuniary loss.

Presumptive damages. A term occasionally used as the equivalent of “exemplary” or “punitive” damages.

Prospective damages. Damages which are expected to follow from the act or state of facts made the basis of a plaintiff's suit; damages which have not yet accrued, at the time of the trial, but which, in the nature of things, must necessarily, or most probably, result from the acts or facts complained of.

Proximate damages. Proximate damages are the immediate and direct damages and natural results of the act complained of, and such as are usual and might have been expected. Remote damages are those attributable immediately to an intervening cause, though it forms a link in an unbroken chain of causation, so that the remote damage would not have occurred if its elements had not been set in motion by the original act or event.

Punitive damages. See Exemplary or punitive damages, supra.

Remote damages. The unusual and unexpected result, not reasonably to be anticipated from an accidental or unusual combination of circumstances—a result beyond which the negligent party has no control.

Rescissory damages. Such damages contemplate a return of the injured party to the position he occupied before he was induced by wrongful conduct to enter into the transaction. When return of the specific property, right, etc. is not possible (e.g. in a stock fraud transaction, the stock is no longer available), the rescissory damages would be the monetary equivalent (e.g. value of stock).

Severance damages. In condemnation, where the property condemned constitutes only a part of an owner's interest, the owner is entitled to just compensation, not only for the fair market value of the interest actually taken, but also such additional amount as will be equivalent to the diminution or lowering, if any, of the fair market value of the owner's interest in the land which was not taken, due to the severance therefrom of the interest which was taken.

Special damages. Those which are the actual, but not the necessary, result of the injury complained of, and which in fact follow it as a natural and proximate consequence in the particular case, that is, by reason of special circumstances or conditions. Twin Coach Co. v. Chance Vought Aircraft Inc., 2 Storey 588, 163 A.2d 278, 286. Special damages must be specially pleaded and proved. Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(g).

Speculative damages. Prospective or anticipated damages from the same acts or facts constituting the present cause of action, but which depend upon future developments which are contingent, conjectural, or improbable.

Statutory damages. Damages resulting from statutorily created causes of actions, as opposed to actions at common law; e.g. wrongful death and survival actions; actions under tort claims acts; under § 504 of the federal Copyright Act, a copyright owner has the right to collect statutory damages in lieu of actual damages for copyright infringement.

Substantial damages. A sum, assessed by way of damages, which is worth having; opposed to nominal damages, which are assessed to satisfy a bare legal right. Considerable in amount and intended as a real compensation for a real injury.

Temporary damages. Damages allowed for intermittent and occasional wrongs, such as injuries to real estate, where cause thereof is removable or abatable.

Treble damages. See Treble damages.

Unliquidated damages. Such as are not yet reduced to a certainty in respect of amount, nothing more being established than the plaintiff's right to recover; or such as cannot be fixed by a mere mathematical calculation from ascertained data in the case.

Damage to person. The measure of injury, physical, mental and emotional, as a result of another's action or omission, whether such action or omission be intentional or negligent. “Damage" and “injury" are commonly used interchangeably, but they are different to extent that injury is what is actually suffered while damage is the measure of compensation for such suffering. See Damage; Injury; Loss.

Damage to property. Injury to property and generally does not include conversion of such property or taking of such property by public authority. Wandermere Corp. v. State, 79 Wash.2d 688, 488 P.2d 1088. See also Damage.

Damaisou /dámiyas/. In old English law, causing damage or loss, as distinguished from torceuse, wrongful.

Dame. In English law, the legal designation of the wife of a knight or baronet.

Damn, v. /dán/. To invoke condemnation, curse, swear, condemn to eternal punishment, or consign to perdition.

Danma /dámnə/. Damages, both inclusive and exclusive of costs.

Damnatus /dámnéydas/. In old English law, condemned; prohibited by law; unlawful. Damnatus coitus, an unlawful sexual connection.

Damnification /dámnəfəkˈiʃən/. That which causes damage or loss.

Damnify /dámnəfi/. To cause damage or injurious loss to a person or put him in a position where he must sustain it. A surety is "damnified" when a judgment has been obtained against him.

Damnī injūriā actio /dámnay injūriˈiəkʃ(ə)n/. An action given by the civil law for the damage done by one who intentionally injured the slave or beast of another.

Damnosa hereditas /dámnəsə ˈhɛrədɪtəs/. In the civil law, a losing inheritance; an inheritance that was a charge, instead of a benefit.

The term has also been metaphorically applied to that species of property of a bankrupt which, so far from being valuable, would be a charge to the creditors; for example, a term of years where the rent would exceed the revenue.

Damnnum /dámnəm/. Lat. Damage; the loss or diminution of what is a man's own, either by fraud, carelessness, or accident.

Damnnum absque injuria /dámnəm əbˈskwiːjərəˈjaːrə/. Loss, hurt, or harm without injury in the legal sense; that is, without such breach of duty as is redressible by an action. A loss which does not give rise to an action for damages against the person causing it.

Damnnum emergens /dámnəm əˈmɜːrɡəns/. Lat., damage arising. Actual damage or loss as contrasted with future loss or expectancy.

Damnnum fatale /dámnəm ʃəˈtɛli/. Fatal damage; damage from fate; loss happening from a cause beyond human control (quod ex fato contingit), or an act of God, for which bailee is not liable; such as shipwreck, lightning, and the like. The civilians included in the phrase "damnum fatale" all those accidents which are summed up in the common-law expression, "Act of God or public enemies;" though, perhaps, it embraced some which would not now be admitted as occurring from an irresistible force. See Act of God.

Damnum infectum /dámnam inféktám/. In Roman law, damage not yet committed, but threatened or impending. A preventive interdict might be obtained to prevent such damage from happening; and it was treated as a quasi-delict, because of the imminence of the danger.

Damnum rei amissae /dámnam riáy amíṣiy/. In the civil law, a loss arising from a payment made by a party in consequence of an error of law.

Damnum sine injuriā esse potest /dámnam sáñiy injúriá ēsíy pówdast/. There may be damage or injury inflicted without any act of injustice.

Dan. Anciently the better sort of men in England had this title; so the Spanish Don. The old term of honor for men, as we now say Master or Mister.

Danelage /dēnáléy, dénāl/. A system of laws, introduced by the Danes on their invasion and conquest of England, which was principally maintained in some of the midland counties, and also on the eastern coast. 1 Bl.Comm. 65; 4 Bl.Comm. 411.

Danger. Jeopardy; exposure to loss or injury; peril. State v. Londe, 345 Mo. 185, 132 S.W.2d 501, 506. See also Apparent danger; Dangerous; Hazard; Hazardous risk; Imminent danger; Peril; Risk; Unavoidable dangers.

Dangeris /dān̄jir̄īya/. In old English law, a money payment made by forest-tenants, that they might have liberty to plow and sow in time of pannage, or mast feeding.

Danger invites rescue. Term used in law of torts and, in limited manner, in law of crimes to describe where liability is borne by one who creates dangerous condition for one person when another person comes to his rescue and is injured. The liability to the second person is founded on this maxim. Krauth v. Geller, 54 N.J.Super. 442, 149 A.2d 271.

Dangerous. Attended with risk; perilous; hazardous; unsafe. See also Danger.

Dangerous criminal. One convicted of a particularly heinous crime or one who has escaped or tried to escape from penal confinement by use of force of an aggravated character. Such criminals may be segregated within prison.

Dangerous instrumentality. Anything which has the inherent capacity to place people in peril, either in itself (e.g. dynamite), or by a careless use of it (e.g. boat). Green v. Ross, D.C.Fla., 338 F.Supp. 365, 367. Due care must be exercised in using to avoid injury to those reasonably expected to be in proximity. Pendleton Woolen Mills v. Vending Associates, 195 Neb. 46, 237 N.W.2d 99. In certain cases, absolute liability may be imposed. See also Dangerous weapon; Deadly weapon; Strict liability.

Dangerous machine. A machine is "dangerous" in such sense that the employer is required to guard it, if, in the ordinary course of human affairs, danger may be reasonably anticipated from the use of it without protection.

Dangerous occupation. Term used to describe hazardous work for purposes of worker's compensation laws, and in wage and hour and child labor laws.

Dangerous per se. A thing that may inflict injury without the immediate application of human aid or instrumentality.

Dangerous place. One where there is considerable risk, or danger, or peril; one where accidents or injuries are very apt to occur. Henri v. Rocky Mountain Packing Corp., 113 Utah 415, 196 P.2d 487, 489.

Dangerous-tendency test. Propensity of person or animal to inflict injury; used in dog bite cases to describe vicious habits of dog. Frazier v. Stone, 515 S.W.2d 766 (Mo.App.).

Dangerous weapon. One dangerous to life; one by the use of which a fatal wound may probably or possibly be given. As the manner of use enters into the consideration as well as other circumstances, the question is often one of fact for the jury, but not infrequently one of law for the court. See also Assault with dangerous or deadly weapon; Dangerous instrumentality; Deadly weapon.

Dangers of navigation. See Dangers of the river; Dangers of the sea, infra.

Dangers of the river. This phrase, as used in bills of lading, means only the natural accidents incident to river navigation, and does not embrace such as may be avoided by the exercise of that skill, judgment, or foresight which are demanded from persons in a particular occupation. It includes dangers arising from unknown reefs which have suddenly formed in the channel, and are not discoverable by care and skill.

Dangers of the sea. The expression "dangers of the sea" means those accidents peculiar to navigation that are of an extraordinary nature, or arise from irresistible force or overwhelming power, which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. Hibernia Ins. Co. v. Transp. Co., 120 U.S. 166, 7 S.Ct. 550, 30 L.Ed. 621.

Danism /dâniẑam/. The act of lending money or usury.

Dans et retinens, nihil dat /dânz et rétdanësz nával dët/. One who gives and yet retains does not give effectually. Or, one who gives, yet retains [possession], gives nothing.

Dare /déry/ . Lat. In the civil law, to transfer property. When this transfer is made in order to discharge a debt, it is datio solvendi animo; when in order to receive an equivalent, to create an obligation, it is datio contrahendi animo; lastly, when made donandi animo, from mere liberality, it is a gift, dono datio.

Dare ad remanentaliam /dérīy əd rēmanēnsh(t)am/. To give away in fee, or forever.

Darraign /dārēyn/. To clear a legal account; to answer an accusation; to settle a controversy.

Darreln /dārēyn/. L. Fr. Last.

Darreln continuance /dārēyn kantīnyuwan(t)es/. The last continuance.

Darreln presentment /dārēyn präsēntmənt/. In old English law, the last presentment. See Assise of darreln presentment.

Darreln seisin /dārēyn sīyəzn/. Last seisin. A plea at common law which lay in some cases for the tenant in a writ of right.

Dartmouth College Case. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. 518, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L.Ed. 629, held that a college charter was a contract within the constitutional provision against state legislatures’ prohibiting impairment of the obligation of contract. Art. I, Sec. 10, U.S.Const. Although Dartmouth College involved a charitable and educational institution, the Supreme Court readily expanded the principles announced in the opinion to corporate charters issued for business purposes. Consequently, the decision protected industrial and financial corporations from much government regulation.

Dash. The em dash (—) or the en dash (–) is often used to indicate the omission of the intermediate terms of a series which are to be supplied in reading, being thus often equivalent to * * * inclusive; thus Mark iv, 3–20 (that is, verses 3 to 20, inclusive); the years 1880–1888 (that is, 1880 to 1888).

Data. Organized information generally explained as the basis for an adjudication or decision. Commonly, organized information, collected for specific purpose.

In old practice and conveyancing, the date of a deed; the time when it was given; that is, executed. Grounds whereon to proceed; facts from which to draw a conclusion.

Date. The specification or mention, in a written instrument, of the time (day, month and year) when it was made (executed). Also the time so specified.

The word is derived from the Latin word “datum” meaning given and is defined as the time given or specified—in some way ascertained and fixed. The time when an instrument was made, acknowledged, delivered or recorded; the clause or memorandum which specifies that fact; and the time from which its operation is to be reckoned.

That part of a deed or writing which expresses the day of the month and year in which it was made or given.

The primary signification of date is not time in the abstract, nor time taken absolutely, but time given or specified; time in some way ascertained and fixed. When we speak of the date of a deed, date of issue of a bond or date of a policy, we do not mean the time when it was actually executed, but the time of its execution as given or stated in the deed itself. The date of an item, or of a charge in a book-account, is not necessarily the time when the article charged was, in fact, furnished, but rather the time given or set down in the account, in connection with such charge. And so the expression “the date of the last work done, or materials furnished,” in a mechanic’s lien law, may be taken, in the absence of anything in the act indicating a different intention, to mean the time when such work was done or materials furnished, as specified in the plaintiff’s written claim.

The precise meaning of date, however, depends upon context, since there are numerous instances when it means actual as distinguished from conventional time.

See also Antedate; Backdating; Post-date.

Date certain /dāt sērēyn/. In French law, a deed is said to be a date certain (fixed date) when it has been subjected to the formality of registration. After this formalism has been complied with, the parties to the deed cannot by mutual consent change the date thereof.

Date of bankruptcy. Under Bankruptcy law, time at which court declares a person a bankrupt. Usually coincides with date of filing in case of voluntary petition. See also Date of cleavage.

Date of cleavage. The date of filing voluntary petition of bankruptcy and hence the cut-off date as to dischargeability of debts in bankruptcy. Only those debts, with some exceptions, which exist at this time are dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Date of injury. Means inception date of the injury and is regarded as coincident with date of occurrence or happening of accident which caused such injury. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America v. Williams, 129 Tex. 51, 99 S.W.2d 905, 907.

Date of Issue. When applied to notes, bonds, etc., of series, usually means an arbitrary date fixed as beginning of term for which they run, without reference to precise time when convenience of state of market may permit their sale or delivery; date which bonds and stocks bear, and not date when they were actually issued in sense of being signed and delivered and put into circulation. Whetstone v. City of Stuttgart, 193 Ark. 88, 97 S.W.2d 641, 643.

The words in life insurance policy have been held not to mean the date of actual execution or the delivery date, but the date set forth in the policy itself. Potts v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 133 Pa.Super. 397, 2 A.2d 870, 872.

Date of maturity. Day on which a debt falls due as in the case of a promissory note, bond or other evidence of indebtedness.

Datio /dāsh(ə)əw/. In the civil law, a giving, or act of giving. Datio in solutum; a giving in payment; a species of accord and satisfaction. Called, in modern law, “dation.”

Dation /dāshən/. In the civil law, a gift; a giving of something. It is not exactly synonymous with “donation,” for the latter implies generosity or liberality in making a gift, while dation may mean the giving of something to which the recipient is already entitled.
Dation en palemment /déyshan an péymant/dasyówn on péymóon/. In French law, a giving by the debtor and receipt by the creditor of something in payment of a debt, instead of a sum of money. It is somewhat like the accord and satisfaction of the common law.

Dative /déydow/. A word derived from the Roman law, signifying "appointed by public authority." Thus, in Scotland, an executor-dative is an executor appointed by a court; corresponding or equivalent to an English administrator or "administrator with the will annexed". In old English law, in one's gift; that may be given and disposed of at will and pleasure.

Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt /dév t(y)úwà dám t(y)úwà sánt, pówst mórdam tánk t(y)úwà nón sánt/. Give the things which are yours whilst they are yours; after death they are not yours.

Datum /déydam/. A first principle; a thing given; a date.

Datur digniori /dévdar diglyóray/. It is given to the more worthy.

Daughter. Female offspring.

Daughter-in-law. Wife of one's son.

Day. 1. A period of time consisting of twenty-four hours and including the solar day and the night.

2. The period of time during which the earth makes one revolution on its axis. Long v. City of Wichita Falls, 142 Tex. 202, 176 S.W.2d 936, 938, 939.

3. The space of time which elapses between two successive midnights. Long v. City of Wichita Falls, 142 Tex. 202, 176 S.W.2d 936, 938, 939.

4. The whole or any part of period of 24 hours from midnight to midnight. Talbott v. Caudill, 248 Ky. 146, 58 S.W.2d 385.

5. That portion of time during which the sun is above the horizon, and, in addition, that part of the morning and evening during which there is sufficient light for the features of a man to be reasonably discerned. U.S. v. Martin, D.C.Mass., 33 F.2d 639, 640. Compare Nighttime.

6. An artificial period of time, computed from one fixed point to another twenty-four hours later, without any reference to the prevalence of light or darkness.

7. The period of time, within the limits of a natural day, set apart either by law or by common usage for the transaction of particular business or the performance of labor; as in banking, in laws regulating the hours of labor, in contracts for so many "days work," and the like, the word "day" may signify six, eight, ten, or any number of hours.

8. In practice and pleading, a particular time assigned or given for the appearance in court, the return of process, etc.

Artificial day. The time between the rising and setting of the sun; that is, day or daytime as distinguished from night.

Astronomical day. The period of twenty-four hours beginning and ending at noon.

Banking day. See Banking day.

Calendar days. See Calendar.

Civil day. The solar day, measured by the diurnal revolution of the earth, and denoting the interval of time which elapses between the successive transits of the sun over the same hour circle, so that the "civil day" commences and ends at midnight.

Clear days. See Clear.

Common days. In old English practice, an ordinary day in court.

Daytime. See Daytime.

Juridical day. A day proper for the transaction of business in court. One on which the court may lawfully sit, excluding Sundays, holidays, and other days specifically excluded by statute or court rule. Fed.R.Civil P. 77.

Law day. Currently, May 1st of each year is designated "Law Day" and is observed in schools, public assemblies, and courts, in honor and respect of our legal system.

The day prescribed in a bond, mortgage, or defeasible deed for payment of the debt secured thereby; maturity date.

Natural day. Properly the period of twenty-four hours from midnight to midnight. Though sometimes taken to mean the daytime or time between sunrise and sunset.

Solar day. A term sometimes used as meaning that portion of the day when the sun is above the horizon, but properly it is the time between two complete (apparent) revolutions of the sun, or between two consecutive positions of the sun over any given terrestrial meridian, and hence, according to the usual method of reckoning, from noon to noon at any given place.

Day-book. A tradesman's account book; a book in which all the occurrences of the day are set down. It is usually a book of original entries.

Day certain. A fixed or appointed day; a specified particular day; a day in term.

Day in court. The right and opportunity afforded a person to litigate his claims, seek relief, or defend his rights in a competent judicial tribunal.

The time appointed for one whose rights are called judicially in question, or liable to be affected by judicial action, to appear in court and be heard in his own behalf. This phrase, as generally used, means not so much the time appointed for a hearing as the opportunity to present one's claims or rights in a proper forensic hearing before a competent tribunal.

A litigant has his "day in court" when he has been duly cited to appear and has been afforded an opportunity to appear and to be heard. Cohen v. City of Houston, Tex.Civ.App., 185 S.W.2d 450, 452; In re Hampton's Estate, 55 Cal.App.2d 543, 131 P.2d 565, 573.

Daylight. See Daytime.
DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME

Daylight saving time. Time each year from Spring through Fall when clocks are set ahead one hour to give people more daylight at end of working day. Daylight saving time is one hour later than Standard Time for the locality.

Day of atonement. See Yom Kippur.

Day order. An order to buy or sell a security or commodity on a particular day and if such sale does not take place, the order expires.

Day-rule, or day-writ. In English law, a permission granted to a prisoner to go out of prison, for the purpose of transacting his business, as to hear a case in which he was concerned at the assizes, etc. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict., c. 22, § 12 (1842).

Days in bank. (L. Lat. dies in banco.) In old English law, certain stated days in term appointed for the appearance of parties, the return of process, etc., originally peculiar to the court of common pleas, or bench (bank), as it was anciently called. 3 Bl.Com. 277.

By the common law, the defendant was allowed three full days in which to make his appearance in court, exclusive of the day of appearance or return-day named in the writ; 3 Bl.Com. 278. Upon his appearance, time was usually granted him for pleading; and this was called giving him day, or, as it was more familiarly expressed, a continuance. 3 Bl. Comm. 316. When the suit was ended by discontinuance or by judgment for the defendant, he was discharged from further attendance, and was said to go thereof sine die, without day. See Continuance.

Daysman. An arbitrator, umpire, or elected judge.

Days of grace. A number of days allowed, as a matter of favor or grace, to a person who has to perform some act, or make some payment, after the time originally limited for the purpose has elapsed.

In old practice, three days allowed to persons summoned in the English courts, beyond the day named in the writ, to make their appearance; the last day being called the "quarto die post". 3 Bl.Com. 278.

In mercantile law, a certain number of days (generally three) allowed to the maker or acceptor of a bill, draft, or note, in which to make payment, after the expiration of the time expressed in the paper itself. Originally these days were granted only as a matter of grace or favor, but the allowance of them became an established custom of merchants, and was sanctioned by the courts (and in some cases prescribed by statute), so that they are now demandable as of right. Bell v. Bank, 115 U.S. 373, 6 S.Ct. 105, 29 L.Ed. 409; Renner v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 581, 6 L.Ed. 166.

See also Grace period.

Daytime. The time during which there is the light of day, as distinguished from night or nighttime. That portion of the full twenty-four hour day in which a man's countenance is visible by natural light and, hence, that portion of the day which is distinguished from nighttime in crime of burglary; nighttime being the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise. Model Penal Code, § 221.0(2). Word "daytime" as used in statutory crime of breaking and entering a dwelling in the daytime means that time of day when there is sufficient daylight so as to be able to discern the features of another by natural sunlight. State v. Briggs, 161 Conn. 283, 287 A.2d 369, 373.

Under Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 41(h), relating to search and seizure, "daytime" means the hours from 6:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m.

See also Nighttime.

Daywere. In old English law, a term applied to land, and signifying as much arable ground as could be plowed up in one day's work.

D.B. Abbreviation for Doomsday Book.

D.B.A. Abbreviation for "doing business as."

D.B.E. An abbreviation for de bene esse (q.v.).

D.B.N. An abbreviation for de bonis non; descriptive of a species of administration.

D.C. An abbreviation standing either for "District Court," or "District of Columbia."

DDB. Double-declining-balance depreciation. See Depreciation.

De /dī/. A Latin preposition, signifying of; by; from; out of; affecting; concerning; respecting.

Deacon /dīˈkan/. In ecclesiastical law, a minister or servant in the church, whose office is to assist the priest in divine service and the distribution of the sacrament. It is the lowest degree of holy orders in the Church of England.

De acquirendo rerum domino /dī əkˈwærəndəʊ rɪrəm dəm(ɪ)n juː/ Of (about) acquiring the ownership of things.

Dead asset. Worthless asset which has no realizable value; e.g. uncollectable account receivable.

Dead beat. Slang term for one who fails to pay his debts.

Dead body. A corpse. The body of a human being, deprived of life.

Dead-born. A dead-born child is to be considered as if it had never been conceived or born; in other words, it is presumed it never had life, it being a maxim of the common law that mortuus exitus non est exitus (a dead birth is no birth). This is also the doctrine of the civil law.

Dead freight. The amount paid by a charterer for that part of the vessel's capacity which he does not occupy although he has contracted for it.

Deadhead. A term formerly applied to persons other than the officers, agents, or employees of a railroad company who were permitted by the company to travel on the road without paying any fare therefor.

Dead letter. A term sometimes applied to a law that has become obsolete by long disuse, and also to a letter that is undeliverable by the postal service because of insufficient address or postage and absence of return address.

Deadlocked jury. See Dynamite instruction.
Deadly force. Force likely or intended to cause death or great bodily harm; may be reasonable or unreasonable, depending on the circumstances.

Deadly weapon. Any firearm, or other weapon, device, instrument, material or substance, whether animate or inanimate, which in the manner it is used or is intended to be used is known to be capable of producing death or serious bodily injury. Model Penal Code, § 210.0.

Such weapons or instruments as are made and designed for offensive or defensive purposes, or for the destruction of life or the infliction of injury. One which, from the manner used, is calculated or likely to produce death or serious bodily injury. Austin v. State, Fla.App., 336 So.2d 480, 481.

See also Deadly weapon; Malicious assault with deadly weapon.

Deadly weapon per se. A weapon which of itself is deadly or one which would ordinarily result in death by its use; e.g. gun. Baylor v. State, 151 Tex.Cr.R. 365, 208 S.W.2d 558, 561.

Dead man's part. In English law, that portion of the effects of a deceased person which, by the custom of London and York, is allowed to the administrator; being, where the deceased leaves a widow and children, one-third; where he leaves only a widow or only children, one-half; and, where he leaves neither, the whole. This portion the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, till the statute 1 Jac. II, c. 17, declared that the same should be subject to the statute of distributions. 2 Bl.Comm. 518.

Dead man's statute. An evidential disqualification which renders inadmissible oral promises or declarations of a dead person when offered in support of their claims by those who bring claims against the estate of the dead person. The last vestige of the disqualification of witnesses by reason of interest as this existed at common law, though many states admit such testimony under certain statutory conditions. The standard type of state dead man statute would be applicable under Fed.R.Evid. 601 only if testimony of the witness concerned claims or defenses, or elements thereof, which were governed by state law.

De admensuratione /dɪˈadmɛnsərəˈʃiːənə/ Of admeasurement. Thus, de admensuratione dotis was a writ for the admeasurement of dower, and de admensuratione pasture was a writ for the admeasurement of pasture.

Dead-pledge. A mortgage, mortuum vadium.

Dead rent. In English law, a rent payable on a mining lease in addition to a royalty, so called because it is payable although the mine may not be worked.

Dead stock. Goods in inventory for which there is no market.

Dead storage. The storage, especially of automobiles in public garages, where automobiles not in use are to remain uninterruptedly for a time, sometimes for the season.

Dead time. Time which does not count for any purpose, e.g. time for which a person is not paid wages, or time when employee is not working due to no fault of his own (e.g. because of machinery breakdown), or time for which a prisoner does not get credit in serving his sentence.

Dead use. A future use.

De advisamento consilli nostri /diː ədˈvɛɪzəməntəʊ kɔnˈsɪliː nəʊˈstriː/. L. Lat. With or by the advice of our council. A phrase used in the old wrigs of summons to parliament.

De equitate /diː əˈkwɪteɪdiː/. In equity, de jure stricto, nihil possum vendicare; de equitate tamen, nullo modo hoc obtinet; in strict law. I can claim nothing, but in equity this by no means obtains.

De estimato /diː əˈstɛməˌdəʊ/ In Roman law, one of the innominate contracts, and, in effect, a sale of land or goods at a price fixed (estimato), and guarantied by some third party, who undertook to find a purchaser.

De state probanda /diː ɪˈtɛdɪdɪəˌprɒbənə/. For proving age. A writ which formerly lay to summon a jury in order to determine the age of the heir of a tenant in capite who claimed his estate as being of full age.

Deafforest /diːəˈfoʊrərɛst/. See Disafforest.

Deaf person. Any person whose hearing is so seriously impaired as to prohibit the person from understanding oral communications when spoken in a normal conversational tone. See Ga. Code Ann. § 99–4001.

Deal, n. An arrangement to attain a desired result by a combination of interested parties; the prime object being usually the purchase, sale, or exchange of property for a profit. Also, an act of buying and selling; a bargain to purchase at a favorable price. See Bargain.

Deal, v. To traffic; to transact business; to bargain or trade. Also, to act between two persons, to intervene, or to have to do with.

As to dealing in futures, see Futures contract.

Dealer. In the popular sense, one who buys to sell; not one who buys to keep, or makes to sell. One who purchases goods for resale to final customers.

The term “dealer” means any person engaged in the business of buying and selling securities for his own account, through a broker or otherwise, but does not include a bank, or any person insofar as he buys or sells securities for his own account, either individually or in some fiduciary capacity, but not as a part of a regular business. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3.

Dealer’s talk. The puffing of goods to induce the sale thereof; not regarded in law as fraudulent unless accompanied by some artifice to deceive the purchaser and throw him off his guard or some concealment of intrinsic defects not easily discoverable. See Puffing.

Dealings. Transactions in the course of trade or business.
De allocatione facienda /dïə ælæk̞ɛʃiʊˈwɪni fɛːs(h)iˈwɛnda/. Breve. Writ for making an allowance. An old writ directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the exchequer, for allowing certain officers (as collectors of customs) in their accounts certain payments made by them.

De alto et basso /dïə æltow ët bæsow/. Of high and low. A phrase anciently used to denote the absolute submission of all differences to arbitration.

De ambitu /dïə æmbiˈtju/. Lat. Concerning bribery. A phrase descriptive of the subject-matter of several of the Roman laws; as the Lex Avidia, the Lex Pompeia, the Lex Tullia, and others. See Ambitus.

De ampliori gratia /dïə æmpliˈɔrətʃre grɛˈʃi(ə)wə/. Of more abundant or especial grace.

Dean. Administrative or academic head of school, college or university. There may be several kinds of deans in larger schools (e.g. dean of student affairs, academic dean) and also deans of specific schools within university. Administrator in charge of counseling and disciplining students in college or secondary school.

In England, an ecclesiastical dignitary who presides over the chapter of a cathedral, and is next in rank to the bishop. So called from having been originally appointed to superintend ten canons or prebendaries.

1 Bl.Comm. 382.

De anno bisextill /dïə ˈænɔw ˈbæʃɛskˈtɛɪlɛjə/. Of the bissextile or leap year. The title of a statute passed in the twenty-first year of Henry III, which in fact, however, is nothing more than a sort of writ or direction to the justices of the bench, instructing them how the extraordinary day in the leap year was to be reckoned in cases where persons had a day to appear at the distance of a year, as on the essoin de malo lecti, and the like. It was thereby directed that the additional day should, together with that which went before, be reckoned only as one, and so, of course, within the preceding year.

De annua pensione /dïə ˈænjuwa ˈpɛnʃiʊˈwɪni/.

Breve. Writ of annual pension. An ancient writ by which the king, having a yearly pension due him out of an abbey or priory for any of his chaplains, demanded the same of the abbot or prior, for the person named in the writ.

De annuo reditu /dïə ˈænuwɔw ˈrɛdɪtwu/. For a yearly rent. A writ to recover an annuity, no matter how payable, in goods or money.

Dean of the Arches. In England, the presiding judge of the Court of Arches.

De apostata capiendo /dïə æpəˈstɛtiə ˈkæpiˈwɛndow/.

Breve. Writ for taking an apostate. A writ which anciently lay against one who, having entered and professed some order of religion, left it and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order, commanding the sheriff to apprehend him and deliver him again to his abbot or prior.

De arbitratione facta /dïə ˈærɪbrɛtʃɾɛʃiʊˈwɪni fɛktə/.

(Lat. Of arbitration had.) A writ formerly used when an action was brought for a cause which had been settled by arbitration.

De arrestandis bonis ne dissipentur /dïə ærɛstəndəs bɔwناس ni ðəsɪˈpɛntər/. An old writ which lay to seize goods in the hands of a party during the pendency of a suit, to prevent their being made away with.

De arrestando ipsum qui pecuniam recepta /dïə ærɛstəndəw ipsum kwæˈpʌkʌniəm rɛˈspɛkta/. A writ which lay for the arrest of one who had taken the king’s money to serve in the war, and hid himself to escape going.

De asportatis religiosorum /dïə æspɔrtətɪs ˈrɛliˌdʒiʊsɔrʊm/.

Concerning the property of religious persons carried away. The title of the statute 35 Edward I, passed to check the abuses of clerical possessions, one of which was the waste they suffered by being drained into foreign countries.

De assisa proroganda /dïə æˈsɨza prɔˈrɔɡəndə/. (Lat. For proroguing assise.) A writ to put off an assise, issuing to the justices, where one of the parties is engaged in the service of the king.

Death. The cessation of life; permanent cessations of all vital functions and signs. Numerous states have enacted statutory definitions of death which include brain-related criteria.

See also Contemplation of death; Presumption of death; Simultaneous Death Act; Wrongful death action.

Brain death. See Brain death; also Natural Death Acts, below.

Civil death. See Civil death.

Death benefits. Amount paid under insurance policy on death of insured. A payment made by an employer to the beneficiary or beneficiaries of a deceased employee on account of the death of the employee.

Death by wrongful act. Statutory action arising from act to which law attaches absolute liability as in the case of serving unwholesome food that results in death, the action for which may be brought by personal representative of deceased. See also Wrongful death statutes.

Death certificate. Official document issued by Registrar of Deaths or some other public official which certifies that a person has died. Generally such certificate specifies the cause of death, and is commonly required to be signed by the attending or an examining physician. Fed.Evid.R. 803(9) provides a hearsay exception for admissibility of death certificates.

Death duty. See Death taxes, infra.

Death penalty. Supreme penalty exacted as punishment for murder and other capital crimes; held not to be, under all circumstances, cruel and unusual punishment within prohibitions of 8th and 14th Amendments, U.S.Const. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S.Ct. 2909, 49 L.Ed.2d 859.

Death records. Official records of deaths kept by town or city Register of Deaths or by some other public official with like functions. See Death certificate, supra.

Death sentence. See Death penalty, supra.

Death taxes. Generic term to describe all taxes imposed on property or on transfer of property at death.
of owner. Includes estate and inheritance taxes. See Estate tax; Inheritance tax.

Death warrant. A warrant from the proper executive authority appointing the time and place for the execution of the sentence of death upon a convict judicially condemned to suffer that penalty.

Fetal death. See Fetal death.

Instantaneous death. Term to describe death following accident within a very short time such as 15–20 minutes; such concept is important in death actions in which a claim is made for pain and suffering.

Natural death. A death which occurs by the unassisted operation of natural causes, as distinguished not only from "civil death", but also from "unnatural" (e.g. violent) death.

Natural Death Acts. Such statutes (e.g. Cal. Health & Safety Code § 7185 et seq.) authorize an adult to make a written directive instructing his physician to withhold life-sustaining procedures in the event of a terminal condition. In the directive, which is to be executed in a prescribed manner and made a part of the patient's medical records, the declarant directs that if he has been certified by two physicians as being afflicted with a terminal condition, he is to be permitted to die naturally. The Act removes all civil or criminal liability from physicians who act in accordance with its provisions. See also Brain death.

Presumptive death. That which is presumed from proof of a long continued absence unheard from and unexplained. The general rule, as provided by state statutes, is that the presumption of the duration of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the time when the person was last known to be living; and after the lapse of that period there is a presumption of death.

Violent death. One caused or accelerated by the interference of human agency; distinguished from "natural death."

Deathsman. The executioner; hangman; person that executes capital punishment.

Death's part. See Dead man's part.

De attorno recipiendo /diy aterrëndow rëspìplyëndow/. A writ which lay to the judges of a court, requiring them to receive and admit an attorney for a party.

De audiendo et terminando /diy odyëndow ët tärmanëndow/. For hearing and determining; to hear and determine. The name of a writ, or rather commission granted to certain justices to hear and determine cases of heinous misdemeanor, trespass, riotous breach of the peace, etc. See Oyer and Terminer.

De averís captís in wíthnëmum /diy zvâriys këptas an wiðårëmîyam/. Writ for taking cattle in withernam. A writ which lay where the sheriff returned to a plurès writ of replevin that the cattle or goods, etc., were eloned, etc.; by which he was commanded to take the cattle of the defendant in withernam (or reprisal), and detain them until he could replevy the other cattle. See Withernam.

De averís repelëgandis /diy zvâriys rëspëliiyëndës/. A writ to replevy beasts. 3 Bl.Comm. 149.

De banco /diy baŋkow/. Of the bench. A term formerly applied in England to the justices of the court of common pleas, or "bench," as it was originally styled.

Debarment. To bar, exclude or preclude from having or doing something. Exclusion from government contracting and subcontracting. See also Disbarment.

Debasement. Reducing the weight of gold and silver in coins of standard value or of increasing the amount of alloy in such coins. Such has the effect of reducing the intrinsic value.

Debauch /dabôch/. To corrupt one's manners; to make lewd; to mar or spoil; to entice; and, when used of a woman, to seduce, or corrupt with lewdness. Originally, the term had a limited signification, meaning to entice or draw one away from his work, employment, or duty; and from this sense its application has enlarged to include the corruption of manners and violation of the person. In its modern legal sense, the word carries with it the idea of "carnal knowledge," aggravated by assault, violent seduction, ravishment. See also Debauchery.

Debauchery /dabôchiar/. In general, excessive indulgence in sensual pleasures; in a narrower sense, sexual immorality or excesses, or the unlawful indulgence of lust.

De bene esse /diy bëniyë esï/dë bëniyë/1. Conditionally; provisionally; in anticipation of future need. A phrase applied to proceedings which are taken ex parte or provisionally, and are allowed to stand as well done for the present, but which may be subject to future exception or challenge, and must then stand or fall according to their intrinsic merit and regularity.

Examination de bene esse. A provisional examination of a witness; an examination of a witness whose testimony is important and might otherwise be lost, held out of court and before the trial, with the proviso that the deposition so taken may be used on the trial in case the witness is unable to attend in person at that time or cannot be produced. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ. P. 26, 27.

Debenture /dëbënçhar/. A promissory note or bond backed by the general credit of a corporation and usually not secured by a mortgage or lien on any specific property.

Certificate issued by customs to an importer for the deduction or refund of duties on merchandise imported and then exported by such importer.
Convertible debenture. Debenture which may be changed or converted into some other security (e.g. stock) usually at the option of the holder.

Convertible subordinated debenture. Debenture which is subject or subordinate to prior payment of other indebtedness but which may be converted into another form of security.

Sinking fund debenture. Debenture which is secured by periodic payments into sinking fund, commonly managed by trustee for purpose of retiring such debt.

Subordinate debenture. Debenture which is subject to or subordinate to prior payment of other indebtedness.

Debenture bond. Bonds not secured by any specific property but issued against the general credit of a corporation of government.

Debenture indenture. An indenture containing obligations not secured by a mortgage or other collateral; a key instrument in the process of long term debt financing for general business corporations. Its effect is to put the debenture-holder in substantially the same practical position as a bondholder secured by a first mortgage.

Debenture stock. In England, a stock or fund representing money borrowed by a company or public body and charged on the whole or part of its property. An issue of stock usually irredeemable and transferable in any amount, not including a fraction of a pound. The terminability and fixity in amount of debentures being inconvenient to lenders led to their being in many cases superseded by debenture stock.

Debet esse finis litium /dēbād ĝis ĝynas lish(y)am/. There ought to be an end of suits; there should be some period put to litigation.

Debet et detinet /dēbād ĝet dēdanat/. (Lat. He owes and detains.) Words anciently used in the original writ (and now, in English, in the plaintiff’s declaration), in an action of debt, where it was brought by one of the original contracting parties who personally gave the credit, against the other who personally incurred the debt, or against his heirs, if they were bound to the payment; as by the obligee against the obligor, by the landlord against the tenant, etc. The declaration, in such cases, states that the defendant “owes to,” as well as “detains from,” the plaintiff the debt or thing in question; and hence the action is said to be “in the debet et detinet”. Where the declaration merely states that the defendant detains the debt (as in actions by and against an executor for a debt due to or from the testator), the action is said to be “in the detinet” alone. 3 Bl.Comm. 155.

Debet quis juri sublacere ubi delinquit /dēbāt kwis ĝuraj sabjazar ĝyŭbaj daiĝnkwat/. One [every one] ought to be subject to the law [of the place] where he offends.

Debet sine breve /dēbāt sāni griyuvi/. (Lat. He owes without declaration filed.) Used in relation to a confession of judgment.

Debet sua cuique domus esse perfugium tutissimum /dēbāt sūkwa kyŭwa kykwii dvūmas ĝis par-fyŭwiyjam tyŭwtsamam/. Every man’s house should be a perfectly safe refuge.

De bien et de mal /dā byĕn ĝ ĝ māl/. L. Fr. For good and evil. A phrase by which a party accused of a crime anciently put himself upon a jury, indicating his entire submission to their verdict; also the name of the special writ of jail delivery formerly in use in England, which issued for each particular prisoner, of course. It was superseded by the general commission of jail delivery.

De biens le mort /dā byǐzn ĝ mɔrt/. L. Fr. Of the goods of the deceased.

De bigamis /dīy bīgamas/. Concerning men twice married. The title of the English statute 4 Edw. 1, S. 3; so called from the initial words of the fifth chapter.

Debile fundamentum fallit opus /dēbily fandräm tam fālts ɔwps/. A weak foundation frustrates [or renders vain] the work [built upon it]. When the foundation fails, all goes to the ground; as, where the cause of action fails, the action itself must of necessity fail.

Debit /dēbat/. A sum charged as due or owing. An entry made on the asset side of a ledger or account. The term is used in book-keeping to denote the left side of the ledger, or the charging of a person or an account with all that is supplied to or paid out for him or for the subject of the account. Also, the balance of an account where it is shown that something remains due to the party keeping the account.

As a noun, an entry on the left-hand side of an account. As a verb, to make an entry on the left-hand side of an account. Records increases in assets and expenses, and decreases in liabilities, owners’ equity, and revenues.

Debita laicorum /dēbāda lēykōram/. L. Lat. In old English law, debts of the laity, or of lay persons. Debts recoverable in the civil courts.

Debita sequuntur personam debitoris /dēbāda sāk-wāntar parsōwnam dēbātoras/. Debts follow the person of the debtor; that is, they have no locality, and may be collected wherever the debtor can be found.

Debit balance. Accounting condition where there is an excess of debit over credit entries.

Debitor /dēbādor/. In the civil and old English law, a debtor.

Debitor non presumitur donare /dēbādor nɔn prazųwmdar dānɛri/. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift. Whatever disposition he makes of his property is supposed to be in satisfaction of his debts. Where a debtor gives money or goods, or grants land to his creditor, the natural presumption is that he means to get free from his obligation, and not to make a present, unless donation be expressed.

Debitorum pactio inus creditorum petio nec tolli nec minui potest /dēbātoram pāksh(y)ōw amb kredtōram pāsh(y)ow nēk tōlaj nēk miyuway pōwĊast/. The rights of creditors can neither be taken away nor diminished by agreements among (or of) the debtors.

Debtrix /dēbratraks/. A female debtor.

Debitum /dēbādam/. Something due, or owing, a debt.
Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci /débadam ét kontraktka sásnt naljas lósway/. Debt and contract are of [belong to] no place; have no particular locality. The obligation in these cases is purely personal, and actions to enforce it may be brought anywhere.

Debitum in praesenti solvendum in futuro /débadam in prazéntai slówendam in fáchurow/. A debt or obligation complete when contracted, but of which the performance cannot be required until some future period.

Debitum sine brevi /débadam sáñny briyvay/. L. Lat. Debt without writ; debt without a declaration. In old practice, this term denoted an action begun by original bill, instead of by writ. In modern usage, it is sometimes applied to a debt evidenced by a confession of judgment without suit. The equivalent Norman-French phrase was “debit sans breve.” Both are abbreviated to d.s.b.

De bone memorie /díy bówny ménarmi/. L. Fr. Of good memory; of sound mind.

De bonis asportatis /díy bównas áspartéydas/. For goods taken away; for taking away goods. The action of trespass for taking personal property is technically called “trespass de bonis asportatis.”

De bonis non /díy bównas nón/. An abbreviation of De bonis non administratis (q.v.).

De bonis non administratis /díy bównas nón adnistréydas/. Of the goods not administered. When an administrator is appointed to succeed another, who has left the estate partially unsettled, he is said to be granted “administration de bonis non,” that is, of the goods not already administered.

De bonis non amovendis /díy bównas nón ámoviéndas/. Writ for not removing goods. A writ anciently directed to the sheriffs of London, commanding them, in cases where a writ of error was brought by a defendant against whom a judgment was recovered, to see that his goods and chattels were safely kept without being removed, while the error remained undetermined, so that execution might be had of them, etc.

De bonis propriis /díy bównas própríyas/. Of his own goods. The technical name of a judgment against an administrator or executor to be satisfied from his own property, and not from the estate of the deceased, as in cases where he has been guilty of a devastavit or of a false plea of plene administravit.

De bonis testatoris, or intestati /díy bównas tésta térás/’/intestéyday/. Of the goods of the testator, or intestate. A term applied to a judgment awarding execution against the property of a testator or intestate, as distinguished from the individual property of his executor or administrator.

De bonis testatoris ac si /díy bównas tésta térás a’x sáy/. (Lat. From the goods of the testator, if he has any, and, if not, from those of the executor.) A judgment rendered where an executor falsely pleads any matter as a release, or, generally, in any case where he is to be charged in case his testator’s estate is insufficient.

De bono et malo /díy bównow et málow/. See De Bien et De Mal.

De bono gestu /díy bównow jéshuw/. For good behavior; for good appearedance.

Debt. A sum of money due by certain and express agreement. A specified sum of money owing to one person from another, including not only obligation of debtor to pay but right of creditor to receive and enforce payment. State v. Ducey, 25 Ohio App.2d 50, 266 N.E.2d 233, 235. Liability on a claim. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(11).

A fixed and certain obligation to pay money or some other valuable thing or things, either in the present or in the future. In a still more general sense, that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services. In a broad sense, any duty to respond to another in money, labor, or service; it may even mean a moral or honorary obligation, unenforceable by legal action. Also, sometimes an aggregate of separate debts, or the total sum of the existing claims against a person or company. Thus we speak of the "national debt", the "bonded debt" of a corporation, etc.

Active debt. One due to a person. Used in the civil law.

Ancestral debt. One of an ancestor which the law compels the heir to pay.

Antecedent debt. See that title.

Bad debt. Uncollectible account receivable. Under National Bank Act, an unsecured debt on which interest or payment is past due for at least six months. See also Bad debt; Bad debt reserve.

Bonded debt. Debt represented by bonds. See Bonded debt.

Common-law action. The name of a common-law action which lies to recover a certain specific sum of money, or a sum that can readily be reduced to a certainty. It is thus distinguished from assumpsit, which lies as well where the sum due is uncertain as where it is certain, and from covenant, which lies only upon contracts evidenced in a certain manner.

It is said to lie in the debet and detinet (when it is stated that the defendant owes and detains), or in the detinet (when it is stated merely that he detains). Debt in the detinet for goods differs from detine, because it is not essential in this action, as in detinue, that the specific property in the goods should have been vested in the plaintiff at the time the action is brought.

Consumer debt. See Consumer debt.

Contingent debt. See Contingent debt.

Convertible debt. Debt which may be changed or converted by creditor into another form of security, e.g. shares of stock. See Debenture (Convertible debenture).

Debt by simple contract. A debt or demand founded upon a verbal or implied contract, or upon any written agreement that is not under seal.

Debt by specialty or special contract. A debt due, or acknowledged to be due, by some deed or instrument under seal; as a deed of covenant or sale, a lease reserving rent, or a bond or obligation. 2 Bl.Comm. 465.
Debt of record. A debt which appears to be due by the evidence of a court of record, as by a judgment or recognition. 2 Bl.Comm. 465.

Existing debt. See Existing debt.

Floating debt. Short-term or current debt, not represented by securities.

Fraudulent debt. A debt created by fraud. Such a debt implies confidence and deception. It implies that it arose out of a contract, express or implied, and that fraudulent practices were employed by the debtor, or by which the creditor was defrauded.

Funded debt. Debt represented by bonds or other securities.

General debt. See that title.

Hypothecary debt. One which is a lien upon an estate.

Installment debt. Debt which is to be repaid in installments; e.g. retail installment contract.

Judgment debt. See Judgment debt.

Legal debts. Those that are recoverable in a court of law, as debt on a bill of exchange, a bond, or a simple contract.

Liquid debt. One which is immediately and unconditionally due. See also Liquidated debt.

Mutual debts. Money due on both sides between two persons. Such debts must be due to and from same persons in same capacity. Cross debts in the same capacity and right, and of the same kind and quality.

Passive debt. A debt upon which, by agreement between the debtor and creditor, no interest is payable, as distinguished from active debt; i.e., a debt upon which interest is payable. As used in another sense, a debt is "active" or "passive" according as the person of the creditor or debtor is regarded; a passive debt being that which a man owes; an active debt that which is owing to him. In this meaning every debt is both active and passive; active as regards the creditor, passive as regards the debtor.

Preferential debts. See that title.

Privileged debt. One which is to be paid before others in case a debtor is insolvent; e.g. secured debt.

Proof of debt. See Proof.

Public debt. That which is due or owing by the government of a state or nation.

Secured debt. Debt secured by collateral; e.g. by mortgage, securities, deed, etc. See Secured transaction.

Simple contract debt. At common law, one where the contract upon which the obligation arises is neither ascertained by matter of record nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence the most simple of any, or by notes unsealed, which are capable of a more easy proof, and therefore only better than a verbal promise. 2 Bl.Comm. 466.

Specialty debt. See Debt by specialty or special contract, supra.

Debt adjusting. Debt adjusting is engaging in the business of making contracts, express or implied, with a debtor whereby the debtor agrees to pay a certain amount of money periodically to the person engaging in the debt adjusting business who shall for a consideration distribute the same among certain specified creditors. See also Debt pooling; Wage earner's plan.

Debt adjustment. Settlement of dispute regarding debt obligation by compromise and adjustment. Term also refers to adjustment of debts of an individual with regular income as provided for under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Act. See also Compromise and settlement; Debt pooling; Wage earner's plan.

Debt cancellation. Under federal tax law, discharge or cancellation of indebtedness ordinarily results in income to debtor when he settles debt for less than amount which he owes. I.R.C. § 61(a)(12). See Bankruptcy.

Debt consolidation. See Debt pooling.

Debtee. A person to whom a debt is due; a creditor.

Debt-equity ratio. Total liabilities divided by total equities.

Debt financing. Raising funds by issuing bonds or notes. Contrasted with equity financing which is raising funds by issuing and selling stocks. Corporate borrowing of money, generally on a long term basis for acquiring working capital or for retiring current indebtedness.

Debt limitations. Ceiling placed on amount of borrowings by individuals, corporations or governments. Certain state constitutions prohibit deficit spending by government.

Debtor. One who owes a debt; he who may be compelled to pay a claim or demand; anyone liable on a claim, whether due or to become due. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. in Macon v. Kunes, 128 Ga.App. 565, 197 S.E.2d 446, 449.

"Debtor" means "the person who owes payment or other performance of the obligation secured, whether or not he owns or has rights in the collateral, and includes the seller of accounts or chattel paper. Where the debtor and the owner of the collateral are not the same person, the term 'debtor' means the owner of the collateral in any provision of the Article dealing with the collateral, the obligor in any provision dealing with the obligation, and may include both where the context so requires." U.C.C. § 9-105(1)(d).

Person or municipality concerning which a bankruptcy case has been commenced. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(12).

See also Absconding debtor; Joint debtors.

Judgment debtor. One who owes money as a result of a judgment in favor of a creditor.

Debt pooling. Arrangement by which debtor adjusts many debts by distributing his assets among several creditors, who may or may not agree to take less than is owed; or, an arrangement by which debtor agrees to pay in regular installments a sum of money to one creditor who agrees to discharge all his debts. Such activities may constitute unauthorized practice of law (as in e.g. Mass.), and may, as well, be an act of bankruptcy. See Act of bankruptcy; Arrangement with creditors; Assignment (Assignment for benefit of creditors); Wage earner’s plan.

Debt security. Any form of corporate security reflected as debt on the books of the corporation in contrast to equity securities such as stock; e.g. bonds, notes and debentures are debt securities.

Debt service. The interest and charges currently payable on a debt, including principal payments.

De cetero /diə sydərəw/. Henceforth.

De calceto reparando /diə kælətədəu rəpəraʊdəu/. Writ for repairing a causeway. An old English writ by which the sheriff was commanded to restrain the inhabitants of a place to repair and maintain a causeway, etc.

Decalogue /dɛkəlɔːg/. The ten commandments which, according to Exodus XX, 1-18, were given by God to Moses. The Jews called them the “Ten Words,” hence the name.

Decanatus /dɛkənædəu/. A deanery. A company of ten persons. Also (and in this sense sometimes spelled Decania, or Decana), a town or tithing, consisting originally of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings compose a hundred. 1 Bl.Comm. 114.

Decania /dɛkənəiə/. The office, jurisdiction, territory, or command of a decanus, or dean.

Decanus /dɛkənəu/. In ecclesiastical and old European law, an officer having supervision over ten; a dean. A term applied not only to ecclesiastical, but to civil and military, officers. Decanus monasticus; a monastic dean, or dean of a monastery; an officer over ten monks. Decanus in majori ecclesia; dean of a cathedral church, presiding over ten prebendaries. Decanus episcopi; a bishop’s or rural dean, presiding over ten clerks or parishes. Decanus frigardi; dean of a friary. An officer among the Saxons who presided over a friary, tithing, decennary, or association of ten inhabitants; otherwise called a “tithing man,” or “bosholder,” his duties being those of an inferior judicial officer. Decanus militaris; a military officer having command of ten soldiers.

In Roman law, an officer having the command of a company or “mess” of ten soldiers. Also an officer at Constantinople having charge of the burial of the dead.

De capitalibus dominis feodali /diə kæpəteləbi dəmənəi fləu(ə)dəi/. Of the chief lords of the fee.

Decapitation. The act of beheading. A mode of capital punishment by cutting off the head.

De capitae minutis /diə kæpəti miŋjuˈtuːs/. Of those who have lost their status, or civil condition. The name of a title in the Pandects. See Capitlis diminutio.

De cartis reddendis /diə kərdəs rədəndəs/. For restoring charters. A writ to secure the delivery of charters or deeds; a writ of detinue.

De catallis reddendis /diə kətələs rədəndəs/. For restoring chattels. A writ to secure the return specifically of chattels detained from the owner.

De cautione admittenda /diə kəʊʃɪəʊniəm aʊdəmatənə/. Writ to take caution or security. A writ which anciently lay against a bishop who held an excommunicated person in prison for his contempt, notwithstanding he had offered sufficient security (idoneam cautionem) to obey the commands of the church; commanding him to take such security and release the prisoner.

Decease, n. Death; not including civil death. See Death.

Decease, v. To die; to depart life, or from life.

Deceased. A dead person.

Decedent. A deceased person, especially one who has lately died. Etymologically the word denotes a person who is dying, but it has come to be used in law as signifying any deceased person, testate or intestate.

Decedent’s estate. Property, both real and personal, which person possesses at the time of his death, and title to it descends immediately to his heirs upon his death subject to the control of the probate court for the purposes of paying debts and claims and after distribution the estate ceases to exist. Mathey v. Mathey, 109 Mont. 467, 98 P.2d 373, 375.

Decelt. A fraudulent and deceptive misrepresentation, artifact, or device, used by one or more persons to deceive and trick another, who is ignorant of the true facts, to the prejudice and damage of the party imposed upon. To constitute “deceit,” the statement must be untrue, made with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless and conscious ignorance thereof, especially if parties are not on equal terms, made with intent that plaintiff act thereon or in a manner a person is not sufficiently fitted to induce him to act thereon, and plaintiff must act in reliance on the statement in the manner contemplated, or manifestly probable, to his injury. See also Fraud; Misrepresentation; Reliance. For larceny by deceit, see Larceny.

In old English law, the name of an original writ, and the action founded on it, which lay to recover damages for any injury committed deceitfully, either in the name of another (as by bringing an action in another’s name, and then suffering a nonsuit, whereby the plaintiff became liable to costs), or by a fraudulent warranty of goods, or other personal injury committed contrary to good faith and honesty. Also the name of a judicial writ which formerly lay to recover lands which had been lost by default by the tenant in a real action, in consequence of his not having been summoned by the sheriff, or by the collusion of his attorney.

Decem tales /dɛsəm tɛlɪjəz/. Ten such; or ten tales, jurors. In practice, the name of a writ which issued in England, where, on a trial at bar, ten jurors were necessary to make up a full panel, commanding the sheriff to summon the requisite number. 3 Bl.Comm. 364.

Decemviri litibus judicandis /dɛsəmˈvɜːri lətɪbus ʃʌdɪkənˈdiːs/. Lat. In the Roman law, ten persons (five senators and five equites) who acted as the council or assistants of the prætor, when he decided on matters of law.
Decemviri litibus judicandis

Decency. Propriety of action, speech, dress, etc.

Decenna /dæsənə/. In old English law, a tithing or decennary; the precinct of a frank-pledge; consisting of ten freeholders with their families.

Decennarius /dæsənəriəs/. Lat. One who held one-half a virgate of land. One of the ten freeholders in a decennary. Decennier. One of the decennarii, or ten freeholders making up a tithing. 1 Bl.Comm. 114.

Decennary /dæsənəri/. At common law a tithing, composed of ten neighboring families. 1 Bl.Comm. 114.

Deception. The act of deceiving; intentional misleading by falsehood spoken or acted. Synonymous with fraud. Jackman v. Mau, 78 C.A. 234, 177 P.2d 599, 605. Knowingly and willfully making a false statement or representation, express or implied, pertaining to a present or past existing fact. See also Bait and switch; Deciet; Fraud; Misrepresentation.

Deceptione /dæsəpsθiəʊˈnɔː/ An old writ which lay properly against one that deceitfully did anything in the name of another, for one that was damaged thereby. It was either original or judicial.

Deceptis non decipientibus, jura subvenunt /dæsəptəs nɔn dəsiπjɛntəbas, jʊrə səʊvɪnɪŋjɛntə/. The laws help persons who are deceived, not those deceiving.

Deceptive sales practices. As term is used in consumer protection statutes, may import less than common law fraud in sale of goods or services though there must be some measure of deceit. Slaney v. Westwood Auto Inc., 366 Mass. 688, 322 N.E.2d 768, 779. See e.g. Bait and switch.

De certificando /dɪˈsɜːrdəfəkəndəʊ/ A writ requiring a thing to be certified. A kind of certiorari.

De certiorando /dɪˈsɜːrʃ(ɪ)ərəndəʊ/ A writ for certifying. A writ directed to the sheriff, requiring him to certify to a particular fact.

Deceusus /dæsəsəs/. In the civil and old English law, death; departure.

Decet tamen principem servare leges quibus ipse servatus est /dɪˈsɛt ˈtæmən prɪn(ɪ)ˈsæpəm sɜːrvɛrɪ ˈlɪjɪriz kwɪbəs ɪpsɪs sɜːrvɛɹdəz əst/ It behooves, indeed, the prince to keep the laws by which he himself is preserved.

De champertia /dɪˈkæmpərθiə/. Writ of champerty. A writ directed to the justices of the bench, commanding the enforcement of the statute of champertors.

De char et de sank /də ˈkær ˈɛt də ˈsæŋk/. L. Fr. Of flesh and blood. Affaire rechat de char et de sank. Words used in claiming a person to be a villein, in the time of Edward II.

De chimino /dɪˈkɪmənəʊ/ A writ for the enforcement of a right of way.

De cibaris utendis /dɪˈsɛbərɪrɪəs jʉwəntədəs/. Of victuals to be used. The title of a sumptuary statute passed 10 Edw. III, St. 3, to restrain the expense of entertainments.

Decide. To arrive at a determination. To “decide” includes the power and right to deliberate, to weigh the reasons for and against, to see which preponderate, and to be governed by that preponderance. See Decision.

Decies tantum /ˈdɛʃiəliəz ˈtæntəm/. Ten times as much. The name of an ancient writ that was used against a juror who had taken a bribe in money for his verdict. The injured party could thus recover ten times the amount of the bribe.

Declam /dəˈsæmi/. In ecclesiastical law, tenths, or tithes. The tenth part of the annual profit of each living, payable formerly to the pope. There were several valuations made of these livings at different times. The decimæ (tenths) were appropriated to the crown, and a new valuation established, by 26 Hen. VIII, c. 3. 1 Bl.Comm. 284. See Tithes.

Declam debentur parochio /dəˈsæmi debɛntər pərəʊˈkio/. Tithes are due to the parish priest.

Declam de decimatis solvi non debent /dəˈsæmi diə dɛsəmətəs səlvəv nɔn dɛbɛnt/. Tithes are not to be paid from that which is given for tithes.

Declam de jure divino et canonica institutione pertinent ad personam /dəˈsæmi dɪə ˈdʒuəri ˈdæviənəʊ ət kəʊnənˈkænɪkə ɪnstəˈtjuːəθiəɹənɪə ˈpɛrəntənt əd pərsənəm/ Tithes belong to the parson by divine right and canonical institution.

Declam non debent solvi, ubi non est annua renovatio; et ex annuatis renovantibus simul semel /dəˈsæmi nɔn ˈdɛbɛnt səlvəv, ˈjuːwəv nɔn ˈɛst ənˈnjuəri ˈrɛnʊvəntəbəs sjuːməl səməl/. Tithes ought not to be paid where there is not an annual renovation, and from annual renovations once only.

Decimation. The punishing of every tenth soldier by lot, for mutiny or other failure of duty. This was termed “decimatio legionis” by the Romans. Sometimes only the twentieth man was punished (vicesimatio), or the hundredth (centesimatio).
